INTRODUCTION

THE name "Leviticus" is the one given to this section of the Pentateuch in the Septuagint and Vulgate versions. It is an adjective, the word "book" being understood with it. The Levitical book is thus named from its subject—the book of Levitical laws. In the Hebrew it is designated, as it was the Hebrew habit to do, from its opening word,  $\text{וַיִּקְרָא}$ , wayyiqra', "and called," sc. Jehovah. It is probable that originally the book was not set off by itself, but was simply ten out of the fifty-four sections into which the whole of the Mosaic writings was divided—a division which still remains in our Hebrew Bibles. But by the time of St. Jerome even the rabbins had adopted the pentateuchal division, giving to each of the five books the name of its opening section.

In Leviticus is described the inauguration of the full system of sacrificial worship. It is almost entirely made up of legislation. Ordinances and institutions of a ceremonial nature occur also in other parts of the Pentateuch, and the account of these is usually incorporated by the author in a narrative giving the occasion for their rise. This method is followed to some extent in Leviticus, but here the laws predominate very largely over the history. Of pure narrative, indeed, we have but little; the account of the consecration of the priests (chap. 8, 9), of the death of Aaron's sons (chap. 10), in consequence of which not only the immediately following legislation but the rites of the Day of Atonement (chap. 16) seem to have been instituted, and the story of the blasphemer (24 : 10, seq.), to which are attached the laws regarding blasphemy and retaliation, being the entire extent of the strictly narrative portion. So predominantly is the book taken up with regulations regarding worship and ceremonial purification, or with moral precepts which are interesting from a priestly point of view, that, as compared with other books of Scripture, it has an unusual unity, and is fitly called the Levitical book, or book of priestly laws.

The book naturally divides itself into two parts followed by a supplementary chapter. The first part, which consists of the first sixteen chapters, contains the fundamental laws of sacrifice, purification, and atonement. The laws of the five principal types of sacrifice occupy the first five chapters and seven verses of the sixth, which in our Hebrew Bibles are attached to the fifth chapter. Then follows a manual of priestly directions under eight heads, giving certain regulations to be observed by the priests in sacrificing the various offerings and by the people in eating the peace offerings; defining the priest's share in the burnt, meal, and peace offerings, and inserting the ritual of the guilt offering, which was omitted when that offering was introduced and defined in the fifth chapter. Then follows a narrative portion, giving an account of the consecration of the priests and their entry upon office, copied almost exactly, with a change of tense, from the directions for that ceremonial given in Exod. 29. This takes up the eighth and ninth chapters, and is followed in the tenth chapter by the story of the sad fate of Nadab and Abihu, with some regulations and incidents growing out of it. The subject of uncleanness and purification occupies the whole group of chapters eleven to fifteen, the eleventh chapter legislating regarding clean and unclean animals, the twelfth in regard to purification after childbirth, the thirteenth and fourteenth concerning the important subject of leprosy, and the fifteenth in regard to uncleanness from secretions. The sixteenth chapter forms a fitting climax to this first part of the book by giving the ceremonial of the great Day of Atonement, which attaches itself as its historical point of departure to the dreadful judgment upon Nadab and Abihu for their too rash familiarity with the sanctities of the holy place.

The second part, chapters seventeen to twenty-six, consists of legislation which, because it speaks more distinctively from the standpoint of personal and ceremonial purity, has been denominated the law of holiness. It begins in chapter seventeen with general regulations as to killing animals for food and sacrificing. The eighteenth chapter occupies itself with unlawful marriages and lusts, and is followed, after a most edifying chapter (19) of miscellaneous religious and moral precepts, by a code of penalties (chap. 20) attached to the offenses specified in chapter eighteen. In the twenty-first and twenty-second chapters are regulations as to domestic and personal purity touching priests and offerings. The next chapter (23) is a calendar of sacred seasons. A somewhat miscellaneous chapter, the twenty-fourth, containing regulations regarding the lamps in the tabernacle, and the shewbread, and concluding with the incident of the blasphemer, is here inserted. Then follows the important twenty-fifth chapter on the sabbatical year and the year of jubilee; and the whole ends with a hortatory conclusion (chap. 26) containing promises and threatenings, and concluding with a final subscription as if the book were finished.

The supplementary chapter (27) relates to the commutation of vows and dues, and ends with a repetition of the subscription to the laws.

As to the authorship of this civil and ceremonial legislation, undoubtedly the universal Jewish belief, at least in New Testament times, and we do not know how much earlier, was that "the law was given by Moses." Not only was he thought of as the lawgiver, or receiver and oral transmitter of Jehovah's commands, but as the writer of those words in their present form. The entire pentateuchal history and legislation had by the time the first instalment of the Septuagint version was made (264-248 B. C.) been wrought into a single canon or book, which was uncritically accepted as a whole; and from that time forward the conditions existed for the formation and acceptance of a tradition that the great lawgiver who figured so prominently in its pages as the recipient of the divine communications, and who was represented on several occasions as writing down certain specific portions by express command, was the author of the whole collection, including its very considerable anonymous portions.

In various passages of the Hexateuch the act of writing, or the written document, is expressly mentioned; as where Moses is directed to write the history of Amalek's enmity in a book (Exod. 17 : 14); where he writes the words of the covenant (Exod. 24 : 4); where the substance of the covenant is rehearsed, after the second giving of the tables of stone, and directed to be written (Exod. 34 : 27); where Moses by divine command keeps the log or itinerary of the journeyings of the children of Israel (Num. 33 : 2) ; where the law, at least of Deuteronomy, is spoken of as kept in charge of the priests, the Levites, and the king that shall arise in the future is directed to make a copy therefrom for his own use (Deut. 17 : 18) ; where Moses writes the deuteronomic law and delivers it to the priests (Deut. 31 : 9) ; and finally where the commands of the lawgiver are spoken of by Joshua as written in the book of the law of Moses (Josh. 8 : 31 ; 23 : 6). In the book of Judges (3 : 4), and throughout the Old Testament, Moses is referred to as a law-giver ; while in the books of Kings his laws are especially spoken of as written (1 Kings 2 : 3 ; 2 Kings 14 : 6). Whatever date between Sinai and Christ we may assign to the redacted and completed Hexateuch, or to these historical books, this much at least is certain, that the history of Israel, as the biblical authors wrote and understood it, proceeds upon the supposition that Moses wrote considerable portions of the moral and ceremonial law.

And yet the evidence, however it may have been understood or supplemented by tradition in later times, gives us surprisingly little knowledge of the authorship of the law as a whole. "In point of fact," says Professor Robertson, "the books of the Pentateuch, like the historical books which follow them, are anonymous. The book of Genesis gives no hint of its authorship, neither does the book of Leviticus ; and the few passages found in the other books which speak of Moses writing such and such things 'in a book,' will be discovered on examination to refer to certain specific things. Indeed the very fact of such expressions occurring within the books may even be taken as a presumption that it was not he who wrote the whole."

How much of the legislation in its present form is from Moses' hand it is impossible for us to determine. That he started in at the beginning and produced a finished draft of the law as it now stands, few at this day would have the hardihood to maintain. Modern historical criticism seems to find clear indications of different documentary strata from which the various narrations and commands of the Pentateuch were drawn. Of the legislation the most ancient is thought to be that part which Moses in Exodus is said to have written, designated as the Book of the Covenant. The deuteronomic code or homily is figured as reflecting priestly or prophetic reformatory effort during the latter part of the period of the monarchy, say in the reign of Manasseh or Josiah ; while that part of the law dubbed the priest-code, to which the book of Leviticus belongs, is thought to have attained its final shape the latest of all. Of this priest-code Kautzsch says : "Everything appears in the best order and self-evident when we think of the codifications as arising in this order : Deuteronomy, Ezek. 40-48, Law of Holiness, Priests' Code. The latter . . . obtained official validity through Ezra, and afterwards continued to be the standard of ritual and life and of the entire view of history amongst the Jews. In the gradually written expositions of Israel's laws of life it was the last word." As to the correctness of these opinions, it must be said that while a sane scholarship will reject many of the extravagancies which accompany the ingenious reconstructions of Israelitish history concocted in German brains, and will maintain that the patriarchal and wilderness history was not consciously invented by late writers, and that there was a legislative and priestly literary activity long before the prophets, nevertheless the research of recent years has presented at least enough evidence of the composite nature of the Pentateuch so that belief therein is held by scholars who are accounted among the most conservative and devout.

The laws purport at the outset to be a verbatim reproduction of words spoken privately to Moses by Jehovah ; the communication being at first stated to be from the tent of meeting (1 : 1 ; comp. Exod. 33 : 7, 11), afterward from Mount Sinai (25 : 1 ; 26 : 46 ; 27 : 34 ; comp. Exod. 24 : 18 ; 25 : 1). That the author's thought, however, does not consistently keep to the image of this communication as so secluded and detached from its occasion as this would imply is evident, not only from the apparent latitude in respect to the place, but from the repeated introduction of narrative giving the occasion for some law, from the fact that Aaron is often included in the address, and especially from the odd way in which, in at least one instance, the author awakes to the fact that it is the priest whom Jehovah must be taken as addressing (27 : 12). This peculiar literary method of introducing direct speeches as if they were the exact words of Jehovah is due to the fact that the Hebrew language has developed only in the most rudimentary way an indirect form of discourse, and therefore has no convenient method of indicating that a communication is reported only for substance. The conventional literary or juristic form, "The Lord spake unto Moses saying," may thus easily be understood to imply no more exact communication than that the legislation in question was divinely revealed to the lawgiver.

This book of Levitical regulations as we have it no doubt represents usages and ideas that were in process of growth in the priestly circles during all the period of the tabernacle and the first temple. In the time of Jeremiah the promulgation of law seems to have been popularly thought of as a characteristic function of the priesthood (Jer. 18 : 18 ; see also Ezek. 7 : 26). Some of the usages thus chronicled are very ancient, dating no doubt from the first establishment of the tabernacle worship. In regard to some there are the marks of an origin in a later circle of ideas and necessities than would be natural in the wilderness times. Those rules or precepts were handed down as a part of the traditional education of the priesthood, and existed partly as oral directions, partly as more or less extensive written groups or codes of regulations and laws. "While the first temple stood," says Driver, "the traditional knowledge of the priestly class was embodied in practice, and we are not in a position to say how far their rules had been reduced to writing. Probably there was nothing to prevent changes and developments in matters of detail from taking place in the course of time." It is not impossible that Moses, the great founder of the nation, may have given to some of these laws the sanction of his authority. It was not the habit of the priest in precritical times to inquire closely into the authorship of what had come down to him as established and sacred. Custom soon hardened into obligation, and any precept whose lifetime ran back beyond the memory of man would be as a matter of course endowed with the prestige of that great name which had given such a mighty initial impulse to the nation's life. It was therefore the most natural thing in the world for a writer or redactor, in codifying the temple usages which had existed from time immemorial, to introduce each new topic or section with the recognized legal formula, "And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying."

The book of Leviticus may therefore be said to be Mosaic in that it is the literary precipitate of Moses' work and of its continuation through the priestly activity which took its rise from the Mosaic tabernacle system and fulfilled itself in the nation's religious life.

The saner and more conservative of those modern critics who maintain the late date of the priestly legislation are careful to specify that this assertion applies only to its putting into final shape or codification. Thus Driver says: "The date of the redaction of the laws in Leviticus must be carefully distinguished from the dates of the laws themselves. . . Different hands have co-operated in codifying the usage and elaborating the theory of these sacrifices." "The various compilers or redactors did little more than reduce to a permanent form the legal and ceremonial tradition which had long been current in priestly circles. A special motive for preserving and codifying these traditions would be given by the destruction of the temple (586 B. c.) and the exile of the people. One of these writers, the compiler of the 'Law of Holiness,' cannot be separated very widely in time from Ezekiel, whether he wrote before or after that prophet (595-572 B. c.). On the other hand, the account of the promulgation of Ezra's law in 444 B. c. determines the date by which Leviticus had received almost its present form."

Of the five principal types of sacrifice whose ritual is instituted in Leviticus the first, or burnt offering, expressed self-dedication to Jehovah, with the mental result for the offerer of a sense of acceptance or atonement as the gift went up to God in the smoke of the altar. The meal offering was a voluntary gift to God analogous to what was used in ordinary life to produce an amicable understanding between parties. The peace offering was an expression of communion and reconciliation and was essentially a feast with Jehovah. The idea of expiation and restitution comes prominently forward in the sin offering and the guilt offering, which appear to be the characteristic creation of the law and of the state of covenant obligation which its promulgation implied. These offerings, at least the first three of them, are not to be thought of as projected on the nation by the book of Leviticus as a new thing nor the predominant task of the legislation as that of creating or fostering the habit of worshiping by sacrifice. Burnt offerings and gifts and peace offerings had been the spontaneous expressions of religious feeling from the earliest times. In all the ritual of these offerings, therefore, as it appears in Leviticus, the disposition of the offerer to bring his gift is taken for granted, nothing being prescribed as to the frequency or even as to the obligation of this species of worship. But a practice so spontaneous and luxuriant needed to be pruned and regulated, not only that it might be kept more orderly in its procedure but that the priests, by assuming control of it, might guard it from that tendency to alliance with the nature worships of the heathen, which was the characteristic temptation during the whole early religious history of Israel.

It is possible that the motive for codifying and publishing these Levitical regulations—a motive which must have been something more urgent than the mere desire to prevent an ancient cultus from sinking into forgetfulness through disuse when the temple was destroyed—was the purpose to resist and neutralize those temptations to idolatry after their power and working had been felt in the destruction of the nation. The priest code would thus serve its purpose as the backbone of the post-exilic reformation. Full of the impressions which come to one on looking at the ceremonial legislation from this point of view, Schultz says: "The sacrificial laws of the middle books of the Pentateuch seem like an earnestly intended restoration of old sacred forms which the religious life of Israel had in reality outgrown, like an attempt to express the antique faith, which had sprung from the soil of materialistic and mystic religion, in the mold of ethico-spiritual piety. These laws were full of significance as a preventive against Israel's sinking into the cult and magic of the highly developed paganism of that period." However this may be, whether the legislation owes its present written existence to the purpose of re-establishing and re-enforcing old religious forms with a published legislative substance and sanction or to the necessity of pruning a redundant religious life in its earlier vital period by bringing it under the educated control of the priests, at all events the lurking temptation to idolatry was an objective point, and the intended result was to resist that temptation among the laity by the superior attraction of a more exalted worship.

The first step toward securing this object and the one which was represented as naturally following upon the rearing of the tabernacle and the setting-up of an altar, was to provide a daily burnt offering with its attendant meal and drink offerings at the public expense (see Exod. 29 : 38-44). By this regular opportunity for worship presenting itself every morning and evening the ordinary impulse of the congregation to draw near to God by sacrificing might satisfy itself and the religious feeling which needed to be regulated might find vent in an orderly public service. This ordinance of daily burnt sacrifice is not directly laid down in Leviticus, but is implied as the constant term in the directions for worship given in that book. The fire on the altar was never to go out (Lev. 6 : 12). On its embers which were "upon the wood that is on the fire" the flesh of the voluntary sacrifices described in Leviticus was to be consumed (Lev. 3 : 5 ; 4 : 35 ; 6 : 9, 12). Thus the burnt offering, which was the characteristic expression of the worshiper in his moments of greater elation, would tend to pass over entirely from a private sacrifice to a great public function in which all the people might share.

The seductive idolatrous tendencies of the peace offering were not so easily resisted. This was a function which came nearer to the common life of the people, being indeed in all probability the primitive spontaneous form of religious expression. It differed but little from an ordinary secular feast. Indeed, the slaughtering of domestic animals for food was and is to this day among the Arabs an act of religion. But the religious feeling which it carried was so little removed from the rejoicing of secular life that under an imperfect sense of the holiness of Jehovah it might easily degenerate into a fellowship with the unhallowed rejoicings of the pagan nature cults. The priestly legislation accordingly prescribed carefully the priest's share in all the peace offerings and forbade the secular use of the internal suet, while the law of holiness required all domestic animals that were slaughtered to be brought to the central sanctuary as an oblation to Jehovah. The irregular satyr worship of the woods, with their inevitable tendencies to impurity, were sternly prohibited. Thus the legislation undertook to regulate the luxuriant spontaneity of the people's worship by bringing it under the visible accountability of priestly rules.

But the great achievement of the priestly legislation was the doctrine of expiation. This may be taken as the creation of the Mosaic law. While the lawgiver in Leviticus treats the first three types of sacrifice as voluntary offerings, the impulse to which he finds already existing, he approaches the sin offering from another point of view. He specifies cases where the sin offering is required and, graduating the prescribed oblation according to the ability or theocratic rank of the sinner, whether it be anointed priest, the whole congregation, ruler, or private person, indicates the conditions on which atonement may be made for them by the priest. Only sins of error or ignorance are thus provided for, while the intentional or high-handed sinner may hope only for the sentence of being cut off from the congregation.

It is to be noted that in all the accounts of sacrifice in the patriarchal age, and also in the early history of the tribes in the promised land, it is always the burnt offering and the peace offering that are mentioned, and not the sin offering. In the Book of the Covenant too, which is accounted the earliest extant legislation of the Pentateuch, there is no recognition of this species of sacrifice (see Exod. 20 : 24), nor is it mentioned in Deuteronomy. The burnt offerings and peace offerings do not emphasize the element of expiation properly speaking. It is true, there is an element of atonement, an "odor of pleasantness," in the burnt offering, but it is that atonement which consists in acquiring the sense of having pleased God, rather than that which arises from the sense of guilt done away. The picturesque Scripture language presents a reflex of the offerer's emotions in the formula, "The Lord smelled a sweet savor." It can hardly be held, therefore, that all sacrifice had its origin in man's sense of alienation from God and his desire to avert divine wrath. The sense of guilt demanding expiation appears to be among the later developed religious impulses, rather than the primal feeling from which the practice of offering sacrifices arose.

"By the law," says Paul, "is the knowledge of sin." As religion passed from domestic life into the domain of law, and from being a spontaneous impulse became an organized system of duty under the control of the priests, the principle of expiation began to enter into the sacrifices, so that finally the sin offering, though the last developed, becomes logically the first, or the preparation for the other offerings. "The religious life of the community, as centering in the national sanctuary, had by means of these laws a definite and completed regulation which was honored and cherished as God's holy commandment. The intercourse of Israel with God in sacrifice gave to the nation the consciousness of a continual and ever-renewed communion of grace. Therefore the nation's most serious endeavor was by sin offering and purification immediately to make good every ritual error that might interrupt or render inefficient this intercourse and hinder the holy God in his communion with Israel (Lev. 15 : 31 ; Num. 19 : 17-20)" (SCHULTZ). This extreme solicitude regarding the ritual fitness of the worshiper for communion with God wrought to raise expiation to a predominant importance in the sacrificial system, and issued not only in specific sin offerings but in what Oehler calls an "ordinance of atonement, which is principally carried out in acts of worship specifically expiatory, but which also runs through the whole of the rest of the worship ; in all parts of which, but especially by the use which is from this time forward made of the blood of the sacrifice at the burnt and thank offerings, the idea is expressed that man may never approach God without previous atonement, that this must be accomplished before he can expect that his gift will be favorably received by God."

With this watchful holding to account of the Israelite's unwitting sins, and especially with its carefully elaborated restrictions as to uncleanness from foods, from contacts, and even from secretions that are accidental or in the course of nature, the whole tendency of Leviticus was to cultivate an apprehensive sense of sin and of the need of expiation. It is this which is expressed and developed by the priest-legislation. Through the sin offering and the regulations regarding ceremonial impurity there was a gradual leading of the whole idea of sacrifice into the region of expiation and purification. This constant requirement of expiation for even unintentional sins, this watchfulness against uncleanness and ritual unfitness which culminated even in an annual purging of the holy place with its sacred furniture, and the solemn sending away of the people's collective sin into forgetfulness, had the effect of elevating the idea of expiation to a supreme significance in the theory of sacrifice, so that this idea, with its accompanying assertion of the universal human need of atonement, becomes the basis of the Christian doctrine of salvation.

This notion of sin as an expiable entity was from the nature of the case more physical than ethical; and yet we should hesitate to call it on this account more primitive or less worthy of an advanced intelligence than the strictly ethical idea of transgression. It was another kind of idea, necessary perhaps to any radical treatment of sin as an accountable thing remaining as a stain on the soul even after the person had desisted from the specific act of wrong-doing. After the nation under the teaching of the prophets had attained the ethical insight to perceive that the blood of bulls and goats cannot take away sin, there nevertheless clung to the religious consciousness, as a heritage of this priest-legislation, the idea of sin as a thing, an objective entity to be abhorred and put away; and this idea, refined and elevated through the spirit of Christianity, has been of great and permanent value in the religious history of mankind.

In estimating the influence of the book of Leviticus on the history of the people of Israel it is not wholly practicable to separate it from the entire priestly legislation of which it formed a part. "The peculiar arrangement of the legal portions, nay, their very divergence from one another, proves that law was for long a living thing, and that the codes are not resuscitated from the memories of priests or excogitated by scribes" (ROBERTSON). But it is to be remembered that while the priestly code was in a state of growth it existed mainly as a terse and technical manual of ceremonial for the use of the priests, rather than as a book of exhortation and guidance for the people. We should therefore not look so much for marked popular effect from the legislation until after the redaction and publication of the code as a part of a canon, or instrument of edification. But that the priests had a prescribed order from the earliest times, that the tabernacle at Shiloh became the center of worship only by virtue of its meeting the wants of the people with some recognized ritual, that its worship, and the ceremonial from its time forward, was invested with authority, seems to be clearly shown from the undisputed history of the period. It is true that some of the apparently unreprieved practices of saintly men, particularly in regard to worship in high places, are out of harmony with the fully developed priestly legislation which restricted legitimate sacrifice to the central sanctuary. It is true that the status of the priests and their relation to the Levites does not seem to have been settled in the early monarchical and deuteronomic period in strict consistency with the definition which it finally attained in the priest-code. It is true that the Sabbatic and jubilee year legislation, if it existed before the exile, existed only to be disregarded by the people. We must also not forget our task of accounting for the puzzling fact that Ezekiel carefully lays a new foundation in the latter part of his prophecy for a projected temple structure and ceremonial, just as if there were no completed building which had occupied the ground from the days of Moses. Nevertheless that the germs of the priest-code existed and were a living influence in those circles to which its legislation applied, in times long anterior to the prophets, though subject to growth and modification as the religious problems of the nation advanced in complexity, is a fact which must be evident from a careful and unprejudiced study of the history.

The permanent impress of the book of Leviticus has naturally been the most marked in those portions of the legislation which concern personal and family life, and in regard to which assent could readily harden into ineradicable prejudice. Such are the regulations in respect to clean and unclean animals and to eating blood or animals that die a natural death, many of the precepts fostering a horror of ceremonial impurity, and the legislation regarding marriage within forbidden degrees of kinship. Many of these regulations are probably not original with the book of Leviticus, but reflect usages and scruples that come down from very early times. The habits and abhorrences commanded and fostered by the Mosaic legislation in regard to clean and unclean meats still distinguish the Jews from other nations almost as broadly as their Sabbath; and to those habits, considered in their sanitary aspect, is often attributed the remarkable vitality of the Jewish race. The dread of defilement fostered by the regulations regarding personal ceremonial purity came to associate itself and play in with the Jewish national and religious intolerance, so that by the time of Christ a Jew regarded himself as rendered unclean by merely entering a Gentile's house (Luke 7 : 6 ; John 18 : 28 ; Acts 10 : 29). From this feeling also, which in a proudly separate nation refined itself to a prejudice, among other details, against eating with "common" hands, were no doubt evolved, through rabbinic ingenuity, the laborious usages with respect to bathing and washing referred to in the Gospels (Mark 7 : 1-6). As to the Levitical defining of degrees within which marriage is prohibited, this part of the legislation has not only remained valid for Jewish people, but it has so acquired the force of moral law as to be accepted as binding to a very considerable degree on the Gentile Christian conscience. In general it may be said that in proportion as the laws have been felt to be of universal human application and interest they have been accepted by all Christendom, not simply as positive Mosaic precepts but as expressions of the ideal humanity—the kingdom of God; and some of the legislation of the law of holiness, notably in the nineteenth chapter, reaches a very high moral plane, so that indeed one of its precepts (19 : 18) is characterized by Christ and accepted by the church as a part of that fundamental revelation on which hang all the law and the prophets.

The ordinance of the Sabbatic year and the year of jubilee, seeking as it did to establish a custom which could maintain its existence only as a general and public observance, seems to have failed to get itself enforced before the exile, if, indeed, it became a part of the recognized law before that time. Like the legislation of idealists in general, it appears to have been beautiful as a scheme, but impracticable as a civil and public observance, because striking a keynote of unworldliness too high for the public convenience or average devotion to follow. The Sabbath year was entirely neglected by the nation during the whole period of the monarchy, and the captivity itself was accounted for by the idealists as the divine punishment for that neglect. It seems to have come into force as an observance only in the smaller priest-governed colony of the return, after the doctrinaires had got the upper hand. The year of the jubilee appears to have existed as a matter of reckoning without ever being in any adequate way kept in practical life.

The priestly regulations and theories as to sacrificial worship and ceremonial established themselves gradually in the citadel of the national conscience, and no doubt attained to greatly augmented binding force after the exile when the Jews in a measure came to despair of fulfilling their divine destiny as a nation and centered their enthusiasm in the Jewish church. Under the régime of the second temple the ceremonial law and the priesthood became for the Jews who returned to Palestine the principal instrumentality for unifying the nation, and zeal for the purity of the temple and ritual again and again incited an angry people to bloody outbreaks, or nerved to acts of devotion and suffering worthy the name of martyrdom. Even for those of the dispersion the great annual pilgrimage feasts were a force that operated to turn their thoughts and often their footsteps to their native land, and to keep aglow in their hearts a passionate love for Zion.

But, however the temple and its ritual may have served as a rallying point for patriotism—a focus at which the idea of Jehovah as the God of Israel was converged and intensified to the burning point—as an expression of the religious life of the people, the daily act of offering victims on the altar had probably ceased to be a primary and real act of worship even before the codification of the priestly regulations was complete. Sacrifice had become a secondary and symbolical act, no longer expressing directly the naïve feelings of the worshiper, but enacting them as it were in a conventional and dramatized form. The intelligent worshiper, enlightened by the prophetic teaching, soon outgrew the thought that he was making a sweet savor for the nostrils of Jehovah, or bestowing on him an acceptable gift; but the smoke of the sacrifice became a symbol of prayer, that act which, as the lifting up of the soul to God, could alone carry with it the whole intimate outbreathing of the spirit. While prayer is scarcely mentioned in the priestly legislation the whole ritual which it prescribes is nevertheless but enacted adoration and supplication, so that the temple to prophetic conception was to fulfill its intention by becoming a house of prayer for all peoples (Isa. 56 : 7), and this description of it was accepted by our Lord as the most characteristic and inclusive one (Matt. 21 : 13 ; Mark 11 : 17 ; Luke 19 : 46). With the growth of the ethical and spiritual mind and needs the symbolical ritual was, for the private and inner life, replaced or fulfilled by the λογικὴ λατρεία, or service of the Word or Spirit, which demanded the whole earthly activity as a living sacrifice (Rom. 12 : 1), and thus the visible form was preparing itself to be done away, when the nation became finally scattered, without the destruction of all religion with it. Had it not been for the rejection of Christ, that momentous abortion of the Jewish religious evolution, perhaps the palingenesia of the nation might have been effected by a transfiguration in which the whole striving of the Mosaic and prophetic economies should be fulfilled and satisfied in the consummate life of Christ. But, on the contrary, it was ordained in the counsels of eternity that this should be only by a world-saving death, and accordingly, when Moses and Elias appeared with Jesus on the mountain, it was that they might talk with him of his decease which he should accomplish at Jerusalem (Luke 9 : 31). By that death and rising again the whole world of believers is put in the way of attaining, through faith in Christ, a sonship to God, which is all that the deepest and truest Judaism strove for, raised to newness of life ; but the priestly Judaism which knew not the day of its visitation, but rejected the Anointed One who was its representative and end, still, as the great world example of arrested development in religion, awaits its resurrection to the life of the spirit.

When the city of Jerusalem and the temple finally fell, then perforce the daily oblation ceased, and its stately ceremonial, going out with the nation, ceased to have a place in Jewish worship altogether. Yet the sacrificial system, which had already been pronounced by the Christian church old and nigh unto vanishing away, so far from falling to the ground and dying, rather attained its euthanasia, as it were, by paling like the stars in the light of the rising sun. The blood of bulls and goats had, even from Old Testament prophetic times, been felt to be valid for the taking away of sin only as a type or foreshadowing of some reality as yet unfulfilled, and when the Lord Jesus died and rose from the dead, Christian thought began to recognize in him the actual and heavenly redeeming power to which all these types and symbols pointed forward. By a remarkable transformation the ordinances of the worldly sanctuary became sublimed in Christian thought into the doctrine of the greater or more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, through which Christ has come a high priest of the good things to come. According to the inspired speculations of the writer to the Hebrews the whole ceremonial law finds its fulfillment in the transcendent priesthood of Jesus Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without blemish unto God once for all, and opened the way for every believer into the holy place through the veil, that is to say, his flesh. Thus, through the vivifying power of Christian faith the Levitical priesthood and ceremonial as a system of types and shadows becomes fulfilled in Christ the eternal reality, and so attains to a transfigured existence or resurrection life in the salvation of the world.

So the book of Leviticus becomes a permanent factor in the spiritual life of humanity in different ways, according to the nature of its various enactments, very much as the growth from the tree seed fulfills its destiny in divers manners in the life of nature and the uses of man. Some of it passes into unreasoned scruple and prejudice useful for maintaining the hardy integrity of personal and social habits, just as the tree growth hardens into woody fibre, which is durable and strong for the building's frame or vessel's ribs and keel. Some of it, as the Sabbatic year, attains little or no fruitful or reproductive life in man's obedience, but rather enriches his spiritual life from its own bed of death as a condemning reminder of his sin and failure, just as the leafage of the tree puts forth a beautiful growth, only to fall in the autumn and enrich the soil through its own decay for the growth of other seeds. Some of it, on the other hand, like the fully ripened fruit which attains its intended destiny by becoming the seed of a new growth, passes into its larger life only by falling into the ground and dying as the shriveled seed of type and symbol, that it may rise to eternal life as the joyous new growth of fulfillment and actual salvation in Jesus Christ, the eternal high priest and atoning victim. And this last form of development, this career of death and resurrection, is that which alone really fulfills the creative idea of tree or of book, of all literature, indeed, and even of the divine Word made flesh.

The interest of the book of Leviticus for modern readers is chiefly historical. As a specimen of ancient ceremonial jurisprudence, it supplies the student with data for the study of Israelitish institutions, yielding precise results for the understanding of the development of the Jewish genius just in proportion to the precision with which criticism succeeds in determining its chronological place in the history. As the record of a stadium in God's revelation to the world of his plan of salvation, it has always been of interest to those whose reading of the Bible is principally devotional, and whose piety feeds itself on admiration of God's wonderful counsels, and these humble worshipers, already suffused and elated with the adoring joy of Christ's salvation, have found the old system of types and shadows wonderfully full of suggestion and edification on every page as they have read Christ in the Old Testament. It is as if the Saviour himself had taken them, and beginning at Moses and all the prophets had interpreted to them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself. Yet even here the interest has been historical, for who that had the fully risen light would turn back to the faint foregleaming to study it by, except in a historian's spirit? Some of the glowing speculations and type-findings of these zealous expositors may here and there run to extremes, which to the unsympathetic are forced and fanciful, just as the Spirit-filled disciples at Pentecost seemed to some to be filled with new wine; but all these methods of treating the divine word are simply the way in each case in which some order of mind derives and transmits edification from God's revelation of himself, and they kindle faith and devotion according as they find their audience.

If we approach the book with such candid attention as it deserves, with perseverance sufficient to discover the interest which lurks beneath its rather forbidding technical exterior, and with such powers of spiritual interpretation as belong to our order of mind, we shall find that it is not without its living worth and message even for this late day of the world's unfolding.

LEVITICUS

PART FIRST. FUNDAMENTAL LAWS OF SACRIFICE, PURIFICATION, AND ATONEMENT, CHAPTERS 1 TO 16.

This collection of working formulas for worship (δικαιώματα λατρείας, Heb. 9 : 1), has been called the ceremonial law, but it does not exactly answer in a theological sense to Paul's idea of law as he draws it out in its distinction from grace. The law was the expression of God's requirement, or standard of duty, and brought men into the presence of the God of judgment, while these forms of worship and atonement are a device for approaching the God of grace. The law forbade sin and brought it home to the conscience; the ceremonial eased the conscience of its sense of sin by inducing a sense of pardon. The law, as Paul figures it in the Epistles to the Galatians and to the Romans, is calculated to drive men to Christ through the condemnation which it produces but cannot allay; while the priest legislation leads to Christ by foreshadowing him, or serving as a type of his dispensation. Law proper fosters subjection and obligation; ceremonial makes for reconciliation and communion with God—it is in its way a kind of gospel or good news for the soul.

This ritual may be taken as a formalizing of the instinct to seek and enjoy communion with God. And we may well believe that the feeling of God's grace or friendship was a much larger element in the religion of ancient Israel than the mere legal, factitious feeling of merit as a result of perfection of conduct. Indeed, Paul himself, though giving a large place in his argument to law in its stricter sense as the foil to his doctrine of free grace, nevertheless indicates that the religious life of the Old Testament time was primarily and essentially the large, rich growth of the promise to Abraham, while the law only entered in at the side (παρεισθήθην, Rom. 5 : 20) in order that "the offense might abound," and so the precise worth and application of divine grace to the individual might be apparent. That larger life of grace found a formal or ritual expression in the burnt and meal and peace offerings, or a ritual restoration when impaired in the the atoning devices of the sin and guilt offerings.

This very externalizing, however, of the instinct for communion with God brought the act of worship down to a tangible form in which it could be grasped and debased by the legal spirit. Worship, whether in the form of sacrifice or in the more spiritual form of prayer, is in its nature a spontaneous reaching out toward God and can no more claim merit for itself than can the act of holding out the hand for alms. Yet when the form of worship is prescribed it forgets its essential spontaneity and becomes a work; the legal spirit is very prompt to debase it and cause the worshiper to engage in it as a meritorious performance or an act of preeminent virtue. Thus participated in, it becomes by a sort of reversion, a part of the law by which the mechanical religionist hopes to win the favor of God. But this aspect of the ceremonial system as mere law does not belong to its original intention; the prescriptions for orderly worship are rather the guide-posts and encouragements in the way of grace.

As moral law and the ritual of worship differ in their nature, so there is a difference in the way in which they are respectively done away in Christ, according to the exposition of Paul and of the writer to the Hebrews. According to Paul the law was added to intensify transgression (Gal. 3 : 19) by making prohibition definite, or giving the knowledge of sin (Rom. 3 : 20); and thus the necessity for the provisions of grace through Christ was brought out, such grace being man's only hope of salvation. Thus the law becomes a pedagogue to lead to Christ (Gal. 3 : 24), and the glory of his gospel is that he makes men free from the curse of the law. Law thus drives the sinner to the gospel by its very contrast.

On the other hand the ritual devices for atonement are never represented as intensifying condemnation, but rather as producing an imperfect and temporary alleviation of guilt (Heb. 10: 1, seq.). They are done away in Christ as the stars pale before the sun; they have effected typically, or as a makeshift, what Christ effects perfectly; and as types and shadows they are rejected in the presence of the substance or reality on account of their weakness and unprofitableness (Heb. 7: 18). They thus lead to the gospel by their inadequacy as devices for the same expiatory purpose.

We call the atonement which was wrought through the blood of bulls and goats a type of the atonement wrought by Christ. In drawing out and insisting on the resemblances, however, between the type and the fulfillment, theologians have perhaps fallen into an error in supposing that the older sacrifice foreshadows Christ by its form rather than by its effect on men. The typical sacrifice has been thought of as a sort of ritual enacting, by means of animal victims and purely for its predictive value, of what God was going to do for mankind in the future by means of a divine-human victim. As a result the type has insisted on dominating and narrowing our understanding of the fulfillment. Artificial and conventional as the removing of sin through the blood of slain victims necessarily is, the crude artificiality of the type has clung to the antitype, and dogma has been inclined to deny the benefits of the work of Christ to all except those who can receive him as a slain victim saving them by the sprinkling of his literal blood.

But should we not rather say that the animal sacrifice typified Christ by its effect rather than by its form? The principal use which the type subserved lay in its effect on the people of its own day. Consider what the people of the earlier time need to have done for them in advance of the coming of Christ. Do they need a ritual object-lesson to serve as a chart of the doctrinal meaning of some history to be enacted in the distant future? Do they not rather need something to put them into a state of grace, or into the way of salvation, now? Generation after generation will come upon the earth and die before the Redeemer will appear in the flesh: is there to be no possibility of salvation for the world meanwhile? If mere moral law is what Paul says it is, men can derive from it only condemnation, for by the deeds of the law shall no flesh be justified. Is there no way by which men trembling under an awakened sense of sin may persuade themselves that God will forgive? Is there no way to foster the sense of reconciliation and communion with God, as distinguished from the sense of shortcoming and guilt? If in all ages of the world salvation means peace with God or access to his grace, then there needed to be something, even before Christ came, which aimed at peace and reconciliation, and so gave the possibility of a life of spontaneous devotion.

These expiatory contrivances were, for those who needed them, such a means of approach to God. God has always been a God of grace as well as a God of law. Those who have found and lived in that grace have been justified or saved. The great difficulty has been to enable men who were awakened to the holiness of God to conceive of that grace as possible. Something that could stand for an appeasing of anger by means of a victim, or for a producing of satisfaction by means of a gift, has been to the mind a help in getting over the difficulties which its training or its perversity have placed in the way of free divine favor. If God must have a victim the ritual provides it, as the sinner feels, in a divinely ordained way. So when the priest sprinkled the blood and pronounced the atoning words there stole over the soul, temporarily at least, a sense of reconciliation and favor which was a real drawing near to the goodness of God. In its clumsy and shadowing way the ritual ministered the grace of God which bringeth salvation.

Thus in its effect on the worshiper the slain victim was a type of Christ. The ritual was a ministration of grace. It served as a device for making men feel that they were no longer enemies of God. The type was given because it was needed for a real purpose, namely, present reconciliation. The manner in which the type produced this effect on its own age may not have been essential to the correspondence of the antitype. It is sufficient that it foreshadowed Christ by doing imperfectly what he did perfectly and once for all. The ritual expiation foreshadowed the spiritual reconciliation in Christ by its effect rather than by its form.

If, then, God gave a ritual in order to produce an effect for the time being, may we not say that the spiritual or eternal reality corresponding to that effect is all that is essential to Christ's fulfillment of the ceremonial law? It is true, the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews teaches that Christ is for mankind what both priest and victim were to the Israelites—that he offered himself once for all to God, and that his blood cleaves the conscience from dead works to serve the living God. But does this mean that every one must understand Christ as a literal victim slain to appease or propitiate God, or only that those who have been brought up to feel such a victim necessary will find all their demands met in Christ—that for those who must think of God's salvation in terms of victims and blood-sprinklings and washings there is the most abundant correspondence in Christ's death to every essential feature of the ritual? In other words, this author's explanation of Christ's atonement by the Levitical ritual means that for the believer who needs it Christ may coincide with and satisfy all these forms of expiation, but not necessarily that he must present himself in these Levitical forms to every type of mind in order that his work may have its saving effect. As a matter of fact many minds experience the spiritual effect of the Saviour's work, that is, are brought into loving and trustful and fruitful communion with the God of grace, to whom the thought of a God who cannot save without first being appeased with blood is an utterly repugnant one. No man fully understands the method of the Saviour's atonement, but if that ineffable life and character and death, however apprehended, produces in the believer a loving and aspiring walk with God, all that is essential to the type is fulfilled in the antitype; the Levitical ceremonial as an expedient for access to the grace of God has found its fulfillment in the spiritual fellowship of the believer with God and with his Son Jesus Christ.

I. LAW OF THE FIVE PRINCIPAL TYPES OF SACRIFICE, 1 : 1 to 6 : 7.

Chap. I. 1. And the Lord called unto Moses. It is a part of the universal and eternal religious instinct to observe forms. The impulse to order and propriety is an essential element in religion. In this sense the eternal God speaks eternally through ceremonial. The particular form of ritual may change with the circumstances or needs or capabilities of the people. The whole system, as in this case, may pass out of use, but the spirit of ceremonial, as we may call it, is eternal and belongs to all religion. As a recent author has said (Prof. Edward Slosson, in the "Independent" for March 8, 1900): "In reality the foundation of ritualism is not historical or theological but psychological. Any long-established religion develops unconsciously those particular rites that are best fitted for exciting religious emotion." The same writer goes on to remark: "One of the main objects of ecclesiastical forms is the development of a religious life by isolating it from common life. The set days and hours with which no other duty must interfere, the sanctified place or building where nothing profane is allowed to enter, the ecclesiastical architecture and furnishings, the archaic pronunciations and peculiar intonations, the vestments and music, the postures and movements, all these are associated with religious emotions and experiences and with nothing else, so that they have the power of reviving and instigating devotional feelings. If all one's religious training and experiences from childhood have been connected with certain sights and sounds these will have an influence over the emotional nature that is astonishing to one who has been otherwise trained. . . Rites arbitrary in origin become the language of the soul, so that if the power of these is lost it sometimes happens that all faith is lost too." If the observance of ceremonial becomes inimical to spiritual religion it is because it is insincere or imitative or no longer expresses the feeling of the worshiper, not because it is a form. Some form even the most spiritual will inevitably observe in approaching God; some feeling that the merely natural or free and easy is not seemly in the divine presence will pervade even the most fervent and quietistic. Though it be no more than the adoption of the solemn style of speech or the uncovering of the head there will be some minimum of form which the mind will never outgrow. And this form, whatever its historical origin, will have for the mind the force of prescription; the habitual will become sacred, so that that which is incongruous will cause pain or laughter and innovation will produce a shock. In this sense, namely, as adapted to the permanent instincts of men, ceremonial religion is eternal. The Jehovah who spoke to Moses, bidding him make men's sacrifices orderly, speaks as the eternal God to the deepest instincts of mankind through form and the striving after a higher or exclusively religious order and propriety. As a generalized or eternal truth this assertion that God spake thus teaches that the ritual feeling is of divine origin.

The tabernacle of the congregation. In the Revised version this phrase is uniformly rendered tent of meeting, meaning not the place of assembly for the congregation but the place where the Lord was to be met. The literal rendering of the phrase is, tent of appointment. It referred to the tabernacle as a whole, as God's

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, If any man of you bring an offering unto the Lord, ye shall bring your offering of the cattle, even of the herd, and of the flock.

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When any man of you offereth an oblation unto the Lord, ye shall offer your oblation of the cattle, even of the herd and of the flock.

appointed place for manifesting himself—Jehovah's headquarters, as it were. It was here that Jehovah promised to meet and commune with Moses (Exod. 25 : 22), and this revelation to Moses in Leviticus appears to be the fulfillment of that promise. Over this tent the cloud rested (Exod. 40 : 34), and within it was the mysterious glory which symbolized the presence of Jehovah (ibid., 35). As the law of the Ten Commandments was given from Mount Sinai (Exod. 19), so these priestly laws purport to have been given from the cloud after it had been transferred to its resting-place in the camp above the tent of meeting.

These laws are stated to have been given in Mount Sinai, i. e., perhaps the wilderness of Sinai (see 7 : 38 ; 26 : 46 ; 27 : 34). If they were given from the completed tabernacle it must have been some time between the first day of the first month (Exod. 40 : 2) of the second year of the exodus and the twentieth day of the second month (Num. 10 : 11) when the tabernacle and the congregation left the wilderness of Sinai for the desert of Paran.

2. If any man of you bring. It is to be noticed that the custom of sacrifice is treated as an old and familiar thing. The function of the lawgiver is regulative rather than creative; it is to prescribe an orderly method for what people are in the habit of doing instead of to command their practice de novo. Sacrifice had been common from the earliest times; it was a spontaneous form of religious expression. The effect of the book of Leviticus was to curb its extravagances, to bring its rules into such shape as to give the least encouragement to idolatry; in short, to place it under regulation by means of a ritual. An offering. This word, in Hebrew, קָרְבָּן, Qārbān, is so characteristic of Leviticus and Numbers that it may be taken as a sort of note of the class of conceptions with which these books predominantly deal. The word, outside of these two books, occurs only twice in Ezekiel (20 : 28 ; 40 : 43), and twice in a little different form in Nehemiah (10 : 34 ; 13 : 31), in the latter book referring to the wood offering for the temple sacrifices. It means a gift and is so translated by the LXX, but it is a sacred gift, a gift that is brought near to God. The books of Leviticus and Numbers contain regulations for that department of human effort which seeks to give something directly to God, to send some token of good-will visibly to heaven. Material things can only in a conventional or constructive way be sent to God, and the method hit upon from the earliest times was to send the smoke or odor of the sacred object into the air. If the whole object was not thus sent to God, the memorial, or representative portion, at least, was burnt, and the remainder was set apart for the use of the priest. Objects thus set apart as well as the acts connected with the offering came to possess in the minds of the people a peculiar quality, the quality of being sacred, or separated from, and elevated above, the ordinary things of life. Hence arose that rigid distinction between the sacred and the secular, or the holy and the common, a distinction which it was the cherished purpose of the priestly legislation to emphasize (see 10 : 10 ; Ezek. 22 : 26 ; 42 : 20 ; 44 : 23). The act of sending things by their smoke or savor directly to God eventually became simply symbolical of the act of prayer, and as religion grew more spiritual the idea that the gift offering had any value in the sight of God ceased to commend itself to the prophetic mind (Ps. 51 : 16 ; 69 : 31 ; Isa. 1 : 11-13). It was as a house of prayer that the temple was appraised by the prophets (Isa. 56 : 7). But as prayer takes the place of its symbol in public worship, the idea of giving a pleasing gift for God's enjoyment passes away. It is the drawing near of the whole person, the linking of human helplessness to divine might, of human frailty to divine mercy, that takes the place of the smug satisfaction of contributing to God's enjoyment, and that externalizing of prayer which arose from the thought of the act as meritorious or pleasing in itself was stigmatized by our Lord as hypocritical (Matt. 6 : 5) and even heathenish (ibid., 7). On the same Pharisaic theory of the preeminent meritoriousness of public worship, the act of setting apart property for sacred uses, or making it Corban, came in process of time to be placed above plain moral duties, and was denounced by Christ (Mark 7 : 11). The teachings of our Lord, indeed, and of the apostles, tended to replace the idea of giving directly to God by a better and more rational one (Matt. 25 : 40), and to reveal to spiritual apprehension the principle that the distinction between the clean and the unclean, the holy and the common, is not a final or eternal truth (John 4 : 21-24 ; Rom. 14 : 14 ; 1 Tim. 4 : 4).

3 If his offering be a burnt sacrifice of the herd, let him offer a male without blemish: he shall offer it of his own voluntary will at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation before the Lord.

4 And he shall put his hand upon the head of the burnt offering; and it shall be accepted for him to make atonement for him.

5 And he shall kill the bullock before the Lord: and the priests, Aaron's sons, shall bring the blood, and sprinkle the blood round about upon the altar that is by the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

6 And he shall flay the burnt offering, and cut it into his pieces.

The peculiar form of the beginning of this clause in the Hebrew—"a man if," cf. "a soul if," 4 : 2, "a man or woman if," 13 : 29—is pointed out by modern critics as one of the characteristic marks of style in the Priest-Code, or P., of which Leviticus largely consists, distinguishing it from the earlier document JE., which forms a considerable portion of Genesis and Exodus. This theory of the documentary character of the Pentateuch assumes the non-Mosaic authorship of the books in their present form. The only profession made in the book (for the title does not belong to the original book), is that it was revealed to Moses in the wilderness of Sinai. It is possible for it to be substantially Mosaic, i. e., a following out of the spirit and intention of Moses, while still a collection and codification, made by later hands, of the great body of priestly teachings and working formulas which had grown up during Israel's national history.

The burnt offering. Three forms of burnt offering are specified: from the herd, i. e., of larger cattle (ver. 3-9), from the flock, i. e., smaller cattle (ver. 10-13), and birds (ver. 14-17). The directions for these three kinds are presented with only such difference of detail as is made necessary by the different natures of the animals. 3. Any offering of larger or smaller cattle must be a male without blemish; the person is to offer it for his acceptance, not of his own voluntary will, before Jehovah. Cf. R. V. He is to place his hand on the head of the victim that it may be accepted for him. This placing the hands on the head of the animal fostered and expressed the feeling that the offerer was thus identifying himself with his victim, and thus in reality offering himself to God, as is done in the consummate act of prayer which the rite symbolized. The offerer is next to kill the animal, i. e., perhaps, take some ostensible part in the killing that shall make it constructively his personal act, while no doubt leaving most of the work to the more practised Levites. The priests are to dash the blood on the altar round about. This dashing is a way of disposing of the blood in quantity, and differs from the sprinkling in 4 : 6, 17; 16 : 14, 15, etc., for which a different word is used, and which was done with the finger. The priests are then to flay the animal and divide it into pieces, to place the parts in an orderly manner on the altar, taking care to wash the inwards and legs, and then to burn the whole with fire. It is to be noted that in the case of sheep or goats the side of the altar on which they are to be killed is specified. This is the only passage that informs us where the offering was to be killed, though elsewhere it is specified that the sin and guilt offerings were to be slain in the same place (4 : 24, 29, 33; 7 : 2). It is also to be noted that in the case of birds the priest is to do the killing, and that the blood is apparently to be allowed to sprinkle itself as it is drained out at the side of the altar, and also that the crop with the feathers (not filth as in R. V., which is philologically inadmissible) is not to be burned but to be thrown out in the place of the ashes.

3 If his oblation be a burnt offering of the herd, he shall offer it a male without blemish: he shall offer it at the door of the tent of meeting, that he may be accepted before the Lord. And he shall lay his hand upon the head of the burnt offering; and it shall be accepted for him to make atonement for him. And he shall kill the bullock before the Lord: and Aaron's sons, the priests, shall present the blood, and sprinkle the blood round about upon the altar that is at the door of the tent of meeting. And he shall flay the burnt offering, and cut it into its pieces.

The peculiarity in the form of the burnt offering, distinguishing it from all other forms of sacrifice, is that it is wholly consumed on the altar, while in the case of the others only selected portions are burned. The main idea of the burnt offering, expressed by the offerer through the act of laying his hand on the victim's head, is the idea of self-dedication to Jehovah. The life of the victim was, as it were, presented to God. At the same time the thought of a propitiation, even in this form of sacrifice, is not wanting. 4. Note the expression, To make atonement for him. The theory of its acceptability, reiterated in every separate case, is that it is an "odor of satisfaction" unto Jehovah (comp. Gen. 8 : 21). The Hebrew word הִקְטִיר, hiqtir, used for the act of burning, in connection with the sacrifices, does not emphasize the consuming of the thing burnt, as does the ordinary word, שָׂרַף, sārāph (see e. g., 4 : 12), but rather means to cause to smoke or ascend, as if the primary aim was to furnish an agreeable odor for Jehovah's satisfaction.

CHAPTER II.

1 AND when any will offer a meat offering unto the Lord, his offering shall be of fine flour; and he shall pour oil upon it, and put frankincense thereon:

1 AND when any one offereth an oblation of a meal offering unto the Lord, his oblation shall be of fine flour; and he shall pour oil upon it, by this form of worship was the feeling that Jehovah was pleased with an offering of the self which was also a losing of the self in him. The whole victim was reduced to the volatile form of smoke or odor and ascended visibly to the skies. The immense effectiveness of this form of spectacular teaching was far more than an offset to any danger lurking in the notion that God derived an animal pleasure from the smell of smoke. That notion was sure to be felt to be only a fiction or emblem of a great spiritual truth, while on the other hand the feeling that God is pleased with the heartfelt ascent to him of all that is most spiritual and aspiring in humanity would grow as intimacy with his kindness increased, and would derive new strength and vividness from each new clothing of the truth in the visibility of material sacrifice.

Chap. 2. 1-10. The meal offering. The word which designated this offering is מִנְחָה, minchāh, which means a gift, such, for instance, as Jacob brought to Esau to propitiate him (Gen. 32 : 13, 18), or the brethren of Joseph carried on their second visit to Egypt as a propitiatory gift to the governor (Gen. 43 : 11). In general the minchah was a gift from an inferior to a superior, a gift expressing homage. As a sacrifice the minchah is the antithesis of the זֶבַח, zebhāch, or slain offering; the minchah being in general the bloodless or meal offering. The two terms, zebach and minchah, taken together, designate the two inclusive kinds of sacrifice, the animal or slain, and the vegetable or bloodless offerings, as in Ps. 40 : 6, "zebach and minchah thou hast no delight in" (see also 1 Sam. 3 : 14). In the Law the minchah is generally treated as an accompaniment of the burnt offering or peace offering, rather than as an independent sacrifice. It was an actual and useful present to the priests, only the memorial, or small part of it as representing the whole, being burned on the altar. Memorial, מִזְבֵּחַ, 'azkārāh, is a technical term and describes the offered portion as that which, as ascending directly to heaven, brings the whole gift into remembrance before Jehovah. The rest of the offering was treated as most holy, i. e., most

8 be made of fine flour with oil. And thou shalt bring the meal offering that is made of these things unto the Lord : and it shall be presented unto the priest, and he shall bring it unto the exclusively set apart for the priests' use, or most sedulously protected from secular profanation. "Among the dues of the priests a distinction was made between the holy and the most holy offerings. The latter could be eaten only (1) by the priests, and (2) in a holy place, i. e., within the courts of the sanctuary. The former could be eaten by the priests and any members of their family or household, in any clean place. In both cases it was necessary for the person who partook of the gifts to be in a condition of ceremonial purity" (DRIVER). When the offering was of uncooked flour, or of parched grains of first-gathered corn, it was to be accompanied by a small quantity of frankincense, which as a sacred substance was all to be taken for fumigation.

The three forms of the minchah enumerated are: fine flour with frankincense (ver. 1-3), cakes and wafers of fine flour (ver. 4-8), and parched grains of earliest harvested corn with frankincense (ver. 14-16). Of the cake offerings several varieties are mentioned, distinguished by the kind of utensil with which they are cooked, and designated as "minchah baken in the oven" (ver. 4), "minchah on the pan" (ver. 5), and "minchah of the pot" (ver. 7). The first kind of offering, that of uncooked fine flour, was the typical minchah, the other forms being perhaps the offering of the humbler class. It was this form of minchah with which the princes of the congregation accompanied their costly gifts at the dedication of the tabernacle (see Num. 7 : 13, al.). This uncooked minchah belonged to all the priests (7 : 10), who were, however, to bake it without leaven and to eat it in the court of the tabernacle (6 : 16, 17) ; the cakes and wafers which were offered went to the particular priest who officiated (7 : 9).

In its meaning the minchah differed from the burnt offering in that it was a present instead of the symbolical offering of the life. As a reason why the offered cakes should be broken in pieces and anointed so as to make a tempting display, as a host would set food before a guest, it is said, "It is a minchah," i. e., a present, such as that with which one propitiates a superior. At the same time it is more than a mere present ; there is the idea of consecration to God in it. The reason why the memorial of it is to be burned on the altar is, that it is a fire offering, an odor of satisfaction unto Jehovah (ver. 2, 9). "As the burnt offering represented the consecration of the life, the person, to God, so the meal offering represented the consecration of the fruit of his labors." This consecration was made vivid by the ascent of the azkarah or memorial in smoke, and so prominent an element in worship was this offered sample of the gift that even in New Testament times the memorial was a familiar emblem, in religious feeling, of acceptability in the divine presence (Acts 10 : 4).

Minute study of the text of this section has not failed to notice the peculiar employment of the style of direct address abruptly beginning with the fourth verse and continuing through the chapter. It is impossible for us to account for this ; but not unreasonable is the note of Driver 11 No meat offering, which ye shall bring unto the Lord, shall be made with leaven: for ye shall burn no leaven, nor any honey, in any offering of the Lord made by fire.

12 As for the oblation of the firstfruits, ye shall offer them unto the Lord: but they shall not be burnt on the altar for a sweet savour.

13 And every oblation of thy meat offering shalt thou season with salt; neither shalt thou suffer the salt of the covenant of thy God to be lacking from thy meat offering: with all thine offerings thou shalt offer salt.

14 And if thou offer a meat offering of thy firstfruits unto the Lord, thou shalt offer for the meat offering of thy firstfruits green ears of corn dried by the fire, even corn beaten out of full ears.

15 And thou shalt put oil upon it, and lay frankincense thereon: it is a meat offering.

16 And the priest shall burn the memorial of it, part of the beaten corn thereof, and part of the oil thereof, with all the frankincense thereof: it is an offering made by fire unto the Lord.

11 offerings of the Lord made by fire. No meal offering, which ye shall offer unto the Lord, shall be made with leaven: for ye shall burn no leaven, nor any honey, as an offering made by fire unto the Lord. As an oblation of firstfruits ye shall offer them unto the Lord: but they shall not come up for a sweet savour on the altar. And every oblation of thy meal offering shalt thou season with salt; neither shalt thou suffer the salt of the covenant of thy God to be lacking from thy meal offering: with all thine oblations thou shalt offer salt.

14 And if thou offer a meal offering of firstfruits unto the Lord, thou shalt offer for the meal offering of thy firstfruits corn in the ear parched with fire, bruised corn of the fresh ear. And thou shalt put oil upon it, and lay frankincense thereon: it is a meal offering. And the priest shall burn the memorial of it, part of the bruised corn thereof, and part of the oil thereof, with all the frankincense thereof: it is an offering made by fire unto the Lord.

who says: "The second person in 2: 4-16, unlike the rest of these chapters, is noticeable, and may be an indication that the chapter is formed out of a combination of elements originally distinct."

11-13. Regulations of the minchah. Two general regulations of much importance in regard to the minchah are here made: the interdiction of leaven and honey from the fire offerings of Jehovah, and the invariable requirement of salt. Leaven is often spoken of as a symbol of corruption (Matt. 16: 6; Mark 8: 15; 1 Cor. 5: 7, 8), and this association with corruption may be the basis of the interdiction. Why honey was to be kept from the fire offerings of Jehovah we can only conjecture. It may be because of its tending to promote fermentation and decay in that with which it is mixed.

Both of these substances, however, might be offered as first-fruits (see R. V. of ver. 12), but they were not to be burned as a part of the fire offering for an odor of satisfaction.

As for the salt, this was to accompany not only the minchah, but animal offerings as well. Though not often mentioned in the legislation of the Pentateuch, salt was considered of great importance (Ezek. 43: 24; Mark 9: 49, 50). It was perhaps an ingredient of the incense (see Exod. 30: 35, R. V.), and according to the LXX of 24: 7 was placed along with the frankincense on the shewbread which was the great public minchah. Its significance as a sacrificial symbol appears in the expression, the salt of the covenant of thy God, salt being mutually partaken of by contracting parties as a seal of a covenant because the partaking of one's salt laid upon the host, under Oriental laws of hospitality, the obligation to keep faith with his guest (cf. Num. 18: 19; 2 Chron. 13: 5). This allusion to salt indicates that there was another idea underlying the minchah, and indeed all the offerings, which has not been so clearly brought out before, namely, that in offering sacrifices the worshiper incurred obligations like those of hospitality, and entered into a covenant with God intended to be inviolable.

14-16. The minchah of first-fruits was not the same as the dedicatory offering of the firstfruits at the beginning of harvest. The latter if made into loaves might be baked with leaven; and whether in loaf or sheaf, no part of it was offered on the altar (23: 10, 11, 17, 20). This minchah, on the contrary, like the minchah of fine flour, was to be arranged in a manner suggestive of a meal set before a guest, and the memorial of it was to be burned, the remainder being most sacred to the use of the priest. It was to be of fresh ears of choicest cultivated corn roasted and bruised into coarse grits. This was to be accompanied by oil and frankincense; and the "memorial" of the grain and oil, with all the frankincense, was burned as a fire offering, an odor of satisfaction unto Jehovah.

Chap. 3. 1-5. The peace offering. The peace offering was the expression of thankfulness and joy, and was in its meaning essentially

3 And he shall offer of the sacrifice of the peace offering an offering made by fire unto the Lord; the fat that covereth the inwards, and all the fat that is upon the inwards,

4 And the two kidneys, and the fat that is on them, which is by the flanks, and the caul above the liver, with the kidneys, it shall he take away.

8 And he shall lay his hand upon the head of his offering, and kill it before the tabernacle of the congregation: and Aaron's sons shall sprinkle the blood thereof round about upon the altar.

9 And he shall offer of the sacrifice of the peace offering an offering made by fire unto the Lord; the fat thereof, and the whole rump, it shall he take off hard by the backbone; and the fat that covereth the inwards, and all the fat that is upon the inwards,

And Aaron's sons shall burn it on the altar upon the burnt offering, which is upon the wood that is on the fire: it is an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the Lord.

a feasting with Jehovah. It was the only sacrifice of which the people were permitted to eat the flesh. Peace offerings and simple feasting often came to be practically synonymous in the minds of the people, so that the religious ceremony could be participated in without any great withdrawing from the ordinary carelessness of life or any great solemnity of religious feeling. The strange woman in Proverbs (7:14) even proposes to make her waiting peace offerings the occasion of a dissolute orgy. The intention, however, was to give a religious character to social festivities by associating them with the completeness of the divine reconciliation. The peace offering was usually the crowning or final act in a series of sacrifices in which burnt offerings or sin offerings first secured that reconciliation of the soul with God. The offering might be either of a male or a female animal, provided only that it was perfect, and was to be either from the herd or a sheep or goat from the flock.

The preliminary steps, the laying of the hand on the head of the victim, the killing of it at the door of the tent of meeting, the sprinkling of the blood by the priests, were the same as in the case of the burnt offering. But for the fire offering unto Jehovah use was made only of the suet in the interior of the animal and the kidneys. This internal fat was reserved for Jehovah, the same as the blood, and was never to be eaten (see ver. 16, 17). The formula descriptive of this Lord's portion is several times repeated and makes four specifications: (1) The fat that covereth the inwards (ver. 9), i. e., the large net of fatty tissue which stretches from the stomach or paunch over the bowels and completely envelops the latter. (2) All the fat that is upon the inwards, entrails, i. e., the fat attached to the intestines, which could easily be peeled off. (3) The two kidneys, and the fat that is upon them, which is by the loins (ver. 10), i. e., upon the inner muscles of the loins or in the region of the kidneys. (4) The caul, lit., excess, upon the liver, i. e., the fat made visible on the removal of the lesser omentum, which commences at the division between the right and left lobes of the liver and stretches on the one side across the stomach and on the other to the region of the kidneys. Hence the clause, Upon . . . the kidneys, i. e., by them, as far as it reaches, shall he take away.

The latter clause of ver. 4 is unintelligible in the Authorized version as it is also in the Revised version unless we remove the comma after "kidneys." It means that the priest shall take away the liver-net on or by the kidneys in removing it from the animal. The Polychrome version translates, "Which mass he shall remove as far as the kidneys."

"The four portions mentioned comprehended all the separable fat in the inside of the sacrificial animal." It is to be burned upon the burnt offering which is on the wood which is on the fire. This seems to indicate that the peace offering is a secondary sacrifice which is hardly complete without a burnt offering preceding.

6-11. The ritual for the offering of a sheep is the same as that for the offering of cattle with the addition that, besides the portions of fat mentioned in the first case, the fat tail, A. V., rump (ver. 9), is to be burned entire. This is a broad excrescence from which the true tail

CHAPTER IV.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, hangs down, sometimes weighing as much as fifteen pounds, and often seen upon the sheep at this day in Syria. It consists of a substance between marrow and fat.

In ver. 11 the fat that is burned is called the bread of fire offering to Jehovah, i. e., food that reaches Jehovah by being burned or, as it were, etherialized.

12-17. In the case of a goat the ritual is the same as with oxen or sheep. A significant addition is made in ver. 16 that all the fat is the bread of fire offering to Jehovah for an odor of satisfaction. This designation of the offered fat as the bread or food of Jehovah, here and in ver. 11, points to the fact already stated that the sacrifice was essentially a feast in which a hospitable union was established between the offerer and Jehovah. Schultz makes the peace offering, as the one sacrifice in which the people partook of the victim, the original and fundamental means of communion with Deity. "Sacrifice, according to its most significant phenomenon, is a sacrificial meal at which the worshipers rejoice around the table of their God" ("Journal of Theology," Vol. IV., p. 266). These naïve notions of God's partaking of food, smelling a sweet savor, are notions which in their natural sense were perhaps already outgrown when the Levitical law was codified, the terms being continued in use as an inheritance from the remote past.

The last verse of the chapter is what is called an "ordinance of eternity," or a perpetual and universal statute intended to regulate not simply the sacrifices but the habits of private life ("throughout all your dwellings") that neither fat nor blood is to be eaten. This precept regarding blood is elsewhere given as dating from the time of Noah (Gen. 9 : 4), and both fat and blood are repeatedly prohibited as articles of food in the Pentateuch (see 7 : 23, 26 ; 17 : 10, 14 ; Deut. 12 : 16). The fat forbidden did not include all kinds of fat, but simply this internal suet, called חֵלֶבֶת, chēlēbh, which was reserved for the fire offerings of Jehovah. Other fat, called מִשְׁמַן, mishmān, might be eaten (see Neh. 8 : 10). Jehovah perhaps reserved to himself the fat as the chief part, the very blossom, as it were, of the animal's flesh.

Chap. 4. 1, 2. The sin offering. It is to be observed that with the introduction of the sin offering a fresh start is made, as it were, in the Mosaic legislation. 1. This is indicated by the repetition of the formula, And the Lord spake unto Moses. The legislation assumes a slightly different tone. In the case of the burnt offering and minchah and peace offering it was simply regulative in its form: "If any of you bring an offering" (1 : 2), "If his offering be a burnt offering of the herd" (1 : 3), "of the flock" (1 : 10), or "of fowls" (1 : 14), etc., let it be offered in a certain way. But now certain cases of unintentional sin are specified, and the offering is prescribed or required. It is no longer a voluntary or optional thing; it is rendered necessary by the sin committed.

The sin for which a sin offering is prescribed is called sin in error, by which is meant mainly sins occasioned by ignorance, though as Keil supposes the term may include "all such sins as spring from the weakness of flesh and blood, as distinguished from sins committed with a high (elevated) hand, or in haughty, defiant rebellion against God and his commandments." The Hebrew conception of sin brought it into closer

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, If a soul shall sin through ignorance against any of the commandments of the Lord concerning things which ought not to be done, and shall do against any of them :

3 If the priest that is anointed do sin according to the sin of the people ; then let him bring for his sin, which he hath sinned, a young bullock without blemish unto the Lord for a sin offering.

4 And he shall bring the bullock unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation before the Lord ; and shall lay his hand upon the bullock's head, and kill the bullock before the Lord.

5 And the priest that is anointed shall take of the bullock's blood, and bring it to the tabernacle of the congregation :

6 And the priest shall dip his finger in the blood, and sprinkle of the blood seven times before the Lord, before the veil of the sanctuary.

7 And the priest shall put some of the blood upon the horns of the altar of sweet incense before the Lord, which is in the tabernacle of the congregation ; and shall pour all the blood of the bullock at the bottom of the altar of the burnt offering, which is at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

8 And he shall take off from it all the fat of the bullock for the sin offering ; the fat that covereth the inwards, and all the fat that is upon the inwards,

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, If any one shall sin unwittingly, in any of the things which the Lord hath commanded not to be done, 3 and shall do any one of them : if the anointed priest shall sin so as to bring guilt on the people ; then let him offer for his sin, which he hath sinned, a young bullock without blemish unto 4 the Lord for a sin offering. And he shall bring the bullock unto the door of the tent of meeting before the Lord ; and he shall lay his hand upon the head of the bullock, and kill the bullock 5 before the Lord. And the anointed priest shall take of the blood of the bullock, and bring it to 6 the tent of meeting : and the priest shall dip his finger in the blood, and sprinkle of the blood seven times before the Lord, before the veil of 7 the sanctuary. And the priest shall put of the blood upon the horns of the altar of sweet incense before the Lord, which is in the tent of meeting ; and all the blood of the bullock shall he pour out at the base of the altar of burnt offering, which is at the door of the tent of meet- 8 ing. And all the fat of the bullock of the sin offering he shall take off from it ; the fat that covereth the inwards, and all the fat that is and more mechanical relation to positive precepts than our more ethical and spiritual thought of it does. The natural intuition of right by which all may be condemned was less taken account of. 2. The sin is described as against any of the commandments of the Lord concerning things which ought not to be done. The congregation, or a ruler, or one of the common people might sin and not know of it until informed (see ver. 14, 23, 28), the information undoubtedly consisting in the disclosure of the provisions of the law as applying to the case. The priest, on the other hand, is presumed to know the law, and his inadvertent sin is thought of as something which brings guilt upon the people, no doubt through carelessly leaving them ignorant of regulations by the transgression of which they have incurred guilt. All this gives far greater scope for mere ignorance as the occasion of sin, and less for weakness of flesh and blood, than our more intuitional and personal conception of the relation of the individual to God. As for "sin with a high hand," the abbreviated ritual of the sin offering in Numbers prescribes especially that it is beyond the scope of atoning sacrifice (Num. 15 : 30, 31). The distinction between the two kinds of sin is recognized in Ps. 19 : 12, 13 ; Heb. 10 : 26, 27.

Four cases of unintentional sin are specified : that committed by (1) the anointed priest, i. e., the chief priest ; (2) the whole people ; (3) a ruler ; and (4) an ordinary Israelite. The gradation appears to be made according to the theocratic rank of the sinner.

3-12. Sin of the anointed priest. The priest that is anointed means the high priest, so called on account of the completeness of his anointing at the time of his consecration. The anointing of the common priests also is commanded (Exod. 28 : 41 ; 40 : 15), and implied (7 : 36 ; 10 : 7), but the high priest was the one in whose case that ceremony was especially significant. Do sin according to the sin of the people, rather, so as to bring guilt on the people, as in R. V. In his influential position as a representative of the law of God, even an inadvertence on his part might be extensively harmful.

The preliminary steps in the offering of this bullock for the sin offering were the same as in the case of the burnt offering. The principal difference was in the disposal of the blood. In this sin offering the blood was to be solemnly sprinkled seven times before the veil of the sanctuary, perhaps in token of the reinstatement of the endangered covenant with Jehovah, and also to be smeared on the horns of the altar of incense. In this chapter alone in Leviticus is the altar of incense mentioned. The seven-fold sprinkling was also prescribed in the case of the sin of the whole congregation, and also in the solemn expiatory sacrifices of the great Day of Atonement (chap. 16). It has been noted by some that this sprinkling in the Holy Place is an addition to the sin offering as described in Exod. 29 : 12 and Lev. 8 : 15 ; 9 : 9, and it is suggested that this chapter may represent a more advanced stage in the growth of the sacrificial system. "It appears doubtful," says Driver, "whether the author of the last-named chapters (viz., chap. 8, 9) can have been familiar with the ritual of chap. 4" (see however on 8 : 14-17).

9 And the two kidneys, and the fat that is upon them, which is by the flanks, and the caul above the liver, with the kidneys, it shall he take away.

10 As it was taken off from the bullock of the sacrifice of peace offerings: and the priest shall burn them upon the altar of the burnt offering.

11 And the skin of the bullock, and all his flesh, with his head, and with his legs, and his inwards, and his dung, 12 Even the whole bullock shall he carry forth without the camp unto a clean place, where the ashes are poured out, and burn him on the wood with fire: where the ashes are poured out shall he be burnt.

13 And if the whole congregation of Israel sin through ignorance, and the thing be hid from the eyes of the assembly, and they have done somewhat against any of the commandments of the Lord concerning things which should not be done, and are guilty;

14 When the sin, which they have sinned against it, is known, then the congregation shall offer a young bullock for the sin, and bring him before the tabernacle of the congregation.

15 And the elders of the congregation shall lay their hands upon the head of the bullock before the Lord: and the bullock shall be killed before the Lord.

16 And the priest that is anointed shall bring of the bullock's blood to the tabernacle of the congregation:

17 And the priest shall dip his finger in some of the blood, and sprinkle it seven times before the Lord, even before the veil.

18 And he shall put some of the blood upon the horns of the altar which is before the Lord, that is in the tabernacle of the congregation, and shall pour out all the blood at the bottom of the altar of the burnt offering, which is at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

19 And he shall take all his fat from him, and burn it upon the altar.

20 And he shall do with the bullock as he did with the bullock for a sin offering, so shall he do with this: and the priest shall make an atonement for them, and it shall be forgiven them.

9 upon the inwards, and the two kidneys, and the fat that is upon them, which is by the loins, and the caul upon the liver, with the kidneys, shall he take away, as it is taken off from the ox of the sacrifice of peace offerings: and the priest shall burn them upon the altar of burnt offering. And the skin of the bullock, and all its flesh, with its head, and with its legs, and its inwards, and its dung, even the whole bullock shall he carry forth without the camp unto a clean place, where the ashes are poured out, and burn it on wood with fire: where the ashes are poured out shall it be burnt.

13 And if the whole congregation of Israel shall err, and the thing be hid from the eyes of the assembly, and they have done any of the things which the Lord hath commanded not to be done,

14 and are guilty; when the sin wherein they have sinned is known, then the assembly shall offer a young bullock for a sin offering, and bring it

15 before the tent of meeting. And the elders of the congregation shall lay their hands upon the head of the bullock before the Lord: and the

16 bullock shall be killed before the Lord. And the anointed priest shall bring of the blood of 17 the bullock to the tent of meeting: and the priest shall dip his finger in the blood, and sprinkle it seven times before the Lord, before the veil.

18 And he shall put of the blood upon the horns of the altar which is before the Lord, that is in the tent of meeting, and all the blood shall he pour out at the base of the altar of burnt offering, which is at the door of the tent of meeting.

19 And all the fat thereof shall he take off from it, and burn it upon the altar. Thus shall he do

20 with the bullock: as he did with the bullock of the sin offering, so shall he do with this: and the priest shall make atonement for them, and they shall be forgiven. And he shall carry forth the bullock without the camp, and burn it as he burned the first bullock: it is the sin offering for the assembly.

The rest of the blood, as not sacrificially significant, was to be poured out at the base of the altar of burnt offering. The internal fat was removed as in the case of the peace offering and burned upon the altar, while the skin and head, and in short all the animal with its refuse, was burned in a clean place without the camp in the place where the ashes were poured out. The author of the Epistle to the Hebrews finds in this burning without the camp a suggestive coincidence in connection with the fact that Jesus suffered outside the gate of Jerusalem (Heb. 13 : 11-13).

13-21. Sin of the congregation. 13. Sin through ignorance, lit., err. And they have done somewhat, etc. This is much more simply and directly translated in the R. V. It was in connection with such a sin as that described here that Saul erected his first altar (1 Sam. 14 : 31-35). The sacrifice mentioned in that place, however, seems to be more in the nature of a peace offering, as the people were directed to eat, and to be prescribed more as an example of how cattle ought to be slaughtered and eaten than as a means of propitiation for sin committed.

The ritual in the case of a sin of the whole congregation is the same as that for the sin of the anointed priest, except that here the elders of the congregation lay their hands on the head of the victim. 20. The formula, The priest shall make an atonement . . . and it shall be forgiven, recurs with all the sin offerings except that for the high priest. In his case, being the party seeking reconciliation, it would be obviously impossible for him to pronounce his own absolution, nor did the law provide any one of higher theocratical rank who could make the atonement for him. He was the one in all Israel who must approach Jehovah directly, even for himself, and find his pardon in his own consciousness.

The idea which lay at the root of the Hebrew ceremony of atonement was the idea of covering.

22 When a ruler hath sinned, and done somewhat through ignorance against any of the commandments of the Lord his God concerning things which should not be done, and is guilty ;

23 Or if his sin, wherein he hath sinned, come to his knowledge ; he shall bring his offering, a kid of the goats, a male without blemish :

24 And he shall lay his hand upon the head of the goat, and kill it in the place where they kill the burnt offering before the Lord : it is a sin offering.

25 And the priest shall take of the blood of the sin offering with his finger, and put it upon the horns of the altar of burnt offering, and shall pour out his blood at the bottom of the altar of burnt offering.

26 And he shall burn all his fat upon the altar, as the fat of the sacrifice of peace offerings : and the priest shall make an atonement for him as concerning his sin, and it shall be forgiven him.

27 And if any one of the common people sin through ignorance, while he doeth somewhat against any of the commandments of the Lord concerning things which ought not to be done, and be guilty ;

28 Or if his sin, which he hath sinned, come to his knowledge : then he shall bring his offering, a kid of the goats, a female without blemish, for his sin which he hath sinned.

29 And he shall lay his hand upon the head of the sin offering, and slay the sin offering in the place of the burnt offering.

30 And the priest shall take of the blood thereof with his finger, and put it upon the horns of the altar of burnt offering, and shall pour out all the blood thereof at the bottom of the altar.

31 And he shall take away all the fat thereof, as the fat is taken away from off the sacrifice of peace offerings ; and the priest shall burn it upon the altar for a sweet savour unto the Lord ; and the priest shall make an atonement for him, and it shall be forgiven him.

32 And if he bring a lamb for a sin offering, he shall bring it a female without blemish.

33 And he shall lay his hand upon the head of the sin offering, and slay it for a sin offering in the place where they kill the burnt offering.

34 And the priest shall take of the blood of the sin offering with his finger, and put it upon the horns of the altar of burnt offering, and shall pour out all the blood thereof at the bottom of the altar :

35 And he shall take away all the fat thereof, as the fat of the lamb is taken away from the sacrifice of the peace offerings ; and the priest shall burn them upon the altar, according to the offerings made

22 When a ruler sinneth, and doeth unwittingly any one of all the things which the Lord his God hath commanded to be done, and is guilty ;

23 If his sin, wherein he hath sinned, be made known to him, he shall bring for his oblation a

24 goat, a male without blemish ; and he shall lay his hand upon the head of the goat, and kill it in the place where they kill the burnt offering

25 before the Lord : it is a sin offering. And the priest shall take of the blood of the sin offering with his finger, and put it upon the horns of the altar of burnt offering, and the blood thereof shall he pour out at the base of the altar of burnt

26 offering. And all the fat thereof shall he burn upon the altar, as the fat of the sacrifice of peace offerings : and the priest shall make atonement for him as concerning his sin, and he shall be forgiven.

27 And if any one of the common people sin unwittingly, in doing any of the things which the Lord hath commanded not to be done, and be

28 guilty ; if his sin, which he hath sinned, be made known to him, then he shall bring for his oblation a goat, a female without blemish, for his

29 sin which he hath sinned. And he shall lay his hand upon the head of the sin offering, and kill the sin offering in the place of burnt offering.

30 And the priest shall take of the blood thereof with his finger, and put it upon the horns of the altar of burnt offering, and all the blood thereof

31 shall he pour out at the base of the altar. And all the fat thereof shall he take away, as the fat

32 is taken away from off the sacrifice of peace offerings ; and the priest shall burn it upon the altar for a sweet savour unto the Lord ; and the priest shall make atonement for him, and he shall be forgiven.

33 And if he bring a lamb as his oblation for a sin offering, he shall bring it a female without

34 blemish. And he shall lay his hand upon the head of the sin offering, and kill it for a sin offering in the place where they kill the burnt

35 offering. And the priest shall take of the blood of the sin offering with his finger, and put it upon the horns of the altar of burnt offering, and all the blood thereof shall he pour out at the base of the altar ; and all the fat thereof shall he take away, as the fat of the lamb is

36 taken away from the sacrifice of peace offerings ; and the priest shall burn them on the altar, upon the offerings of the Lord made by fire :

The blood placed on the thing to be purified, or sprinkled as a veil between the sinner and the Holy Place, was thought of as "covering" the sin, or expressing the fact that God no longer cared to look at or make account of it.

22-26. Sin of a ruler. 22. The ruler is the head of a tribe or of a division of a tribe (Num. 3 : 24, 30, 35). The ritual for the ruler differs from that for the high priest and for the whole congregation in several particulars. 23. The victim is not a bullock but a shaggy one of the goats, not kid of the goats, i. e., an old, hairy he-goat. There is no mention of sprinkling the blood seven times before the veil, and the blood is put upon the horns of the altar of burnt offering instead of the altar of incense. It is to be observed, moreover, that nothing is said in this or the following case about burning the flesh and skin of the animal without the camp. From the prohibition in

6 : 30 we may infer that sin offerings of this kind, whose blood was not brought into the holy place, might be eaten by the priests, and from the incident related in 10 : 16-20 we should infer that this was expected of the priests. The shaggy goat is mentioned as the animal sacrificed as the sin offering for the princes of the tribes (Num. 7), for the nation at the yearly festivals (16 : 9, 15 ; 23 : 19 ; Num. 28 : 15, etc.), and at the consecration of the priests (9 : 3, 15).

27-35. Sin of the common people. The literal designation for one of the common people is one of the people of the land. His sin offering was to be either (1) a shaggy female of the goats (ver. 28) or (2) a ewe sheep (ver. 32). The ritual in both cases was the same as with the he-goat for the ruler. In ver. 35 it is said that the priest shall burn them "upon the fire offerings of Jehovah," not according to, as in the text (see R. V).

by fire unto the Lord : and the priest shall make an atonement for his sin that he hath committed, and it shall be forgiven him.

and the priest shall make atonement for him as touching his sin that he hath sinned, and he shall be forgiven.

There is a somewhat abbreviated ritual of the sin offering both for the people and for individuals in Num. 15 : 22-31. There was also provided a water of separation, in which the virtues of the sin offering were, as it were, stored up for use in cases of defilement by the dead (Num. 19). This constant bringing of sin to account by means of prescribed offerings surrounded the people as a whole with a religion in which the thought of sin and of the need of reconciliation with God was a very important factor.

As to the significance of the sin offering it can hardly be supposed that it bore for the people any such developed meaning as Christian thought, not to say ingenuity, has sometimes injected into it in connection with the death of Christ. As we look back upon these Old Testament types we see them irradiated and glorified by the halo of Christian history and feeling through which we behold them and which has been so inspiring to us. But in order to estimate these foreshadowing institutions aright as revelations of God's truth—preparations for Christ—we need to consider what they were to the people of their own time for whom this inspiring history did not exist. Only the broadest and simplest religious feeling can be supposed to have been awakened or attempted in those early ordinances.

In the first place, with what we call sin and guilt in the proper sense neither sin nor guilt offering had anything to do. "For the entire sphere of the inner life there exists no sacrifice. . . . Only 'if any one sins through error' is there a sacrifice for sins unconsciously and unintentionally committed through human weakness and short-sightedness, where evil will—the actual center of sin—is missing." The victim can therefore hardly have been regarded as suffering death as a punishment for the offerer's sin, since the mere sins of error for which alone an offering was admissible were not death-worthy sins. Nor does it seem probable that the flesh of a constructive criminal—for such would be a victim suffering capital punishment—should be regarded as most holy (6 : 29). The sprinkling of the blood rather than the requirement of a vicarious death seems to have occasioned the necessity for a slain sacrifice, and even this was not so essential but that in some cases a bloodless minchah might be accepted as a sin offering (5 : 11). The laying of the hands on the victim's head was an accepting of the animal as one's offering and, as in all kinds of sacrifice and consecrations, a setting of it apart for purposes of cult, but not necessarily, any more than in the case of the burnt offering, a symbolical transfer of guilt. It is true this idea of transference of sin to a representative—not, however, with any notion of making the representative guilty—was acted upon in the ceremony of placing the people's sins on the live goat that he might carry them away to Azazel on the great Day of Atonement (16 : 21, 22). Not unfamiliar with Hebrew thought, moreover, was the notion of one person's suffering for another's sin (Exod. 32 : 32 ; Isa. 53 : 4), and in the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah the vicarious suffering of the Servant of Jehovah is suggestively associated with the 'asham, or guilt offering, which, as will be seen in the next chapter, is only one variety of sin offering: "When his soul offers a guilt offering, he shall see seed, he shall prolong days, and the pleasure of Jehovah shall prosper in his hand" (Isa. 53 : 10). This idea of vicarious atonement, however, seems to have been the very highest flower of Old Testament thought, peculiar to the great evangelical prophet, and hardly understood even in New Testament times. It seems hardly possible that the common sin offering should have intentionally been so framed as to portray the transfer of mere sins of error to a victim in such a way as to make it guilty of death. Such was the form of the ceremony, however, that when taken up into the luxuriant environment of a more developed future the notion of vicarious guilt and suffering would associate itself with the sin offering as a not unnatural graft on such a stock.

Sin and the divine holiness were both ideas which had to be touched and developed by the idealism of the prophets before they resembled the highly ethical notions which we inherit from centuries of Christian thought. The former was almost indistinguishably blended with ceremonial uncleanness, while the latter was at first thought of as like some awful electrical quality by which the unclean or unprepared person would be struck dead on coming into the Divine presence. In the sin offering, as in all animal sacrifices, the blood, as the sacramental means of uniting God in covenant with his people, became the medium for purifying or preparing the person for the presence of Jehovah. "The blood is the life. Blood must be withheld from all profane use and can only subserve sacred

CHAPTER V.

1 AND if a soul sin, and hear the voice of swearing, and is a witness, whether he hath seen or known of it; if he do not utter it, then he shall bear his iniquity.

2 Or if a soul touch any unclean thing, whether it be a carcase of an unclean beast, or a carcase of unclean cattle, or the carcase of unclean creeping things, and if it be hidden from him; he also shall be unclean, and guilty.

3 Or if he touch the uncleanness of man, whatsoever uncleanness it be that a man shall be defiled withal, and it be hid from him; when he knoweth of it, then he shall be guilty.

1 AND if any one sin, in that he heareth the voice of adjuration, he being a witness, whether he hath seen or known, if he do not utter it, then

2 he shall bear his iniquity: or if any one touch any unclean thing, whether it be the carcase of an unclean beast, or the carcase of unclean cattle, or the carcase of unclean creeping things, and it be hidden from him, and he be unclean,

3 then he shall be guilty: or if he touch the uncleanness of man, whatsoever his uncleanness be wherewith he is unclean, and it be hid from him; when he knoweth of it, then he shall be purposes of cult. In accordance with divine decree, blood shall 'cover' man that God may not view his uncleanness." The simple meaning attaching to the whole offering may be summed up in the words of Schultz ("American Journal of Theology," Vol. IV., p. 309): "Sin offering is a purificatory rite (Lev. 12: 8). The entire sacrifice consists in what at other offerings is only the preparatory part, namely, the 'covering.' And it is this in a particularly intensive manner, since a defilement of physico-ethical nature is to be abolished, besides the general human uncleanness. The entire sacrificial course, including the eating of the sacrificial flesh by the priest (10: 16 f.) and the rendering of the sacrificial cake (5: 11) is purifying. Hence the real ground of purification is that God accepts the sacrifice and thereby enters into communion with the sinner, granting him actual pardon, and that man in this offering, enjoined by God as the embodied prayer of a penitent, expresses his confession, his regret, his petition for forgiveness."

The sin offering became typical of the death of Christ, not by embodying and teaching all the details of doctrine which later ethical needs attached to that death, but by introducing the sinner to that simple all-regenerative feeling which constitutes the state of grace in all ages of the world, the feeling of sin confessed and accounted for, the feeling of divine forgiveness possible and actual, and of restored communion with Him who is of purer eyes than to behold iniquity.

"The importance which the sin offering assumed among the Israelites is closely connected with the increasingly ethical character of the ideas associated with Jehovah's 'holiness.'"

Chap. 5. 1-13. Unintentional sin. Examples are here given of unintentional sins requiring a sin offering, but sufficiently venial to admit of a graduation of the expense according to the ability of the offerer. This passage is of the nature of an appendix to chap. 4, and specifies some sins of omission or rashness on the part of the common Israelite which might easily be passed over as too venial for notice, and yet which in God's estimation need to be brought under the discipline of sacrifice in order that men may be trained to notice and avoid them. The first is the sin of keeping silent when one has knowledge of important facts which may clear up the truth in some case at law. He hears the voice of adjuration—the judge charging any that have knowledge in the case to make it known—but he does not declare what he knows. Of such a person it is said that he shall bear his iniquity, that is to say, he incurs guilt by his negligence, and this needs to be expiated by a sin offering. This is purely a case of civil transgression and bears no specific relation to "any of the commandments of the Lord concerning things which ought not to be done," like the cases in chap. 4. More particularly than the two following cases, which have a more obvious relation to religious purity or faithfulness, this kind of transgression needs to be defined as a case of ecclesiastical guilt, if it is to be brought under the discipline of the sin offering at all.

The second sin mentioned is the unintentional contact with a dead animal or with the uncleanness of men. It is mentioned here, as it were, only in passing, and simply in order to specify when it became a case requiring and admitting of a sin offering. It required a sin offering, i. e., involved guilt as distinguished from mere uncleanness, when it had been allowed to pass unnoticed until brought to the person's attention. The ordinary discipline, when the uncleanness was attended to at the time it occurred, was simply ablation and isolation until evening (see 11: 24-40). The guilt incurred was so great that a sin offering was no longer admissible when the person in his uncleanness presumed to eat of the peace offering (see 7: 21). This matter of uncleanness and purification was a very significant feature in Jewish religious practice, and is more fully treated in chap. 11-15.

4 Or if a soul swear, pronouncing with his lips to do evil, or to do good, whatsoever it be that a man shall pronounce with an oath, and it be hid from him; when he knoweth of it, then he shall be guilty in one of these.

5 And it shall be, when he shall be guilty in one of these things, that he shall confess that he hath sinned in that thing:

6 And he shall bring his trespass offering unto the Lord for his sin which he hath sinned, a female from the flock, a lamb or a kid of the goats, for a sin offering; and the priest shall make an atonement for him concerning his sin.

7 And if he be not able to bring a lamb, then he shall bring for his trespass, which he hath committed, two turtledoves, or two young pigeons, unto the Lord; one for a sin offering, and the other for a burnt offering.

8 And he shall bring them unto the priest, who shall offer that which is for the sin offering first, and wring off his head from his neck, but shall not divide it asunder:

9 And he shall sprinkle of the blood of the sin offering upon the side of the altar: and the rest of the blood shall be wrung out at the bottom of the altar: it is a sin offering.

10 And he shall offer the second for a burnt offering, according to the manner: and the priest shall make an atonement for him for his sin which he hath sinned, and it shall be forgiven him.

11 But if he be not able to bring two turtledoves, or two young pigeons, then he that sinned shall

4 guilty: or if any one swear rashly with his lips to do evil, or to do good, whatsoever it be that a man shall utter rashly with an oath, and it be hid from him; when he knoweth of it, then he

5 shall be guilty in one of these things: and it shall be, when he shall be guilty in one of these things, that he shall confess that wherein he hath

6 sinned: and he shall bring his guilt offering unto the Lord for his sin which he hath sinned, a female from the flock, a lamb or a goat, for a sin offering; and the priest shall make atonement

7 for him as concerning his sin. And if his means suffice not for a lamb, then he shall bring his guilt offering for that wherein he hath sinned, two turtledoves, or two young pigeons, unto the

8 Lord; one for a sin offering, and the other for a burnt offering. And he shall bring them unto the priest, who shall offer that which is for the

9 sin offering first, and wring off its head from its neck, but shall not divide it asunder: and he shall sprinkle of the blood of the sin offering upon the side of the altar; and the rest of the

10 blood shall be drained out at the base of the altar: it is a sin offering. And he shall offer the second for a burnt offering, according to the ordinance: and the priest shall make atonement for him as concerning his sin which he hath

11 sinned, and he shall be forgiven. But if his means suffice not for two turtledoves, or two young pigeons, then he shall bring his oblation for that wherein he hath sinned, the tenth

The third case is that of rashness in making vows or sworn promises: 4. If a soul swear, unto babbling, with his lips. Of course it is implied that the oath is not kept. The guilt is in the rashness: observe the R. V. in ver. 4 where utter rashly is the term used instead of pronounce as in A. V. To do evil does not mean to do moral wrong, but to do a thing which is not to one's own advantage. The same Hebrew verb is used in Ps. 15:4, where the upright person is described as "He that sweareth to his own hurt and changeth not." It is allowed that this rash swearing may be hid from the person, i. e., that from an over-sanguine temperament or from negligence in reckoning his resources, he may overestimate his ability to perform his vow. When his inability to keep his promise becomes manifest, he is not thereby absolved, but is in a state of guilt for his rashness, which requires expiation by means of the sin offering.

The sins are to be confessed when the sin offering is brought, an act which is not specifically mentioned in the preceding laws of the sin offering. The oblation required, unless commuted on account of poverty, is the same as the sin offering for one of the common people, namely, a female from the flock i. e., a ewe or a hairy female of the goats. In verse 6 the expression occurs that he shall bring his trespass, or guilt, offering unto the Lord. Notice, however, that this passage goes on to say he shall bring it for a sin offering. This is not properly the guilt offering, despite its peculiar feature of specific confession, inasmuch as it lacks the essential mark of the guilt offering, namely, restitution. That new species of sacrifice is introduced in its order, as was also the sin offering, by the formula, "And the Lord spake unto Moses" (see ver. 14).

Up to this point there has been no hint of commutation in the sin offering on account of poverty. While the whole scheme of sin offerings is arranged in a descending scale, beginning with the anointed priest and including in its order the whole congregation, the ruler, the ordinary layman, the poor, the very poor, the classification in the fourth chapter seems to be according to the theocratic rank of the offerer, while in regard to these more venial sins the sacrifices prescribed range in magnitude according to pecuniary ability. In regard to these less serious sins, so important is it that some recognition be made of them that even the humblest transgressor is directed to make some atonement. 7. If he be not able to bring a lamb, lit., if his hand reach not to the sufficiency of a lamb, then he may bring two turtledoves or two young pigeons, one for a sin offering and the other for a burnt offering. The priest is to offer the sin offering first, pinching or wringing its head from its neck without dividing it asunder, and sprinkling a small portion of the blood upon the side of the altar, while the remainder is poured out at the base of the altar. Afterward the bird intended for the burnt offering is offered according to the formula already given. If the offerer is yet too poor to bring for his offering the tenth part of an ephah of fine flour for a sin offering; he shall put no oil upon it, neither shall he put any frankincense thereon: for it is a sin offering.

12 Then shall he bring it to the priest, and the priest shall take his handful of it, even a memorial thereof, and burn it on the altar, according to the offerings made by fire unto the Lord: it is a sin offering.

13 And the priest shall make an atonement for him as touching his sin that he hath sinned in one of these, and it shall be forgiven him: and the remnant shall be the priest's, as a meat offering.

14 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

15 If a soul commit a trespass, and sin through ignorance, in the holy things of the Lord; then he shall bring for his trespass unto the Lord a ram without blemish out of the flocks, with thy estimation by shekels of silver, after the shekel of the sanctuary, for a trespass offering:

16 And he shall make amends for the harm that he hath done in the holy thing, and shall add the fifth part thereto, and give it unto the priest: and the priest shall make an atonement for him with the ram of the trespass offering, and it shall be forgiven him.

part of an ephah of fine flour for a sin offering; he shall put no oil upon it, neither shall he put any frankincense thereon: for it is a sin offering. And he shall bring it to the priest, and the priest shall take his handful of it as the memorial thereof, and burn it on the altar, upon the offerings of the Lord made by fire: it is a sin offering. And the priest shall make atonement for him as touching his sin that he hath sinned in any of these things, and he shall be forgiven: and the remnant shall be the priest's, as the meal offering.

14 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 15 If any one commit a trespass, and sin unwittingly, in the holy things of the Lord; then he shall bring his guilt offering unto the Lord, a ram without blemish out of the flock, according to thy estimation in silver by shekels, after the 16 shekel of the sanctuary, for a guilt offering: and he shall make restitution for that which he hath done amiss in the holy thing, and shall add the fifth part thereto, and give it unto the priest: and the priest shall make atonement for him with the ram of the guilt offering, and he shall be forgiven.

bring the two turtle-doves or young pigeons, he is to bring a tenth part of an ephah, about five pints, of fine flour without oil or frankincense; and the priest is to burn a handful for a memorial on the altar and keep the rest as a minchah. In each case the priest makes an atonement for the sin and the person is assured that it will be forgiven.

The tendency of these regulations to foster in each individual the feeling of responsibility for the just disclosure of the truth, of dread of defilement, and of caution in the making of promises is worth pointing out. Indeed this whole salutary, yet merciful, system of sin and guilt offerings was of immense value as a discipline.

I. THE GUILT OFFERING, 5 : 14 to 6 : 7.

The present passage is occupied with the cases in which the guilt offering is to be paid, while the ritual of the guilt offering is given in 7 : 1-7. The difference between the ideas underlying the sin offering and the guilt offering appears to be that "as the idea of the expiation of sin, which was embodied in the sprinkling of the blood, was most prominent in the sin offering, so the idea of satisfaction for the restoration of rights that had been violated or disturbed came into the foreground in the trespass (or guilt) offering" (KEIL). The following particulars may be noted: (1) The guilt offering was required in cases involving injury to some one—it might be Jehovah himself—in regard to property. (2) It was accompanied by a fine equal to the value of the property with the addition of a fifth. (3) the blood was disposed of as in the burnt offering instead of being put on the horns of the altar (see 7 : 2). (4) The victim was a ram instead of a female sheep or goat. (5) There was no graduation of values to suit rank or ability of the offerer. "It is not always easy to distinguish between cases where a guilt offering was given, and others where a sin offering was required. Possibly a desire to cover all cases of offense against the holiness of Jehovah led to an extension of both offerings to cases where they would not originally have been demanded (cf. ver. 17-19, and 19 : 20-22). In 2 Kings 12 : 16 the  $\text{D}\Psi\text{N}$ , 'ashām, appears as a pecuniary fine; in 1 Sam. 6 it is a present sent back by the Philistines with the ark to make amends for the desecration done to it; in the law of Num. 5 : 5-10, the term 'asham is applied to the property restored together with the fifth part added, while the victim is called the ram of atonement" (DRIVER).

14-16. The first case requiring a guilt offering is where the person commits a trespass—lit., treachery, or breach of trust—through negligence, in withholding something from the holy things of Jehovah. This  $\text{L}\Psi\text{D}$ , mā'āl, or breach of faith, is a technical term in the priestly law, and refers generally to acts of faithlessness toward Jehovah. The holy things were the gifts, sacrifices, first fruits, tithes, etc., which constituted the revenue of the priests. Such unfaithfulness was an actual wronging of God in the person of his priests, and was to be made right by the restoration of the value of the property plus one-fifth. The guilt offering was a ram without blemish whose value was fixed by Moses as the magistrate, thy estimation (ver. 15); but possibly the priest (cf. 27 : 12), the estimation being made in silver by shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary, i. e., perhaps the exact or official shekel. The translator in the Polychrome Bible makes this employment of the term shekels to indicate a minimum value, and mean "two shekels at least."

17 And if a soul sin, and commit any of these things which are forbidden to be done by the commandments of the Lord; though he wist it not, yet is he guilty, and shall bear his iniquity.

18 And he shall bring a ram without blemish out of the flock, with thy estimation, for a trespass offering, unto the priest: and the priest shall make an atonement for him concerning his ignorance wherein he erred and wist it not, and it shall be forgiven him.

19 It is a trespass offering: he hath certainly trespassed against the Lord.

17 And if any one sin, and do any of the things which the Lord hath commanded not to be done; though he knew it not, yet is he guilty, and shall bear his iniquity. And he shall bring a ram without blemish out of the flock, according to thy estimation, for a guilt offering, unto the priest: and the priest shall make atonement for him concerning the thing wherein he erred unwittingly and knew it not, and he shall be forgiven. It is a guilt offering: he is certainly guilty before the Lord.

CHAPTER VI.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,
2 If a soul sin, and commit a trespass against the Lord, and lie unto his neighbour in that which was delivered him to keep, or in fellowship, or in a thing taken away by violence, or hath deceived his neighbour;

3 Or have found that which was lost, and lieth concerning it, and sweareth falsely; in any of all these that a man doeth, sinning therein:

4 Then it shall be, because he hath sinned, and is guilty, that he shall restore that which he took violently away, or the thing which he hath deceitfully gotten, or that which was delivered him to keep, or the lost thing which he found,

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,
2 If any one sin, and commit a trespass against the Lord, and deal falsely with his neighbour in a matter of deposit, or of bargain, or of robbery,
3 or have oppressed his neighbour; or have found that which was lost, and deal falsely therein, and swear to a lie; in any of all these that a
4 man doeth, sinning therein: then it shall be, if he hath sinned, and is guilty, that he shall restore that which he took by robbery, or the thing which he hath gotten by oppression, or the deposit which was committed to him, or the lost

17-19. These verses hardly describe a distinct case requiring a guilt offering, but are introduced in order to note with special emphasis that sins of the foregoing order, even though committed in ignorance of Jehovah's requirement, incur guilt. This is indicated by the unique double conditional with which the clause is introduced: 17. And even if a soul sin, etc.; lit., and if a soul if. The sin is described in the most general terms—just such terms indeed as are used in 4: 27—in order to reserve the emphasis for the succeeding statement, which is the only important statement in the paragraph, viz., that though the person transgressed a commandment and wist, knew, it not, he is certainly guilty, and must bring the ram to the priest. But that it is a guilt offering case, and so different from that in 4: 27, is taken for granted.

The first seven verses of chap. 6 in our English version really belong to this section on the guilt offering, and in the Hebrew are rightly placed at the end of chap. 5. The English division of chapters was adopted from the Septuagint.

Chap. 6. 1-7. The offenses described in detail in this section really constitute the second or alternative case requiring a guilt offering; the first (5: 14-19) being treachery or breach of faith in the holy things of Jehovah, while this is breach of faith against Jehovah exemplified in wronging one's neighbor. The identification of men's rights with Jehovah's rights is to be noted. The details cited as examples are: false dealing in the matter of a deposit, or of a pledge, or of robbery, or if one has oppressed his neighbor or found his lost property and deals falsely and swears to a lie. It seems as if these acts of violence and treachery were passing beyond the limit of those sins of error and short-sightedness for which the system of sin and guilt offerings was provided, and were approaching perilously near to those high-handed offenses for which there could be no expiation. In estimating the magnitude of these offenses, however, something depends on our view of the relation of the sin to prevalent habits of thought. Men graduate the relative enormity of sins by different scales according to the social conditions and the mental habits in which they have been brought up. What is a weakness, a yielding to overwhelming temptation, in one epoch or state of society seems like the most deliberate and high-handed undermining of the very foundations of order in another. With modern Occidental people, shaped in their mental structure by the long education of a commercialism the very foundation of whose large operations must be faith between men, such crimes as treachery and violence and false concealment of another's property seem so deliberate and determined that no temptation can be conceived of strong enough to excuse them. But to the Oriental, not so schooled to the importance of the commercial virtues, the temptations of avarice are more violent, and concealment and deceit are more of the nature of weaknesses. In the book of Proverbs the invitation of the dissolute to the young man to "have a good time"—the snare by which the feet of unwary youth are entangled—is described as a temptation, not to the drowning of sorrow in the flowing bowl, but to a life of freebootery and treacherous violence (Prov. 1: 10-16).

5 Or all that about which he hath sworn falsely ; he shall even restore it in the principal, and shall add the fifth part more thereto, and give it unto him to whom it appertaineth, in the day of his trespass offering.

6 And he shall bring his trespass offering unto the Lord, a ram without blemish out of the flock, with thy estimation, for a trespass offering, unto the priest :

7 And the priest shall make an atonement for him before the Lord : and it shall be forgiven him for any thing of all that he hath done in trespassing therein.

8 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

9 Command Aaron and his sons, saying, This is the law of the burnt offering : It is the burnt offering, because of the burning upon the altar all night unto the morning, and the fire of the altar shall be burning in it.

10 And the priest shall put on his linen garment, and his linen breeches shall he put upon his flesh, and take up the ashes which the fire hath consumed with the burnt offering on the altar, and he shall put them beside the altar.

11 And he shall put off his garments, and put on other garments, and carry forth the ashes without the camp unto a clean place.

12 And the fire upon the altar shall be burning in it ; it shall not be put out : and the priest shall burn wood on it every morning, and lay the burnt offering in order upon it ; and he shall burn thereon the fat of the peace offerings.

13 The fire shall ever be burning upon the altar ; it shall never go out.

5 thing which he found, or any thing about which he hath sworn falsely ; he shall even restore it in full, and shall add the fifth part more thereto : unto him to whom it appertaineth shall he give it, in the day of his being found guilty.

6 And he shall bring his guilt offering unto the Lord, a ram without blemish out of the flock, according to thy estimation, for a guilt offering, unto the priest : and the priest shall make atonement for him before the Lord, and he shall be forgiven ; concerning whatsoever he doeth so as to be guilty thereby.

8 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

9 Command Aaron and his sons, saying, This is the law of the burnt offering : the burnt offering shall be on the hearth upon the altar all night unto the morning ; and the fire of the altar shall

10 be kept burning thereon. And the priest shall put on his linen garment, and his linen breeches shall he put upon his flesh ; and he shall take up the ashes whereto the fire hath consumed the burnt offering on the altar, and he shall put

11 them beside the altar. And he shall put off his garments, and put on other garments, and carry forth the ashes without the camp unto a clean

12 place. And the fire upon the altar shall be kept burning thereon, it shall not go out ; and the priest shall burn wood on it every morning ; and he shall lay the burnt offering in order upon it, and shall burn thereon the fat of the peace of-

13 ferings. Fire shall be kept burning upon the altar continually ; it shall not go out.

The offenses here described are all matters in which the extent of the wrong can readily be estimated ; and the commandment is that full restoration of property shall be made to the one to whom it belongs with the addition of the fifth, and then the ram shall be offered for the guilt offering as before. In Num. 5 : 5-10 it is provided in addition that in case the person to whom restitution is due be dead and have no next of kin to perform the part of Co'el the money shall revert to the sanctuary.

II. A MANUAL OF PRIESTLY DIRECTIONS, 6 : 8 to 7. The regulations of this section are mostly characterized by the recurring introduction, "This is the law of," and the same introduction is used when the laws are named in their order in the subscription at the end (7 : 37).

8-13. 1. Regulations to be observed by the priest in sacrificing the burnt offering. The law of the burnt offering as found here does not refer to occasional offerings of individuals, as in 1 : 2, 3, but to the perpetual burnt offering, which was to be kept lighted continually on the altar. This perpetual fire was the visible sign of the uninterrupted worship of Jehovah, which ideally could not be suspended without unfaithfulness. Other ancient nations also kept perpetual fires burning on the altars of their principal gods. In ver. 9, instead of because of the burning, the translation should be, on the hearth, as in R. V. Both ver. 9 and 10 are much more adequately translated in the Revised version.

Observe that the priest was not to approach the altar except in his sacred garments of linen. Those garments are described and this same regulation is made in Exod. 28. On the other hand these linen garments were not to be worn outside of the sanctuary, a regulation which is also made by Ezekiel (44 : 19). When the ashes were once removed from the altar they could be carried away by the priest in his ordinary clothes.

According to the regulations given in Exod. 29 : 38-42 ; Num. 28 : 3-8, the public burnt offering was to be rendered twice a day, morning and evening. In the time of Ahaz the order seems to have been, a burnt offering in the morning and a meal offering at evening (2 Kings 16 : 15). Perhaps the regulation in Exodus and Numbers indicates the custom which obtained at the time of the redaction of the priest code when a second burnt offering had been introduced. It is not known when the change was made. The fire of the burnt offering, which was to be renewed with wood every morning, was not only a perpetual symbol of worship before Jehovah, but it was the constantly ready public fire on which the fat of peace offerings was to be burnt, as these were brought and offered during the day. The basis of private worship seems to have been the act of feasting in token of communion with Jehovah, and for this act, which was constantly recurring with new worshiping parties, a priest would need to be in attendance all through the 14 And this is the law of the meat offering: the sons of Aaron shall offer it before the Lord, before the altar.

15 And he shall take of it his handful, of the flour of the meat offering, and of the oil thereof, and all the frankincense which is upon the meat offering, and shall burn it upon the altar for a sweet savour, even the memorial of it, unto the Lord.

16 And the remainder thereof shall Aaron and his sons eat: with unleavened bread shall it be eaten in the holy place; in the court of the tabernacle of the congregation they shall eat it.

17 It shall not be baked with leaven. I have given it unto them for their portion of my offerings made by fire; it is most holy, as is the sin offering, and as the trespass offering.

18 All the males among the children of Aaron shall eat of it. It shall be a statute for ever in your generations concerning the offerings of the Lord made by fire: every one that toucheth them shall be holy.

19 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

20 This is the offering of Aaron and of his sons, which they shall offer unto the Lord in the day when he is anointed; the tenth part of an ephah of fine flour for a meat offering perpetual, half of it in the morning, and half thereof at night.

14 And this is the law of the meal offering: the sons of Aaron shall offer it before the Lord, before the altar. And he shall take up therefrom

15 his handful, of the fine flour of the meal offering, and of the oil thereof, and all the frankincense which is upon the meal offering, and shall burn it upon the altar for a sweet savour, as the

16 memorial thereof, unto the Lord. And that which is left thereof shall Aaron and his sons eat: it shall be eaten without leaven in a holy place; in the court of the tent of meeting they

17 shall eat it. It shall not be baked with leaven. I have given it as their portion of my offerings made by fire; it is most holy, as the sin offering, and as the guilt offering. Every male among 18 the children of Aaron shall eat of it, as a due for ever throughout your generations, from the offerings of the Lord made by fire: whosoever toucheth them shall be holy.

19 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

20 This is the oblation of Aaron and of his sons, which they shall offer unto the Lord in the day when he is anointed; the tenth part of an ephah of fine flour for a meal offering perpetually, half of it in the morning, and half thereof in the day. Thus the routine of the sanctuary was what corresponded to the function of the larger ritualistic churches in Christendom, namely, a general public service and the constant opportunity for the exercise of private devotion.

14-18. 2. Regulations to be observed by the priest in sacrificing the meal offering. This regulation is applicable to all the minchas or meal offerings which individuals might bring to the sanctuary, though there was a daily public offering of food (Exod. 29 : 40, 41) which furnished a regular supply for the priests on duty. The burning of the memorial is the same for all minchahs, whether public or private, as in 2 : 2. By the regulation as to eating what remains after the taking out of the memorial handful is of course not meant that whenever a minchah is brought in the priests shall repair to the court of the tabernacle and eat as a religious ceremony, but simply that whatever minchah is offered goes into the stock from which the priests when on duty at the sanctuary shall be fed, and that this shall be cooked without leaven and eaten in the holy place. This was most sacredly set apart for the use of the priests, and all males of the priestly family, even though incapacitated by some physical blemish for public service, might partake of it (21 : 22).

So sacred was this food considered that a layman touching it became "holy" by the contact, so that he had to guard against defilement in the same manner as the sanctified priest (21 : 1-8), though without sharing in the priestly rights and prerogatives. This idea of holiness is strangely blended with that of uncleanness, which no doubt formed the basis of the Jewish notion of sin. "That is holy which has entered into so close a union with the Deity, and is so permeated by his majesty that it may no longer serve the purposes of ordinary life. That which divine powers have touched is unto the unconsecrated person fatal and terrible, 'as if charged with electric forces' (W. ROBERTSON SMITH). Whosoever touches it becomes 'holy,' i. e., falls under the ban. Whosoever sees God must die. Whosoever touches his holy ark, even if actuated by good and benevolent intentions, is smitten by a 'breaking forth of God.' Therefore David is afraid to receive it into his house. He does so only after becoming assured that God's will directs him to do it, and then accomplishes its entry with extreme ritualistic precaution (2 Sam. 6 : 4-18; cf. 1 Sam. 6 : 3 f.)." Both holiness and uncleanness "disqualify man for participation in the normal social life and subject him to the ban in case of oversight. Thus there is naturally a frequent transition between both. Whosoever enters into contact with something consecrated becomes holy. But at the same time he is unclean for daily life. Legalistic Judaism of the very latest period still says that 'the canonical writings defile the hands,' i. e., entail washings before other things may be touched, while scriptures not holy do not have that effect" (SCHULTZ).

19-23. 3. The high priest's daily meal offering. The formula introducing this oblation (ver. 20) reads as if it were the high priest's consecration offering, but it is evidently the offering which began to be rendered by each high priest on the completion of the days of his consecration and continued every evening and morning during his term of office, as is indicated by Eccles. 45 : 14. It was not offered in 21 In a pan it shall be made with oil; and when it is baked, thou shalt bring it in: and the baked pieces of the meat offering shalt thou offer for a sweet savour unto the Lord.

22 And the priest of his sons that is anointed in his stead shall offer it: it is a statute for ever unto the Lord; it shall be wholly burnt.

23 For every meat offering for the priest shall be wholly burnt: it shall not be eaten.

24 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

25 Speak unto Aaron and to his sons, saying, This is the law of the sin offering: In the place where the burnt offering is killed shall the sin offering be killed before the Lord: it is most holy.

26 The priest that offereth it for sin shall eat it: in the holy place shall it be eaten, in the court of the tabernacle of the congregation.

27 Whatsoever shall touch the flesh thereof shall be holy: and when there is sprinkled of the blood thereof upon any garment, thou shalt wash that whereon it was sprinkled in the holy place.

28 But the earthen vessel wherein it is sodden shall be broken: and if it be sodden in a brazen pot, it shall be both scoured, and rinsed in water.

29 All the males among the priests shall eat thereof: it is most holy.

30 And no sin offering, whereof any of the blood is brought into the tabernacle of the congregation to reconcile withal in the holy place, shall be eaten: it shall be burnt in the fire.

21 evening. On a baking pan it shall be made with oil; when it is soaked, thou shalt bring it in: in baked pieces shalt thou offer the meal offering

22 for a sweet savour unto the Lord. And the anointed priest that shall be in his stead from among his sons shall offer it: by a statute for ever it shall be wholly burnt unto the Lord.

23 And every meal offering of the priest shall be wholly burnt: it shall not be eaten.

24 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

25 Speak unto Aaron and to his sons, saying, This is the law of the sin offering: in the place where the burnt offering is killed shall the sin offering

26 be killed before the Lord: it is most holy. The priest that offereth it for sin shall eat it: in a holy place shall it be eaten, in the court of the tent of meeting.

27 Whatsoever shall touch the flesh thereof shall be holy: and when there is sprinkled of the blood thereof upon any garment, thou shalt wash that whereon it was sprinkled in a holy place. But the earthen vessel wherein it is sodden shall be broken: and if it be sodden in a brazen vessel, it shall be scoured, and rinsed in water. Every male among the 30 priests shall eat thereof: it is most holy. And no sin offering, whereof any of the blood is brought into the tent of meeting to make atonement in the holy place, shall be eaten: it shall be burnt with fire.

CHAPTER VII.

1 LIKEWISE this is the law of the trespass offering: it is most holy.

2 In the place where they kill the burnt offering shall they kill the trespass offering: and the blood thereof shall he sprinkle round about upon the altar.

3 And he shall offer of it all the fat thereof; the rump, and the fat that covereth the inwards,

1 AND this is the law of the guilt offering: it is

2 most holy. In the place where they kill the burnt offering shall they kill the guilt offering: and the blood thereof shall he sprinkle upon

3 the altar round about. And he shall offer of it all the fat thereof; the fat tail, and the fat that the raw state, but was prepared after the manner of the minchah of pieces (2: 6). The characteristic of this priest's offering was that it was not to be eaten, but to be wholly burnt, as an offering not now intended for the benefit of the priest or representative of God, as were the minchahs of the laity, but expressing as an odor of pleasantness that priest's own devotion to God's service.

24-30. 4. Regulations to be observed in sacrificing the sin offering. This regulation, like that regarding the high priest's meal offering, is inserted with a new introductory formula, And the Lord spake, etc. The place where the burnt offering is killed was the north side of the altar (1: 11). The sin offering which was to be eaten was regarded as most holy, that is, its use was most rigidly restricted to the priests. At the same time to eat it was the priest's obligation, not simply an optional privilege (10: 17). That seems to have been the priest's way of "bearing the iniquity of the congregation," as if the sins of the people were thereby incorporated into the priests who partook of the victim and so taken away by virtue of the sanctifying power of their office.

Whatever blood may have been sprinkled upon a garment must be washed out in the holy place, for it must not be carried out of the sanctuary to be mingled and confused with common things. The unglazed earthen vessels in which the holy flesh was boiled would absorb the juices and fat so that they could not be thoroughly cleansed of all traces of their contents—they must be broken. With brazen vessels the utmost pains must be taken to remove every trace of the holy flesh that was boiled in them.

The significant general regulation of this section is that no flesh whereof the blood is brought into the holy place is to be eaten. The blood was brought into the sanctuary in the case of the sin offering for the high priest (4: 5-7), for the congregation (4: 16-18), and the sin offering on the Day of Atonement (16: 27). In these offerings the priests themselves shared as offerers, and, except in the case of peace offerings, no offerer partook of his own victim (comp. ver. 23). This final verse is thought by some critics to belong, like chap. 4, to a later revision of the priest code.

Chap. 7. 1-7. 5. Ritual of the guilt offering. The section devoted to the guilt offering (5: 14 to 6: 7) only defined the cases in which the guilt offering was required, and specified that the victim in each was to be a ram. The ritual

4 And the two kidneys, and the fat that is on them, which is by the flanks, and the caul that is above the liver, with the kidneys, it shall he take away:

5 And the priest shall burn them upon the altar for an offering made by fire unto the Lord: it is a trespass offering.

6 Every male among the priests shall eat thereof: it shall be eaten in the holy place: it is most holy.

7 As the sin offering is, so is the trespass offering: there is one law for them: the priest that maketh atonement therewith shall have it.

8 And the priest that offereth any man's burnt offering, even the priest shall have to himself the skin of the burnt offering which he hath offered.

9 And all the meat offering that is baked in the oven, and all that is dressed in the fryingpan, and in the pan, shall be the priest's that offereth it.

10 And every meat offering, mingled with oil, and dry, shall all the sons of Aaron have, one as much as another.

11 And this is the law of the sacrifice of peace offerings, which he shall offer unto the Lord.

12 If he offer it for a thanksgiving, then he shall offer with the sacrifice of thanksgiving unleavened cakes mingled with oil, and unleavened wafers anointed with oil, and cakes mingled with oil, of fine flour, fried.

13 Besides the cakes, he shall offer for his offering leavened bread with the sacrifice of thanksgiving of his peace offerings.

14 And of it he shall offer one out of the whole oblation for an heave offering unto the Lord, and

4 covereth the inwards, and the two kidneys, and the fat that is on them, which is by the loins, and the caul upon the liver, with the kidneys, 5 shall he take away: and the priest shall burn them upon the altar for an offering made by fire 6 unto the Lord: it is a guilt offering. Every male among the priests shall eat thereof: it shall be

7 eaten in a holy place: it is most holy. As is the sin offering, so is the guilt offering: there is one law for them: the priest that maketh atonement

8 therewith, he shall have it. And the priest that offereth any man's burnt offering, even the priest shall have to himself the skin of the burnt offer-

9 ing which he hath offered. And every meal offering that is baked in the oven, and all that is dressed in the frying pan, and on the baking

10 pan, shall be the priest's that offereth it. And every meal offering, mingled with oil, or dry, shall all the sons of Aaron have, one as well as another.

11 And this is the law of the sacrifice of peace offerings, which one shall offer unto the Lord.

12 If he offer it for a thanksgiving, then he shall offer with the sacrifice of thanksgiving unleavened cakes mingled with oil, and unleavened wafers anointed with oil, and cakes mingled

13 with oil, of fine flour soaked. With cakes of leavened bread he shall offer his oblation with the sacrifice of his peace offerings for thanks-

14 giving. And of it he shall offer one out of each oblation for an heave offering unto the Lord; it of that offering is given here. It coincides very closely with the ritual of the sin offering whose blood is not brought into the sanctuary, except for the difference in the animal sacrificed. As to the disposal of the ram, it is specified (ver. 7) that it is to belong to the particular priest who officiates. This gives occasion for the appendix (ver. 8-10) which follows.

8-10. Appendix on the priests' share in the burnt and meal offerings. In the case of the burnt offering the skin is the perquisite of the officiating priest. A distinction is made in regard to the different kinds of meal offering. That which is brought already prepared as cakes, perhaps because such offerings were made only on special occasions and presented in quantities not too large for one man's consumption, goes to the priest who officiates; while the larger and more regular offering of flour mingled with oil (chap. 2 : 1), or dry—2 : 15, where it should read, "Thou shalt add oil to it," instead of "pour upon it"—is placed in a common stock for all the priests.

11-21. 6. Of the species of peace offering, with the conditions to be observed by the worshiper in eating the flesh. The method of slaying the animal for the peace offering and making that part of the sacrifice which is offered on the altar was prescribed in chap. 3. In the present passage we have the bloodless or pastry offering which accompanies the sacrifice, and the conditions, for the different species, to be observed in eating the flesh. Three different species of peace offerings are mentioned, the thanksgiving, the vow, and the voluntary or freewill offering. The first would be an act of worship and feasting commemorative of some special occasion for gratitude, the second would be the fulfillment of some obligation promised beforehand, and the third would be simply a spontaneous expression of devotion. The peace offering for a thanksgiving is most fully described, the different kinds of oiled cakes being minutely specified. It is to be observed that leavened or ordinary bread accompanied the thanksgiving sacrifice (ver. 13), as the memorial of it was not burned on the altar like the minchah (2 : 9, cf. 11, 12). One loaf out of the whole offering was set apart as a תרומה, trómāh, for Jehovah, and appropriated to the use of the priest. This term, which is generally translated heave offering, literally means what is lifted off, the act contemplated being probably not the act of lifting up, or ceremonial raising toward God, as the misleading translation heave offering would indicate, but simply the act of special setting apart or reserving. The term is thus applied to the contributions made for the tabernacle (Exod. 25 : 2 ; 35 : 5, etc.), to the consecrated portion of the spoil of the Midianites (Num. 31 : 41), to the land assigned to the priests (Ezek. 48 : 8-12), etc.

This partaking of leavened bread before Jehovah, as the accompaniment of thanksgiving for his blessings, seems like a bringing of common life into relation to God in a manner calculated to neutralize and remedy the stiffness it shall be the priest's that sprinkleth the blood of the peace offerings.

15 And the flesh of the sacrifice of his peace offerings for thanksgiving shall be eaten the same day that it is offered; he shall not leave any of it until the morning.

16 But if the sacrifice of his offering be a vow, or a voluntary offering, it shall be eaten the same day that he offereth his sacrifice: and on the morrow also the remainder of it shall be eaten:

17 But the remainder of the flesh of the sacrifice on the third day shall be burnt with fire.

18 And if any of the flesh of the sacrifice of his peace offerings be eaten at all on the third day, it shall not be accepted, neither shall it be imputed unto him that offereth it: it shall be an abomination, and the soul that eateth of it shall bear his iniquity.

19 And the flesh that toucheth any unclean thing shall not be eaten; it shall be burnt with fire: and as for the flesh, all that be clean shall eat thereof.

20 But the soul that eateth of the flesh of the sacrifice of peace offerings, that pertain unto the Lord, having his uncleanness upon him, even that soul shall be cut off from his people.

21 Moreover the soul that shall touch any unclean thing, as the uncleanness of man, or any unclean beast, or any abominable unclean thing, and eat of the flesh of the sacrifice of peace offerings, which pertain unto the Lord, even that soul shall be cut off from his people.

23 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying. Ye shall eat no manner of fat, of ox, or of sheep, or of goat.

24 And the fat of the beast that dieth of itself, and the fat of that which is torn with beasts, may be used in any other use: but ye shall in no wise eat of it.

25 For whosoever eateth the fat of the beast, of which men offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord, even the soul that eateth it shall be cut off from his people.

shall be the priest's that sprinkleth the blood of the peace offerings. And the flesh of the sacrifice of his peace offerings for thanksgiving shall be eaten on the day of his oblation; he shall not leave any of it until the morning. But if the sacrifice of his oblation be a vow, or a freewill offering, it shall be eaten on the day that he offereth his sacrifice: and on the morrow that which remaineth of it shall be eaten: but that which remaineth of the flesh of the sacrifice on the third day shall be burnt with fire. And if any of the flesh of the sacrifice of his peace offerings be eaten on the third day, it shall not be accepted, neither shall it be imputed unto him that offereth it: it shall be an abomination, and the soul that eateth of it shall bear his iniquity.

20 eat thereof: but the soul that eateth of the flesh of the sacrifice of peace offerings, that pertain unto the Lord, having his uncleanness upon him, 21 that soul shall be cut off from his people. And when any one shall touch any unclean thing, the uncleanness of man, or an unclean beast, or any unclean abomination, and eat of the flesh of the sacrifice of peace offerings, which pertain unto the Lord, that soul shall be cut off from his people.

22 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 23 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, Ye shall eat no fat, of ox, or sheep, or goat. And the fat of that which dieth of itself, and the fat of that which is torn of beasts, may be used for any other service: but ye shall in no wise eat of it. and uneasy dread which the primitive sense of his awful sanctity would tend to fasten on the mind. That the divine holiness, however important to be kept in view, was not unfriendly to the common enjoyment of life, was a truth which this priest-legislation did not ignore.

As to the time during which the flesh was to be eaten, in the case of the thanksgiving offering, it was to be the same day; for a vow or a voluntary offering the time during which it might be eaten was extended one day. In no case, however, was it to be kept till the third day, but it was to be consumed with fire. The person who ate of it the third day acquired thereby no acceptance with God, but on the contrary incurred guilt. The flesh thus remaining over became פגול, pīg-gūl or refuse (ver. 18), a term which ought not to be confounded with "detestable thing," or "abomination," as is done in our Authorized and Revised versions, but which is technically appropriated to stale or overtime flesh of the sacrifice.

Any sacrificial flesh that had touched anything unclean was to be burned with fire. Very strict regulations were made in regard to eating the meat while one was in a state of uncleanness. The soul that overstepped the regulations was to be cut off from his people, i. e., deprived of the privileges of the covenant and made an outlaw. The scrupulousness which this law reflects and formulates is suggestively referred to as a familiar feeling in the earlier days of the monarchy (1 Sam. 20: 26), and is no doubt an inheritance from the earliest times.

22-27. 7. Fat and blood not to be eaten. The remainder of the instructions of this chapter are addressed to the people. This prohibition of the eating of fat and blood is more succinctly given in 3: 17. The ground of the prohibition in regard to the fat, i. e., חֵלֶבֶת, chēlēbbh, or suet (see on 3: 17), is that this was a gift sanctified to Jehovah, and thus the eating was the invasion of his right. The prohibition, therefore, particularly specifies the fat of such beasts as are offered a fire offering to Jehovah, and probably does not include such animals as were allowed for food, like the stag and antelope, but were not sacrificed. As for that which died of itself or was torn of beasts, 27 Whatsoever soul it be that eateth any manner of blood, even that soul shall be cut off from his people.

28 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

29 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, He that offereth the sacrifice of his peace offerings unto the Lord shall bring his oblation unto the Lord of the sacrifice of his peace offerings.

30 His own hands shall bring the offerings of the Lord made by fire, the fat with the breast, it shall he bring, that the breast may be waved for a wave offering before the Lord.

31 And the priest shall burn the fat upon the altar: but the breast shall be Aaron's and his sons'.

32 And the right shoulder shall ye give unto the priest for an heave offering of the sacrifices of your peace offerings.

33 He among the sons of Aaron, that offereth the blood of the peace offerings, and the fat, shall have the right shoulder for his part.

34 For the wave breast and the heave shoulder have I taken of the children of Israel from off the sacrifices of their peace offerings, and have given them unto Aaron the priest and unto his sons by a statute for ever from among the children of Israel.

35 This is the portion of the anointing of Aaron, and of the anointing of his sons, out of the offerings of the Lord made by fire, in the day when he presented them to minister unto the Lord in the priest's office;

36 Which the Lord commanded to be given them of the children of Israel, in the day that he anointed them, by a statute for ever throughout their generations.

37 This is the law of the burnt offering, of the meat offering, and of the sin offering, and of the trespass offering, and of the consecrations, and of the sacrifice of the peace offerings;

27 beast, in any of your dwellings. Whosoever it be that eateth any blood, that soul shall be cut off from his people.

28 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

29 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, He that offereth the sacrifice of his peace offerings unto the Lord shall bring his oblation unto the Lord out of the sacrifice of his peace offerings:

30 his own hands shall bring the offerings of the Lord made by fire; the fat with the breast shall he bring, that the breast may be waved for a

31 wave offering before the Lord. And the priest shall burn the fat upon the altar: but the breast

32 shall be Aaron's and his sons'. And the right thigh shall ye give unto the priest for an heave

33 offering out of the sacrifices of your peace offerings. He among the sons of Aaron, that offereth

34 the blood of the peace offerings, and the fat, shall have the right thigh for a portion. For the 35 wave breast and the heave thigh have I taken of the children of Israel out of the sacrifices of their peace offerings, and have given them unto Aaron the priest and unto his sons as a due for ever from the children of Israel.

36 This is the anointing-portion of Aaron, and the anointing-portion of his sons, out of the offerings of the Lord made by fire, in the day when he presented them to minister unto the Lord in the priest's office; which the Lord commanded

37 to be given them of the children of Israel, in the day that he anointed them. It is a due for ever throughout their generations. This is the law of the burnt offering, of the meal offering, and of the sin offering, and of the guilt offering, and of the consecration, and of the sacrifice of peace the reason for not eating the flesh itself would abundantly suffice for not eating the fat, namely, that it defiled the eater. The prohibition against blood included that of birds as well as of cattle, and was to be observed by Israel in all his dwelling-places, because the blood was regarded as the soul of the animal, which God sanctified as the medium for the atonement of the soul of man (17 : 11).

28-34. 8. The priest's share of the peace offering. In the peace offerings, which were the sacrifices on which the offerers feasted, the suet was sacred to Jehovah for the fire offering on the altar, while the breast or brisket Jehovah claimed as his own for the use of his representatives the priests. The act of devoting this portion to Jehovah that it might revert to the use of the sanctuary was symbolized by waving, i. e., placing it upon the offerer's hands, along with those of the priest placed underneath, and moving it to and fro. The term seems to have been sometimes used more generally of the act of devoting any gift to Jehovah, which was to be received back for sacred use rather than sent up irrevocably in the altar flame, as where men were said to wave a wave offering of gold for the tabernacle (ExoL. 35 : 22). Waving especially characterized the act of consecration, and even the Levites at their consecration to the tabernacle service were said to be waved (Num. 8 : 11), perhaps by being conducted solemnly up to the altar and back again. In addition to the wave breast, which reverted to the priests in general, there was also given to the priest who officiated the right thigh or round as a trumah, i. e., a portion lifted off or set apart (see on ver. 14). The legislation in this place is different from that in Deut. 18 : 3, where the priest's portion is designated as the shoulder (called in Hebrew the arm), the two cheeks, and the maw. It is thought by modern critics that this priest code represents the latest stage in the history of the sacerdotal rites, the earlier stages being reflected first in 1 Sam. 2 : 13-16, where the priest is seen to have no understood claim to definite dues of flesh, and secondly in Deuteronomy (loc. cit.), where the priest's dues are fixed definitely, but where the portion assigned him is not so choice as in this passage.

The anointing portion perhaps means the portion due the priests in virtue of their anointing or office; though Driver holds that this translation is due to a mistaken etymology, and that the term means something measured out or allotted.

its form this subscription seems to relate only to the section beginning with 6 : 8, and characterized by the recurring formula, This is the law of. Only the laws thus introduced are recognized in the subscription, where they occur mainly in the same order. This passage, however, forms the conclusion of the whole law of the offerings.

III. THE CONSECRATION OF THE PRIESTS, AND THEIR SOLEMN ENTRY UPON OFFICE, chap. 8 to 10.

Chap. 8. 1-4. 1. The preparation. This account of the consecration of Aaron and his sons, which is the only narrative portion of the book with the exception of the short account of the stoning of the blasphemer (24 : 10-23), follows closely the directions given to Moses in Exod. 29 : 1-37; 40 : 12-15. "The" bullock and "the" rams and "the" basket of unleavened (see R. V.), were the ones prescribed in that passage. The basket contained loaves, i. e., flat circular cakes (ver. 26; Exod. 29 : 23) of unleavened bread, also cakes kneaded with oil and cakes anointed with oil (see Exod 29 : 2). The whole congregation was assembled in the court of the tabernacle near the altar.

5-13. 2. The washing, clothing, and anoint-

ing. After premising that what was immediately to take place before their eyes was according to the explicit command of Jehovah, Moses brought Aaron and his sons near before the congregation and washed them with water. He then clothed Aaron with the official garments prescribed in Exod. 28, putting on him first the tunic or shirt of checker-work of linen (Exod. 28 : 39), girding it with its girdle or sash, then the one-piece robe (ibid., 31-35) on the skirt of which were the bells and pomegranates, then the ephod (ibid., 6-14) of two pieces, front and back, held together at the shoulders by the jeweled clasps on which the names of the tribes were engraved, and bound to the wearer by its curious girdle. Upon this he put the breastplate (ibid., 15-30) inside of which were the Urim and Thummim or instruments for sacred divination. Then upon his head he put the mitre or turban (ibid., 39) with its engraved gold plate or diadem of holiness (ibid., 36-38).

With the anointing oil, whose composition is given in Exod. 30 : 22, seq., Moses anointed first the tabernacle with its furniture, including the altar and the laver, and then poured the oil on the head of Aaron. The anointing of the sons, while not directly asserted here, is commanded in Exod. 28 : 41; 40 : 15, and implied in 14 And he brought the bullock for the sin offering: and Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon the head of the bullock for the sin offering.

15 And he slew it; and Moses took the blood, and put it upon the horns of the altar round about with his finger, and purified the altar, and poured the blood at the bottom of the altar, and sanctified it, to make reconciliation upon it.

16 And he took all the fat that was upon the inwards, and the caul above the liver, and the two kidneys, and their fat, and Moses burned it upon the altar.

17 But the bullock, and his hide, his flesh, and his dung, he burnt with fire without the camp; as the Lord commanded Moses.

18 And he brought the ram for the burnt offering: and Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon the head of the ram.

7 : 36 and 10 : 7. They are said also (ver. 30) to have been sprinkled with mingled blood and oil along with their father. From the fact that the high priest is distinguished as the anointed priest in 4 : 3, and from some other indications, Driver is inclined to regard those passages commanding or implying an anointing of the inferior priests, beyond this sprinkling with blood and oil (ver. 30), as glosses of doubtful authenticity. Moses also clothed the sons, according to the directions in Exod. 28 : 40, with body-coats of common woven work (Exod. 39 : 27), girdles, and head ties.

14-17. 3. The sin offering. The sin offering prescribed in chap. 4 is an offering for actual sin committed through error and subsequently brought to the attention of the transgressor. Here we have a sin offering prescribed for a hitherto innocent person as a preparation for a life of higher consecration, a sort of general clearing up of any possible defilements, even though conscious transgression has not occurred. A similar association of the sin offering with a voluntary life of higher devotion is seen in the case of the vow of the Nazarite (Num. 6 : 14). This points to the conception of sin as a state or level of life, rather than simply an act or series of acts that could be brought to mind or checked off in an index of prohibited indulgences. As compared with a state of higher sanctity the ordinary life is a state of sin, innocent enough when not viewed from the level of the purer and more scrupulous life, but needing a sin offering as soon as the person passes to a higher ethical standpoint. This offering is the act of one who has acquired the insight to say,

Clear thou me from hidden faults,

(Ps. 19 : 12.) The conception of sin may not have widened beyond the old primitive idea of a defilement or a contagion; but it is already at least thought of, in some of its aspects, as a defilement so inward that it may not be discerned, so intimately blended with the positive conscience that it increases on the adoption of a preferred purity—the condemnation, indeed, not of a fall but of an obligation to rise, the faint foreshadowing of that arduous morality whose final standard and instrument of self-condemnation is, “Be ye perfect.”

The victim employed for this sin offering was a bullock, and the manner of offering was mainly according to the directions given for the sin offering for the anointed priest in 4 : 3-12. An important divergence, however, is seen in the disposal of the blood. This was not sprinkled seven times before the veil, as there directed, nor was it brought into the holy place and smeared on the horns of the altar of incense. At the same time its flesh was not eaten according to the general regulation for sin offerings whose blood was not brought into the sanctuary, but burned according to the law for those whose blood was brought into the holy place (6 : 30 ; 10 : 18 ; Heb. 13 : 11). This may be because the directions given here represent a less advanced stage in the growth of the sacrificial system than chap. 4 (see on 4 : 22-26); but it may also be because, neither Moses nor Aaron being yet consecrated as priests, the blood was treated as in the case of the sin offering of the ruler (4 : 25) or one of the common people (ibid., 30), and yet the flesh was not eaten because only priests had a right to eat the sin offering (6 : 25, 26).

18-21. 4. The burnt offering. The first ram with which Moses was commanded to provide 21 And he washed the inwards and the legs in water; and Moses burnt the whole ram upon the altar: it was a burnt sacrifice for a sweet savour, and an offering made by fire unto the Lord; as the Lord commanded Moses.

22 And he brought the other ram, the ram of consecration: and Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon the head of the ram.

23 And he slew it; and Moses took of the blood of it, and put it upon the tip of Aaron's right ear, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot.

24 And he brought Aaron's sons, and Moses put of the blood upon the tip of their right ear, and upon the thumbs of their right hands, and upon the great toes of their right feet: and Moses sprinkled the blood upon the altar round about.

25 And he took the fat, and the rump, and all the fat that was upon the inwards, and the caul above the liver, and the two kidneys, and their fat, and the right shoulder:

26 And out of the basket of unleavened bread, that was before the Lord, he took one unleavened cake, and a cake of oiled bread, and one wafer, and put them on the fat, and upon the right shoulder:

27 And he put all upon Aaron's hands, and upon his sons' hands, and waved them for a wave offering before the Lord.

28 And Moses took them from off their hands, and burnt them on the altar upon the burnt offering: they were consecrations for a sweet savour: it is an offering made by fire unto the Lord.

29 And Moses took the breast, and waved it for a wave offering before the Lord: for of the ram of consecration it was Moses' part; as the Lord commanded Moses.

30 And Moses took of the anointing oil, and of the blood which was upon the altar, and sprinkled it upon Aaron, and upon his garments, and upon his sons, and upon his sons' garments with him; and sanctified Aaron, and his garments, and his sons, and his sons' garments with him.

31 And Moses said unto Aaron and to his sons, Boil the flesh at the door of the tabernacle of the 21 pieces, and the fat. And he washed the inwards and the legs with water; and Moses burnt the whole ram upon the altar: it was a burnt offering for a sweet savour: it was an offering made by fire unto the Lord; as the Lord commanded

22 Moses. And he presented the other ram, the ram of consecration: and Aaron and his sons

23 laid their hands upon the head of the ram. And he slew it; and Moses took of the blood thereof, and put it upon the tip of Aaron's right ear, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the

24 great toe of his right foot. And he brought Aaron's sons, and Moses put of the blood upon the tip of their right ear, and upon the thumb of their right hand, and upon the great toe of their right foot: and Moses sprinkled the blood upon

25 the altar round about. And he took the fat, and the fat tail, and all the fat that was upon the inwards, and the caul of the liver, and the two

26 kidneys, and their fat, and the right thigh: and out of the basket of unleavened bread, that was before the Lord, he took one unleavened

27 cake, and one cake of oiled bread, and one wafer, and placed them on the fat, and upon the right thigh: and he put the whole upon the hands of Aaron, and upon the hands of his sons, and waved them for a wave offering before the

28 Lord. And Moses took them from off their hands, and burnt them on the altar upon the burnt offering: they were a consecration for a sweet savour: it was an offering made by fire

29 unto the Lord. And Moses took the breast, and waved it for a wave offering before the Lord: it was Moses' portion of the ram of consecration; as the Lord commanded Moses. And Moses took

30 of the anointing oil, and of the blood which was upon the altar, and sprinkled it upon Aaron, upon his garments, and upon his sons, and upon his sons' garments with him; and sanctified

31 Aaron, his garments, and his sons, and his sons' garments with him. And Moses said unto Aaron and to his sons, Boil the flesh at the door of himself (ver. 2) was offered as a burnt offering according to the ritual laid down in chap. 1. Thus Aaron and his sons, who laid their hands on the head of the victim, expressed their purposed sanctification, body and soul, to the service of Jehovah.

22-30. 5. The ram of consecration. The second, the ram of consecration or installation, was treated as a peace offering, of which, however, unlike ordinary peace offerings, only the priests could eat (Exod. 29 : 33). It was called the ram of consecration, literally the ram of fillings, perhaps from the ceremony of filling the hands of Aaron and of his sons with selected portions of it, as described in ver. 27. To fill the hands came ultimately to mean simply to consecrate, so that Ezekiel uses the term even of the consecration of an altar (Ezek. 43 : 26). The peculiar feature of the sacrificing of this ram was, first the disposal of the blood, and then the waving or filling ceremony connected with the portions to be sacrificed. A bit of blood was put upon the right ear of Aaron and of his sons, and upon the thumb of the right hand, and upon the great toe of the right foot, doubtless to express, not the cleansing of the natural powers as in the putting of the blood of the guilt offering on the same parts of the cured leper (14 : 14-17), but the consecration of the powers to the service of Jehovah. Then taking the fat portions which were always claimed from the peace offerings for the altar, together with the right thigh and one of each species of cake in the basket before Jehovah, Moses placed them upon the hands of Aaron and of his sons and waved them before Jehovah, thus offering them to Jehovah for the use of the sanctuary (see on 7 : 28-34), and then took them from their hands and burned them on the altar; so that in their initial consecration even that which belonged exclusively to the priests (7 : 34) was sacrificed to Jehovah. One reserve of the priest's portion, however, was made in this consecration act: the wave breast became the portion of Moses, the specially commissioned mediator of the law. Finally Moses took some of the blood of the sacrificed ram, along with some of the anointing oil, and sprinkled upon Aaron and his sons and upon their garments to sanctify them.

31-36. 6. Remaining ceremonial for the seven days. This ceremonial consisted of the consecration feast at the completion of the first day's congregation: and there eat it with the bread that is in the basket of consecrations, as I commanded, saying, Aaron and his sons shall eat it.

32 And that which remaineth of the flesh and of the bread shall ye burn with fire.

33 And ye shall not go out of the door of the tabernacle of the congregation in seven days, until the days of your consecration be at an end: for seven days shall he consecrate you.

34 As he hath done this day, so the Lord hath commanded to do, to make an atonement for you.

35 Therefore shall ye abide at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation day and night seven days, and keep the charge of the Lord, that ye die not: for so I am commanded.

36 So Aaron and his sons did all things which the Lord commanded by the hand of Moses.

the tent of meeting: and there eat it and the bread that is in the basket of consecration, as I commanded, saying, Aaron and his sons shall eat it. And that which remaineth of the flesh and of the bread shall ye burn with fire. And ye shall not go out from the door of the tent of meeting seven days, until the days of your consecration be fulfilled: for he shall consecrate you seven days. As hath been done this day, so the Lord hath commanded to do, to make atonement for you. And at the door of the tent of meeting shall ye abide day and night seven days, and keep the charge of the Lord, that ye die not: for so I am commanded. And Aaron and his sons did all the things which the Lord commanded by the hand of Moses.

CHAPTER IX.

1 AND it came to pass on the eighth day, that Moses called Aaron and his sons, and the elders of Israel;

2 And he said unto Aaron, Take thee a young calf for a sin offering, and a ram for a burnt offering, without blemish, and offer them before the Lord.

3 And unto the children of Israel thou shalt speak, saying, Take ye a kid of the goats for a sin offering; and a calf and a lamb, both of the first year, without blemish, for a burnt offering;

4 Also a bullock and a ram for peace offerings, to sacrifice before the Lord; and a meat offering mingled with oil: for to day the Lord will appear unto you.

5 And they brought that which Moses commanded before the tabernacle of the congregation: and all the congregation drew near and stood before the Lord.

6 And Moses said, This is the thing which the Lord commanded that ye should do: and the glory of the Lord shall appear unto you.

7 And Moses said unto Aaron, Go unto the altar, and offer thy sin offering, and thy burnt offering, and make an atonement for thyself, and for the people: and offer the offering of the people, and make an atonement for them; as the Lord commanded.

8 Aaron therefore went unto the altar, and slew the calf of the sin offering, which was for himself.

9 And the sons of Aaron brought the blood unto him: and he dipped his finger in the blood, and put it upon the horns of the altar, and poured out the blood at the bottom of the altar:

10 But the fat, and the kidneys, and the caul above the liver of the sin offering, he burnt upon the altar; as the Lord commanded Moses.

11 And the flesh and the hide he burnt with fire without the camp.

12 And he slew the burnt offering; and Aaron's sons presented unto him the blood, which he sprinkled round about upon the altar.

13 And they presented the burnt offering unto him, with the pieces thereof, and the head: and he burnt them upon the altar.

14 And he did wash the inwards and the legs, and burnt them upon the burnt offering on the altar.

7 And Moses said unto Aaron, Draw near unto the altar, and offer thy sin offering, and thy burnt offering, and make atonement for thyself, and for the people: and offer the oblation of the ritual, and the repetition through the seven days of all the ritual of the first. The feast differed from the ordinary peace offering feast in being restricted to the priests and in allowing none except unleavened bread. It was according to the command in Exod. 29: 35-37 that this solemn ceremony was repeated for seven days. During all this time Aaron and his sons did not depart from the door of the tent of meeting to engage in any secular employment.

Chap. 9. 1-24. Aaron and his sons solemnly enter upon office. Having gone through the eight days of consecration, they are now to begin formally the routine duties of the priesthood. Always first comes the offering for himself, beginning with the sin offering, thus acknowledging before the people his own infirmity. His own victim was a bull calf, an offering of less dignity than the bullock (8: 14), which he had offered every day for a sin offering during his consecration, 15 And he brought the people's offering, and took the goat, which was the sin offering for the people, and slew it, and offered it for sin, as the first.

16 And he brought the burnt offering, and offered it according to the manner.

17 And he brought the meat offering, and took an handful thereof, and burnt it upon the altar, beside the burnt sacrifice of the morning.

18 He slew also the bullock and the ram for a sacrifice of peace offerings, which was for the people; and Aaron's sons presented unto him the blood, which he sprinkled upon the altar round about,

19 And the fat of the bullock and of the ram, the rump, and that which covereth the inwards, and the kidneys, and the caul above the liver:

20 And they put the fat upon the breasts, and he burnt the fat upon the altar:

21 And the breasts and the right shoulder Aaron waved for a wave offering before the Lord; as Moses commanded.

22 And Aaron lifted up his hand toward the people, and blessed them, and came down from offering of the sin offering, and the burnt offering, and peace offerings.

23 And Moses and Aaron went into the tabernacle of the congregation, and came out and blessed the people: and the glory of the Lord appeared unto all the people.

24 And there came a fire out from before the Lord, and consumed upon the altar the burnt offering and the fat: which when all the people saw, they shouted, and fell on their faces.

15 And he presented the people's oblation, and took the goat of the sin offering which was for the people, and slew it, and offered it for sin, as the first.

16 And he presented the burnt offering, and offered it according to the ordinance. And he presented the meal offering, and filled his hand therefrom, and burnt it upon the altar, besides

18 the burnt offering of the morning. He slew also the ox and the ram, the sacrifice of peace offerings, which was for the people: and Aaron's sons delivered unto him the blood, and he sprinkled it upon the altar round about, and the fat of the ox: and of the ram, the fat tail, and that which covereth the inwards, and the kidneys,

20 and the caul of the liver: and they put the fat upon the breasts, and he burnt the fat upon the altar: and the breasts and the right thigh Aaron waved for a wave offering before the Lord; as

22 Moses commanded. And Aaron lifted up his hands toward the people, and blessed them; and he came down from offering the sin offering, and the burnt offering, and the peace offerings.

23 And Moses and Aaron went into the tent of meeting, and came out, and blessed the people: and the glory of the Lord appeared unto all the or than the young bullock (4: 3) which was required of the anointed priest for a sin offering in the case of specific transgression. It served, however, to keep up the indispensable habit of always acknowledging the priest's own sins; and this habit impressed the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews with the contrast of the imperfect human priest to the Christ who offered himself once for all (Heb. 5: 3; 7: 27, 28). He was also to sacrifice a ram for a burnt offering, while of the people he was to require a shaggy he-goat for a sin offering, the same kind of victim as was required of a ruler (4: 23) in the case of specific transgression, and a calf and a lamb for burnt offerings. For the people he was also to sacrifice an ox and a ram for peace offerings, the peace offerings for himself being omitted, as his whole seven days' service of filling or consecration had been of the nature of a peace offering. When the priest was once consecrated, indeed, we should hardly look for public peace offerings on his part, as these were more properly offerings of the people for the use of the priests; and the consecration of these offerings to God for the use of his representatives was indicated by the ceremony of waving (see ver. 21; also on 7: 23-34). The people were also to provide a minchah or meal offering mingled with oil. By the announcement of Moses the people were led to expect some appearance of the glory of Jehovah.

The offerings were made, in their order, according to the ritual already prescribed, the sons of Aaron performing only the part of attendants to deliver to their father the blood (ver. 9, 12, 18) and the pieces of the burnt offering (ver. 13). It is to be observed (ver. 9) that Aaron only put the blood on the brazen altar and did not carry it into the inner sanctuary according to the ordinary directions for the sin offering for the high priest and for the people (4: 5-7, 16-18). This was perhaps because he had never yet entered the sanctuary as consecrated high priest.

At the conclusion of the sacrifice Aaron performed the act of a fully consecrated priest in blessing the people. This act, which in Deuteronomy and the priest code appears to be the characteristic prerogative of the priest (Deut. 10: 8; Num. 6: 23), was performed by David (2 Sam. 6: 18) and Solomon (1 Kings 8: 55). As Aaron came down from the high platform of the brazen altar he and Moses for the first time entered the tent of meeting, and as they came out the glory of Jehovah appeared to the congregation. The issue of fire from Jehovah (ver. 24) to consume the sacrifice can hardly have been the first kindling of the sacred fire which, according to Jewish tradition, was never allowed to go out until the captivity, for there had been sacrifices offered all through the seven days of the consecration. It was probably a special manifestation of the glory of Jehovah, not in that it now appeared for the first time, but in that it

CHAPTER X.

1 AND Nadab and Abihu, the sons of Aaron, took either of them his censer, and put fire therein, and put incense thereon, and offered strange fire before the Lord, which he commanded them not.

2 And there went out fire from the Lord, and devoured them, and they died before the Lord.

3 Then Moses said unto Aaron, This is it that the Lord spake, saying, I will be sanctified in them that come nigh me, and before all the people I will be glorified. And Aaron held his peace.

4 And Moses called Mishael and Elzaphan, the sons of Uzziel the uncle of Aaron, and said unto them, Come near, carry your brethren from before the sanctuary out of the camp.

5 So they went near, and carried them in their coats out of the camp; as Moses had said.

suddenly consumed the victim, as on other occasions when the divine favor was manifested (see Judg. 6 : 21 ; 13 : 19, 20 ; 1 Kings 18 : 38 ; 1 Chron. 21 : 26).

Chap. 10. 1-7. Nadab and Abihu punished for offering strange fire—the priests forbidden to mourn for them. 1. We have not the data for knowing exactly what was the act which is here termed offered strange fire, but a grouping of the suggestive circumstances accompanying the event may help us to conjecture something of the mental state of the young men and of the form which their rash act would be likely to take. They were the elder sons of Aaron (Exod. 6 : 23) and had been specially privileged when Moses went up into the mount (Exod. 24 : 1, 2), though, as they were commanded on that occasion to “worship afar off,” they may have been exalted into a feeling of exceptional familiarity with divine things without that full awe and humility of the divine fellowship which was vouchsafed to Moses. Of this strange fire the first mention indicates that it is not so much forbidden as unauthorized, or not commauded (ver. 1). The account is followed by a prohibition of the use of intoxicants by the priests when on duty (ver. 8, 9), from which the inference is not impossible that the young men may have been at least in that excitable and animated state which follows even the moderate use of wine. It is to be observed too, that the legislation regarding the Day of Atonement in which the privilege of entering the holy place is restricted to the high priest once a year follows as an immediate sequence upon their death, as if on that occasion some of the sanctities had been invaded (16 : 1, 2).

3. But the most suggestive passage is Moses' explanation of this act of judgment (ver. 3), in which he asserts that the Lord said, I will be sanctified in them that come nigh me, and before all the people I will be glorified, as if the glory of Jehovah had not been made sufficiently prominent in the young men's conduct. From all of which we may gather that when the young men saw the glory which was the climax of their days of consecration (9 : 23, 24) they became intensely excited, being assisted perhaps by the wine in which they had indulged, and thought to enhance the glory of the occasion by appearing as chief hierophants in a spectacular scene in which the Lord would be honored with incense, thus mistaking the proud and meaningless functioning in a solemn display for a genuine act of worship to Jehovah. In their eagerness they had perhaps become irreverent and approached too near the awful holiness of the inner sanctuary; they had offered their incense at a time and in a manner unknown to the careful regulations of the law, and it is possible that the fire may have been “strange” in that it was not taken from the altar where it had so recently been lighted directly from Jehovah, but had been taken from some of the fires used for boiling the sacrificial flesh. The act therefore so signally punished was not simply an ignorant overstepping of regulations in an excess of zeal, but an act of presumptuous familiarity and proud self-exaltation.

The relationship of Uzziel and of Mishael and Elzaphan to Aaron is also given in Exod. 6 : 18, 22. They were perhaps the nearest relatives of the stricken men who were not priests. It has been conjectured that these were the men who were incapacitated by contact with a dead body for keeping the Passover on the fourteenth day of Nisan, in the second year of the exodus, and for whose benefit the so-called “Little Passover” was instituted (see Num. 9 : 6, 9-14). As for Aaron and his sons, they were not to let the hair of their heads go loose nor to rend their clothes lest wrath come upon all the people: but let your brethren, the whole house of Israel, bewail the burning which the Lord hath kindled.

7 And ye shall not go out from the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, lest ye die: for the anointing oil of the Lord is upon you. And they did according to the word of Moses.

8 And the Lord spake unto Aaron, saying, 9 Do not drink wine nor strong drink, thou, nor thy sons with thee, when ye go into the tabernacle of the congregation, lest ye die: it shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations:

lest they should seem rebellious against the dealings of Jehovah. As priests they were to maintain the honor of Jehovah in all his ways and so always to be found ranged on his side. The people, however, were permitted to bewail the burning which Jehovah had kindled.

8-11. Priests forbidden to drink wine while officiating. Observe that the legislation of this paragraph is represented as given by Jehovah directly to Aaron. The term strong drink is used to designate any kind of strong beverage except wine made from the grape. The Hebrews applied the term to any drink prepared from wheat, barley, millet, the juice of apples or dates. There is no direct evidence that the process of distillation was known among the Hebrews.

There are in other parts of Scripture occasional mentions of religious feeling in connection with that of intoxication so suggestively introduced that it seems not altogether fanciful to note that perhaps the same juxtaposition occurs here. When the apostles after a prolonged period of prayer suddenly and for the first time experienced the ecstatic gift of tongues their mental exaltation was ascribed by some to drunkenness (Acts 2 : 13), as if there were some similarity on which to base the comparison. Paul exhorts the Ephesians to "be not drunk with wine . . . but be filled with the Spirit" (Eph. 5 : 18), as if at least the one suggested the other to his mind. The sons of Aaron are punished for offering strange fire, and in immediate connection with the act of divine judgment is given an interdiction of wine to priests on duty. Note too, that an object of the prohibition is that the distinction between the sacred and the secular may be kept clear. It seems as if the crime of the young men so signally punished must have been something more than a mere technical lapse in correctness of procedure. The strange fire was at least typical of, if not actually associated with, spurious religious feeling. Mental exaltation amounting to ecstasy has always been valued in religion, and if these rash celebrants had a sufficiently unethical conception of religion to think that such ecstasy, even when produced by wine, was pleasing to God, they were only on the same plane of thought with those conceptions which produced the rites of Dionysus and of corresponding deities in other nations. If the origin of their excitement was so palpable to the people that the influence of the whole scene would be, as in heathen religions, to exalt drunkenness as an ally to religion, the stern lesson was not incommensurate with the importance of the issue. The men were confusing the sacred and the profane. They were interposing a fatal hindrance to that emphasis of the ethical nature of religion which it was the genius of Hebrew cultus as well as prophecy to guard and foster.

The dignity and decorum of the priesthood which their sobriety was to help to preserve, was to seek, for its cherished effect on the people, the maintaining of the distinction between holy and common, between unclean and clean. This separating of the sacred from the secular is what determines the whole spirit and motive of ceremonial religion. It is given as a reason for the distinction of animals allowed for food (11 : 47), and it is frequently urged in the teaching of Ezekiel, whose spirit has so much in common with this priestly legislation (Ezek. 22 : 26 ; 42 : 20 ; 44 : 23). That prophet, indeed, with this motive, makes this same prohibition of wine for priests (Ezek. 44 : 21, 23). This characteristic of ceremonial religion has been referred to in the comments on chap. 1. It is the function of the priest to elaborate religion as a distinctive thing, and to keep it pure and conspicuous by its isolation from common life. His religion is not the whole of life, nor does it seek to be; it is the sacred side of life. Hence it develops its sacred places, sacred days, sacred observances, sacred objects. One who is penetrated with the feeling of this aspect of religion is rightly shocked at all careless invasion of the domain of the holy by temporal interests and strivings. Such a feeling made our Lord indignant when he found the temple area crowded with the activities of commerce. It is necessary that religion should thus have its separate places and times and solemn practices, that it may have a footing in the world, a fulcrum on which to rest its lever for the uplifting of humanity. But when this side of religion is cultivated exclusively, its isolation and orderly performance becomes an end in itself. Religion becomes the separate calling of the clergy, rather than a life for every one, and the man of worldly occupation gets the benefit of it only through the momentary magic of its sacraments. When men have performed their church duties they have discharged their obligations toward God, and the secular life is simply unrelated to him. This is the danger of religion founded solely on worship.

On the other hand the function of the prophet is to seek to make the motive and the strength of religion pervade all life. Besides elaborating itself and guarding its purity as a system of worship, religion must also enter the world as a system of righteousness. The sacred must pervade the secular. This was the aim of the prophets; they desired to make religion not only a sacred thing but a leaven. This aim was carried out still more extensively by Christianity, for Christianity was the culmination of Hebrew prophecy rather than of the Hebrew cultus. It was this tendency to diffuse and even dissipate the sacred in the interest of its effectiveness—to put it into the ground to die like a seed that it might bring forth fruit—which made the priestly interest and the temple interest instinctively feel that Christianity was its enemy (Matt. 26 : 61; Acts 6 : 13, 14). It is because the Judaism of the present time is not sufficiently in touch with the prophetic side of religion that it still lingers in the separations and exclusions of the spiritual life, even though its temple ritual has passed away. A rabbi of the last end of the nineteenth century recently summarized the modern Jewish belief in a creed of ten articles, the third of which is: "I believe in separating the sacred from the secular."

The teachings of Jesus and of the apostles, as already said, seem to indicate that the distinction of sacred and secular is not eternal. John saw no temple in heaven. But this necessity for the separation of religion from common life, like the rest of the law, will not pass away till all be fulfilled. While we are hedged about by the earthly necessity of labor, we must strenuously rescue and preserve one-seventh of our time for sacred rest. While the activities of this world are still so unpervaded with divine motive that they press upon us to make us forget God, there must be some special divine service so separate from the world as to keep us reminded of his holiness. The world cannot dispense with a religion of high enough unworldliness to make it conspicuous until that perfect time when all the common activity shall be pervaded with the Spirit of God, and the sacredness of the regenerate secular life shall be wholly manifest in its spirit and motive rather than in its form.

12-20. The eating part of the consecration ceremonial. The part of this consecration ceremonial which was likely to come up to the prescribed mark with most difficulty was the priests' partaking of the portions of the sacrifice which were to be eaten; and that because in the dreadful judgment upon Nadab and Abihu the man and father in Aaron, underneath the priest, had experienced a great shock; and there would not be much zest for eating. The austere Moses, who would elevate the priesthood above all natural weakness, was especially active as soon as that judgment had fallen, to prevent any letting down from the high key in which the priests' dignity and duty had been set. He was very prompt to forbid any outward manifestation of grief (ver. 6), and now he is particularly watchful that Aaron and his sons shall by actual eating form the precedent of claiming their perquisites (ver. 12-15), and fulfill to the letter their duties (ver. 16-18). They must not only subsist by the altar, but they must eat, whether they have any appetite or not. A higher degree of sanctity seems to be given to the meal offering than to the people's peace offerings. What remains of the meal offering from the fire offerings of Jehovah is called holy of holies, or most holy (ver. 12), and it is to be eaten by Aaron and his sons in a holy place; while the priests' portion of the peace offerings was to be eaten by Aaron and

14 And the wave breast and heave shoulder shall ye eat in a clean place; thou, and thy sons, and thy daughters with thee: for they be thy due, and thy sons' due, which are given out of the sacrifices of peace offerings of the children of Israel.

15 The heave shoulder and the wave breast shall they bring with the offerings made by fire of the fat, to wave it for a wave offering before the Lord; and it shall be thine, and thy sons' with thee, by a statute for ever; as the Lord hath commanded.

16 And Moses diligently sought the goat of the sin offering, and, behold, it was burnt: and he was angry with Eleazar and Ithamar, the sons of Aaron which were left alive, saying,

18 Behold, the blood of it was not brought in within the holy place: ye should indeed have eaten it in the holy place, as I commanded.

19 And Aaron said unto Moses, Behold, this day have they offered their sin offering and their burnt offering before the Lord; and such things have befallen me: and if I had eaten the sin offering to-day, should it have been accepted in the sight of the Lord?

20 And when Moses heard that, he was content.

And the wave breast and the heave thigh shall ye eat in a clean place; thou, and thy sons, and thy daughters with thee: for they are given as thy due, and thy sons' due, out of the sacrifices of the peace offerings of the children of Israel. his sons and his daughters in a clean place (ver. 14).

The rule had been made that no sin offering of which any of the blood had been brought into the sanctuary to make atonement in the holy place should be eaten (6 : 30); now the converse is insisted upon by the lawgiver, so solicitous for the integrity of his system and so jealous of natural weakness, that where the blood is not brought into the sanctuary the sin offering shall be eaten. But on looking for the hairy goat of the people's sin offering Moses finds it to have been burnt; and he is angry with Eleazar and Ithamar for not eating it in the holy place. The theory of the matter was, as Moses felt commanded, that such sin offerings by being officially eaten formally incorporated the sins of the people into the representatives of God, who thus bore their iniquities. But Aaron, who had been silent throughout all Moses' stern moralizing (ver. 3) and rigid conducting, now came to the defense of his own and his sons' moderate yielding to natural affection. After what had befallen them they felt hardly worthy to assume the people's sins as immaculate mediators. Despite the rigid letter of the law, would there have been heart enough in such a performance to be well-pleasing in the sight of Jehovah? Is not the mental preparation and sincerity of the worshiper of some consequence as well as the integrity of an ordinance? This little touch of the human in Aaron, just entering on his training for the stern self-repressions of the priesthood, was sufficient to give Moses the hint that sometimes the man may be above the law.

IV. LAWS OF PURIFICATION AND ATONEMENT, chap. 11 to 16.

We come now to the part of the Jewish ceremonial regulations which has had probably more influence on the national psychology and conscience than any other. This is the matter of uncleanness and purification. Beginning with the classification of animals not allowed as food, the legislation goes on to the subject of purification after childbirth and of impurity from secretions, to the exceptionally serious uncleanness of leprosy, with its diagnosis, its treatment, the procedure in reference to its analogue in garments and houses, and the rites connected with the restoration to sanctuary privileges of the patient who has recovered; and finally culminates with the great annual Day of Atonement, in which the whole sanctuary with its furniture is ceremonially cleansed from the imperceptible defilement which it has contracted by the services of the year. In this section the regulations in regard to uncleanness are made the more special topic of discussion, but this is far from containing the whole treatment of the subject. It is repeatedly mentioned all through the priestly legislation. The thought of defilement and contamination from without seemed to dominate the whole Jewish religious consciousness, and it has had more influence than any other in making and keeping the Jews the exceptional and separate race which they are to this day.

Sin, so far as it could come within the benefit of expiation at all, was treated as a defilement; and this aspect of it was necessarily more physical than ethical. Perhaps this conception of sin as a defilement was the only one which could make the efficacy of the expiatory rites thinkable at all. The semi-physical and expiable class of sins, thus brought under the cognizance of the priest, came to have an enhanced influence in determining men's notions of the relative importance of transgressions. Under the influence of the moral law and of growingly spiritual conceptions of God, religion was bound to grow more ethical, but its ethics would have, so to speak, a physical cast, and would cause that evil which consisted in physical defilement to have a somewhat overbalanced importance. The purely physical and instinctive aversions with regard to food which had grown with the people from the earliest times were formulated as a part of religion, and thus were put in the way of increasing in ethical estimation as the religion to which they were attached grew more ethical. The Jew was not only defiled but made guilty by accidental contacts and lapses which originally had only a physical significance.

A main consideration which made the Jews especially sensitive to the dread of defilement was their consciousness of their dignity as a holy and separate people. Their world mission to be holy unto Jehovah was given in the earliest extant legislation as the motive for not eating that which had been torn by beasts (Exod. 22 : 31). It was emphatically urged in the priest code, especially in the so-called law of holiness, as the incentive, not only for ethical uprightness (19 : 2, 3 ; 20 : 6, 7), but for such strictness with regard to physical uncleanness as is contemplated in this section (11 : 44, 45 ; 20 : 25, 26). They were taught that they were to be a nation of priests, and this consciousness of a priestly dignity engendered the obligation to be patterns to the world of a priestly immaculateness. A passion for external purity was thus not only a cause but a consequence of their separateness as a nation ; and when through their extraordinary political vicissitudes they were singled out from the nations and thrown in more and more upon themselves, the purificatory side of religion and morals seemed to dominate their enthusiasm more and more, until under rabbinic influence it seemed as if almost the whole of religious thought summed itself up in the consideration of what was defiling and what was not.

By the time of Christ the laborious washings and purifications had become so exacting and characteristic as to obtrude themselves on the attention in every picture of Jewish domestic or religious life. Our Lord's first miracle was wrought on material that chanced to be at hand

"after the manner of the purifying of the Jews" (John 2 : 6). The attempt to draw John the Baptist into a rivalry with his Master grew out of a dispute which arose between some of his disciples and a Jew about purifying (John 3 : 25). The first whispers of antagonism to the Saviour's work in Galilee were set in motion because the disciples ate their food with "common" hands (Mark 7 : 2, 5). Mark especially sets forth the laboriousness of Pharisaic customs in regard to ablutions (Mark 7 : 3, 4). A note of the temporariness of Jewish religion, to New Testament writers, was its slavery to "meats and drinks and divers washings" (Heb. 9 : 10). Paul labored to free his disciples from the "touch not, taste not, handle not" of ceremonial slavery (Col. 2 : 21), and emphasized the spirituality of the kingdom of God by insisting that it is not meat and drink, but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost (Rom. 14 : 17). Even Peter, when God would teach him that the old national exclusiveness must be broken down if he would follow the leadings of aggressive Christianity, had to be conquered by a direct attack on those scruples with regard to clean and unclean animals in which his prejudices no doubt had their stronghold (Acts 10 : 12, seq.).

In dealing with that universal defect of the Judaism of his day our Lord implied that the whole conception of defilement had built itself up on a fundamentally erroneous principle. The Jewish conscience had become almost exclusively sensitive to contamination from outside. The primary conception of moral peril was that it is the world around which makes men evil. But Jesus set forth the antagonistic principle in a universal thesis which is no less than revolutionary: "Not that which entereth into the mouth defileth the man; but that which proceedeth out of the mouth, this defileth the man. . . . The things which proceed out of the mouth come forth out of the heart; and they defile the man" (Matt. 15 : 11, 18). Here is a principle worthy of Him who contracted not defilement from touching the leper, but communicated purity. Life and purity work from within outward. Saving religion is not a defensive but an aggressive attitude. It is not the business of the god-like to stand still and keep out the evil by contamination-proof precautions, but to go forth into the world with an abounding life which shall touch but expel the evil. A wonderful principle this, and one which, in the face of centuries of the opposite way of thinking, no one but a divine being could have had the strength to assert; though when once the principle was announced an enlightened and broad-minded Paul could so far follow his Lord out of the bondage of mere defensive scruple into the aggressive freedom of a conquering gospel as to teach that "every creature of God is good, and nothing to be rejected, if it be received with thanksgiving" (1 Tim. 4 : 4).

4 Nevertheless these shall ye not eat of them that chew the cud, or of them that divide the hoof: as the camel, because he cheweth the cud, but divideth not the hoof: he is unclean unto you.

That the Jews of the New Testament time, taking their start from these priestly regulations, came gradually to form their religious life on the very opposite of the true principle, however, does not prove that the ceremonial laws enjoining purity were merely human and misleading. They were divine and right in their sphere. They were the most effective possible hold on the conscience of their time—a conscience which could not rise above the defilement conception of sin. They engendered a carefulness about contracting uncleanness from without which is an indispensable element of religion at its defensive stage. This carefulness, merely physical at first, was a parable of and a preparation for a similar carefulness in the spiritual realm. In spiritual things it is as important that we keep evil influences from invading us from without as that we mortify the impulses to evil which proceed from within. The defensive duty belongs to true religion, even though it be true religion of lower intensity than the life-imparting aggressiveness of Christian love. The miscarriage of the law was due to the mechanical lifelessness of Jewish thought. The fault of the Jews was over estimation and idolatry of negative purity. Freedom from defilement is good and needful, worthy indeed of divine legislation, but it cannot impart positive life. The ceremonially clean man is not thereby constituted a good man—he is only a man who is not infected with a particular kind of badness. The only possible positive goodness flows from a heart of love within. It was because the Jews, immured in their proud and separate defensiveness, were seeking to derive all their goodness from personal purity that they fell into disparagement before the might of our Lord's positive principle of life.

Chap. II. CLEAN AND UNCLEAN ANIMALS.

This is one of the places in Leviticus where Jehovah speaks to Moses and Aaron jointly. The others are 13 : 1; 15 : 1.

1-8. Quadrupeds. A very ready general rule for distinguishing clean and unclean quadrupeds is given. Only those that part the hoof, so as to be completely cloven-footed, and chew the cud are to be eaten. An animal with one of these characteristics without the other could not be allowed as food, as, for instance, the camel, whose foot is only imperfectly cleft though he is a ruminant; the coney, or, rather, hyrax Syriacus, and the hare, which are here stated to be ruminants, and also the swine, which parts the hoof but does not bring up the cud. The hyrax is a very timid gregarious pachyderm living among the rocks (Ps. 104 : 18; Prov. 30 : 26). It is not a ruminant, nor is the hare, but these animals have a habit of moving the jaws when at rest as if chewing, and so might easily be mistaken for ruminants. Moses is not giving a scientific description of these animals, but identifying them by characteristics familiar to the common people. The pig is probably prohibited on account of its dirty habits and because its flesh, particularly in warm climates, is very generally regarded as unwholesome. The law regarding quadrupeds is given in Deuteronomy in a somewhat more detailed form (Deut. 14 : 4-8).

9-12. Aquatic creatures. In regard to these creatures also a very distinct general principle whatsoever hath fins and scales in the waters, in the seas, and in the rivers, them shall ye eat.

10 And all that have not fins and scales in the seas, and in the rivers, of all that move in the waters, and of any living thing which is in the waters, they shall be an abomination unto you;

11 They shall be even an abomination unto you; ye shall not eat of their flesh, but ye shall have their carcases in abomination.

12 Whatsoever hath no fins nor scales in the waters, that shall be an abomination unto you.

of classification is possible. Only those aquatic animals which have fins and scales are allowed as food.

13-19. Flying creatures. (1) Birds. No general rule for distinguishing unclean from clean birds is given, but only a list of twenty kinds of birds that are not to be eaten. So far as identified, these are all birds that live on animal food. In the extreme difficulty of identifying the species that are designated by the Hebrew names some hesitation is felt in appending a revised translation of the list as found in our version: "The griffin vulture, and the bearded vulture, and the osprey; and the kite, and the falcon after its kind; every raven after its kind; and the ostrich, and the screech-owl, and the sea-mew, and the hawk after its kind; and the little owl, and the cormorant, and the great owl; and the ibis, and the pelican, and the carrion vulture; and the stork, and the great plover after its kind, and the hoopoe, and the bat." In calling the bat a bird of course the popular notion is followed. 20-23. (2) Flying insects. The Hebrew expression is, "all swarming things with wings," the word, שָׂרְצָתַי, sh'v'rtz, translated in our English version, creeping things, referring to their swarming or breeding in immense numbers rather than to their mode of locomotion. "Going upon all four" probably means going with the body in a horizontal position like a quadruped, the phrase not being intended, even in ver. 23, to limit strictly the number of feet, which with many flying insects is more than four. Permission is given to eat such flying insects as have distinctly defined legs for leaping, and four kinds of locusts are specified. We have no means for identifying these species, and the English translation is pure guesswork. Locusts are still eaten by the poor among many Arab tribes. Along with wild honey they constituted the food of John the Baptist (Matt. 3 : 4).

24-40. On the pollution caused by contact with the carcasses of certain animals. This section appears to be of a different order from the rest of the chapter in that it describes the creatures which are not only not to be eaten but whose carcasses are not to be touched, and also defines the purification rendered necessary by defilement. It may possibly not be a part of the original draft of the chapter, as its peculiar contents are ignored by the subscription (ver. 46, 47).

24-28. Recapitulation. Recapitulating first the quadrupeds already designated as not to be

29-38. Then some of the smaller animals, whether quadrupeds or reptiles, such as are most likely to come in contact with food or domestic utensils in the houses are specified, and the treatment of the defilement which may be accidentally caused by them indicated. These animals are roughly classed as creeping or swarming things. The meaning of the Hebrew terms designating these animals is for the most part obscure, but the Revised version represents perhaps as high a degree of exactness as is at present attainable. The person who touched their dead bodies was to be unclean for the remainder of the day; any garment or vessel of wood, or skin or sack, on which they were found was to be soaked in water and withheld from use as unclean for the day, when an earthen vessel was to be broken. A fountain or cistern in which a considerable quantity of water was stored could hardly be subjected as a constant practice to the minute inspection necessary to keep it rid of every small dead thing, and so was presumed in ordinary circumstances to be clean. Seed, except when saturated with defiled water, was considered clean. 39, 40. Finally it is specified that the person who touched the carcase—i. e., perhaps the body when not properly slaughtered (see 17 : 15)—even of an animal which was allowed as food was to be unclean until evening, and if he had eaten of it or had carried it away he was in addition to wash his clothes. The regulation was made in the earlier part of the book (5 : 2) that these defilements, if inadvertent and so not followed by the guarded deportment of one consciously polluted, were on their discovery to be expiated by a sin offering.

41 And every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth shall be an abomination; it shall not be eaten.

42 Whatsoever goeth upon the belly, and whatsoever goeth upon all four, or whatsoever hath more feet among all creeping things that creep upon the earth, them ye shall not eat; for they are an abomination.

43 Ye shall not make your selves abominable with any creeping thing that creepeth, neither shall ye make yourselves unclean with them, that ye should be defiled thereby.

44 For I am the Lord your God; ye shall therefore sanctify yourselves, and ye shall be holy; for I am holy; neither shall ye defile yourselves with any manner of creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth.

45 For I am the Lord that bringeth you up out of the land of Egypt, to be your God; ye shall therefore be holy, for I am holy.

46 This is the law of the beasts, and of the fowl, and of every living creature that moveth in the waters, and of every creature that creepeth upon the earth:

47 To make a difference between the unclean and the clean, and between the beast that may be eaten and the beast that may not be eaten.

41 And every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth is an abomination; it shall not be eaten.

42 Whatsoever goeth upon the belly, and whatsoever goeth upon all four, or whatsoever hath many feet, even all creeping things that creep upon the earth, them ye shall not eat; for

43 they are an abomination. Ye shall not make yourselves abominable with any creeping thing that creepeth, neither shall ye make yourselves unclean with them, that ye should be defiled

44 thereby. For I am the Lord your God; sanctify yourselves therefore, and be ye holy; for I am holy; neither shall ye defile yourselves with any manner of creeping thing that moveth

45 upon the earth. For I am the Lord that brought you up out of the land of Egypt, to be your God; ye shall therefore be holy, for I am holy.

46 This is the law of the beast, and of the fowl, and of every living creature that moveth in the waters, and of every creature that creepeth

47 upon the earth; to make a difference between the unclean and the clean, and between the living thing that may be eaten and the living thing that may not be eaten.

41-47. Creeping insects and reptiles; Subscription. The legislation now returns to the consideration of animals that are not to be eaten at all. Creeping insects and reptiles are called in the Hebrew, "swarming things that swarm upon the earth," and are thus distinguished from "swarming things of wing" considered in ver. 20-23. 42. These animals are totally prohibited as food, the legal and explicit description of the prohibited kinds being whatsoever goeth upon the belly, as snakes and worms, whatsoever goeth on all four, i. e., probably small quadrupeds like weasels and mice (see ver. 29) which are considered as vermin, and whatsoever hath more, many, feet, like centipedes and caterpillars.

The spiritual ground or motive of these distinctions between clean and unclean was the general obligation of being holy as God is holy. The carefully cultivated abhorrence, particularly of slimy, swarming things, in the nation connected itself intimately with their notion of the divine purity. It gave them a conception of God's holiness which derived its point and vividness from antagonism with all that is physically abominable. Their intense abhorrence of the practices of surrounding nations in this regard (see Isa. 65 : 4; 66 : 17) rendered their sense of the divine holiness also a sense of their own separateness from the other peoples of the earth, a separateness which these carefully guarded distinctions in food were intended to maintain (cf. 10 : 10; 20 : 25, 26). The act of God in bringing them out of the land of Egypt—separating them from the nations (ver. 45)—is therefore cited as a prime motive for maintaining these distinctions.

44, 45. These solemn sanctions, I am the Lord, . . . be ye holy; for I am holy, are among the most characteristic marks of the law of holiness, that distinct and perhaps earlier stratum of the priest code beginning at chap. 17. These marks, with others which to trained observation are hardly less distinctive, have led modern critics to regard this whole chapter, with the exception of the interpolated verses (24-40), as incorporated from that particular documentary source.

It will be observed that the subscription or appended title strictly covers only the four classes of creatures that may not be eaten and ignores the contents of the inserted verses (24-40), which relate to creatures whose carcasses are not to be touched.

Chap. 12. PURIFICATION AFTER CHILD-BIRTH. This chapter would more naturally follow chap. 15, with which it is connected in subject. The latter chapter as it now stands has no connection either with the preceding or following chapter, and if it were removed from its present position and placed before this chapter it would keep the three great classes of uncleanness treated of in the priestly law grouped each by itself. Those three classes of uncleanness are: (1) defilement from secretions, particularly from the organs of generation (chap. 12, 15); (2) uncleanness from leprosy (chap. 13, 14), and (3) pollution from contact with a dead body. The last species of defilement is considered in Num. 19.

Those who would reduce the whole Hebrew idea of defilement to some connection with death and decomposition as repugnant to the Deity, just as holiness in an object results from some contact or union with the Deity, find a great deal of difficulty in bringing the impurity from childbirth under their category. This form of impurity connects itself with reproduction and life rather than with death. What there should be repugnant to Deity, as the source of life, in this natural process it is hard to see. But as a matter of fact, must we not find more in the Hebrew idea of death as opposed to God, than simply the thought of dissolution? May it not be an idea which includes all that is made necessary in the world by reason of the reign of death?

We have already seen that sin as an expiable condition was to the Hebrew mind a defilement hardly distinguished from a physical state. Moreover, to the one contemplating a higher degree of consecration as his chosen form of life, the merely natural state becomes sinful. "Creatural unsanctification and moral imperfection are not clearly separated. The heavens are not clean before God; he findeth fault with his holy ones (Job 4: 18, seq.). In the liturgical sphere of worship, indeed, the idea of creatural unsanctification, of distance between Creator and creature, is the prevailing one" (SCHULTZ). Now that this unsanctification, or impurity in the presence of ineffable holiness, connected itself with the thought of death is undoubtedly true; but the death thought of is death in the widest sense—the whole condition of being mortal. That condition was characterized just as much by the reproduction through which the fleeting generations were replaced, as by the dissolution which removed them. To the poetic mind the intensest feeling of the divine displeasure arose in connection with the thought of the contrast between the creatures of a day and the unchanging One who was their dwelling-place "in generation and generation." The author of the ninetieth Psalm can find but one meaning in the brevity of life, and that is the divine indignation. "All our days are passed away in thy wrath: we finish our years like a sigh" (Ps. 90: 9). In all this psalm, which is one prolonged breathing of tender penitence, there is but the slightest mention of personal iniquity, and that only as the concrete object of the divine omniscience. It is throughout a confession of transitoriness as subject to God's anger; and it ends in the prayer for such permanence as comes through what the ages accomplish (ver. 17), if not through individual immortality. To the Hebrew thus imbued, in his inspired moments, with the thought of his creatural changeableness as hateful to God, the events of birth and death, and all connected with a mortal state, might equally be a reminder of that separation from God which is the penalty of sin, and might well become the occasion of ceremonial precautions and lustrations until the sense of cleanness before God should be restored.

In that account of the origin of human sin which became incorporated into Hebrew belief as a part of primeval history (Gen. 3), the state of guilt and shame following on the disobedience of the first pair is mysteriously and significantly connected with their sexual nature. They are threatened with death as the penalty of eating the fruit, and yet when they have transgressed they do not literally die but become sexually self-conscious. The sentence pronounced on the woman too, is a dooming to that pain in connection with childbirth which ever reminds the suffering mother that there is something abnormal and opposed to blessedness even in the act of bringing a new life into the world. The sentence, "Thou shalt surely die," must have meant, even to the remote author who could let it stand in his account without sense of contradiction, "Thou shalt surely become mortal, subject to the restless round of birth, change, and death, a petty contrast and abhorrence to the blessed life of the Eternal." Sin as death meant sin as mortality. That "creatural unsanctification" which was the basis of the sense of uncleanness arose to consciousness not only through contact with death, or disease which might be taken as death in its inception, but through the natural operation, at least in the woman, of those laws of reproduction which are the concomitant of human change. Hence the woman, on the occasion of childbirth, becomes subject to an uncleanness which requires lustration and sacrifice.

"Uncleanness was generally ascribed to childbirth, according to the usages of the most ancient nations." The Hindus, Parsees, Arabs, Greeks, and Romans had regulations requiring purification on the part of the mother, and the imputation of impurity sometimes extended to the whole family. In almost all cases too, the period of forty days was regarded as a critical interval (cf. ver. 2, 4) in connection with the event.

The impurity from secretions which attached to the male (see chap. 15) was reckoned only in connection with an accidental or morbid discharge, and the feeling of uncleanness could perhaps be accounted for by the natural disgust at having the substance in contact with the

CHAPTER XII.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,
 2 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, if a woman have conceived seed, and born a man child: then she shall be unclean seven days; according to the days of the separation for her infirmity shall she be unclean.
 3 And in the eighth day the flesh of his foreskin shall be circumcised.
 4 And she shall then continue in the blood of her purifying three and thirty days; she shall touch no hallowed thing, nor come into the sanctuary, until the days of her purifying be fulfilled.
 5 But if she bear a maid child, then she shall be unclean two weeks, as in her separation: and she shall continue in the blood of her purifying threescore and six days.
 6 And when the days of her purifying are fulfilled, for a son, or for a daughter, she shall bring a lamb of the first year for a burnt offering, and a young pigeon, or a turtledove, for a sin offering, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, unto the priest:
 7 Who shall offer it before the Lord, and make an atonement for her; and she shall be cleansed from the issue of her blood. This is the law for her that hath born a male or a female.
 8 And if she be not able to bring a lamb, then she shall bring two turtles, or two young pigeons; the one for the burnt offering, and the other for a sin offering: and the priest shall make an atonement for her, and she shall be clean.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,
 2 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, If a woman conceive seed, and bear a man child, then she shall be unclean seven days; as in the days of the impurity of her sickness shall she
 3 be unclean. And in the eighth day the flesh of 4 his foreskin shall be circumcised. And she shall continue in the blood of her purifying three and thirty days; she shall touch no hallowed thing, nor come into the sanctuary, until
 5 the days of her purifying be fulfilled. But if she bear a maid child, then she shall be unclean two weeks, as in her impurity: and she shall continue in the blood of her purifying
 6 threescore and six days. And when the days of her purifying are fulfilled, for a son, or for a daughter, she shall bring a lamb of the first year for a burnt offering, and a young pigeon, or a turtledove, for a sin offering, unto the door of the tent of meeting, unto the priest: and
 7 he shall offer it before the Lord, and make atonement for her; and she shall be cleansed from the fountain of her blood. This is the law for her that beareth, whether a male or a female.
 8 And if her means suffice not for a lamb, then she shall take two turtledoves, or two young pigeons; the one for a burnt offering, and the other for a sin offering: and the priest shall make atonement for her, and she shall be clean.

skin or clothing; but the woman was made unclean by the natural infirmity of her sex and by the normal function of motherhood, as if her act of visibly producing new life were second only to death and decay as a reminder of that mortality which is the greatest contrast to the God who ever lives.

1. Unto Moses, instead of to Moses and Aaron as in the preceding and following chapters. 2. According to the days of the separation for her infirmity presupposes a knowledge of the regulation in 15: 19. For seven days, in the case of a boy baby, the woman was "unclean," i. e., in such a state as to communicate defilement to whatever she touched. 4. For thirty-three days thereafter she was in the blood of her purifying, and was debarred from touching any sanctified thing or coming into the sanctuary. The boundary between the period of uncleanness and that of purifying was marked by the circumcision of the child on the eighth day (see Gen. 17: 10, 13). In the case of a female child the period of "uncleanness" and of the "blood of purifying" was doubled. The notion seems to have been common in ancient times that a woman suffered longer after the birth of a girl than after that of a boy. On the completion of the days of purifying, whether for a boy or a girl, a sacrifice was to be brought consisting of a lamb, a son of his year, for a burnt offering, and a young pigeon or a turtle-dove for a sin offering. The degree of sinfulness implied seems to be light.

In the case of poverty even the lamb might be replaced by another turtle-dove or young pigeon. In the time of Christ it was either customary to dispense with the lamb of the burnt offering, or else the mother of our Lord was compelled by her poverty to content herself with the less expensive sacrifice (see Luke 2: 24).

Chap. 13. LEPROSY. 1-46. Diagnosis of leprosy in man. "The leprosy is the most terrible of all the disorders to which the body of man is subject. There is no disease in which hope of recovery is so nearly extinguished. From a commencement slight in appearance, with but little pain or inconvenience, often in its earlier stage insidiously disappearing and reappearing, it goes on in its strong but sluggish course, generally in defiance of the efforts of medical skill, until it reduces the patient to a mutilated cripple with dulled or obliterated senses, the voice turned to a croak, and ghastly deformity of features. When it reaches some vital part it generally occasions what seem like the symptoms of a distinct disease (most often dysentery), and so puts an end to the life of the sufferer."

The Hebrew term, צָרַעַת, tsāra'āth, used in this chapter, is considered by the best authorities to refer not to common leprosy (lepra vulgaris), which is a different and far more superficial disease, as indicated in ver. 12, 13, but to what is known to physicians as elephantiasis. Of this two forms are distinguished, the tuber-

CHAPTER XIII.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses and Aaron, saying,

2 When a man shall have in the skin of his flesh a rising, a scab, or bright spot, and it be in the skin of his flesh like the plague of leprosy; then he shall be brought unto Aaron the priest, or unto one of his sons the priests:

3 And the priest shall look on the plague in the skin of the flesh: and when the hair in the plague is turned white, and the plague in sight be deeper than the skin of his flesh, it is a plague of leprosy: and the priest shall look on him, and pronounce him unclean.

4 If the bright spot be white in the skin of his flesh, and in sight be not deeper than the skin, and the hair thereof be not turned white; then the priest shall shut up him that hath the plague seven days:

5 And the priest shall look on him the seventh day: and, behold, if the plague in his sight be at a stay, and the plague spread not in the skin; then the priest shall shut him up seven days more:

6 And the priest shall look on him again the seventh day: and, behold, if the plague be somewhat dark, and the plague spread not in the skin, the priest shall pronounce him clean: it is but a scab: and he shall wash his clothes, and be clean.

7 But if the scab spread much abroad in the skin, after that he hath been seen of the priest for his cleansing, he shall be seen of the priest again:

8 And if the priest see that, behold, the scab spreadeth in the skin, then the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is a leprosy.

9 When the plague of leprosy is in a man, then he shall be brought unto the priest;

10 And the priest shall see him: and, behold, if the rising be white in the skin, and it have turned the hair white, and there be quick raw flesh in the rising;

11 It is an old leprosy in the skin of his flesh, and the priest shall pronounce him unclean, and shall not shut him up: for he is unclean.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses and unto

2 Aaron, saying, When a man shall have in the skin of his flesh a rising, or a scab, or a bright spot, and it become in the skin of his flesh the plague of leprosy, then he shall be brought unto Aaron the priest, or unto one of his sons the

3 priests: and the priest shall look on the plague in the skin of the flesh: and if the hair in the plague be turned white, and the appearance of the plague be deeper than the skin of his flesh, it is the plague of leprosy: and the priest shall

4 look on him, and pronounce him unclean. And if the bright spot be white in the skin of his flesh, and the appearance thereof be not deeper than the skin, and the hair thereof be not turned white, then the priest shall shut up him that hath

5 the plague seven days: and the priest shall look on him the seventh day: and, behold, if in his eyes the plague be at a stay, and the plague be not spread in the skin, then the priest shall shut

6 him up seven days more: and the priest shall look on him again the seventh day: and, behold, if the plague be dim, and the plague be not spread in the skin, then the priest shall pronounce him clean: it is a scab: and he shall

7 wash his clothes, and be clean. But if the scab spread abroad in the skin, after that he hath shewn himself to the priest for his cleansing, he

8 shall shew himself to the priest again: and the priest shall look, and, behold, if the scab be spread in the skin, then the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is leprosy.

9 When the plague of leprosy is in a man, then

10 he shall be brought unto the priest; and the priest shall look, and, behold, if there be a white rising in the skin, and it have turned the hair white, and there be quick raw flesh in the

culated elephantiasis, and the anæsthetic or non-tuberculated elephantiasis, the former being characterized by the formation of tubercles in the face or other parts of the body, and later by a swollen and horribly deformed appearance of the face with its livid, encrusted, and ulcerated tubercles, and the latter by often breaking out in shining bullæ in the forehead (2 Chron. 26:19, 20) and afterward attacking the joints and making them devoid of sensation, and finally causing fingers and toes and even limbs gradually to drop off. The former is sometimes called humid or black leprosy, and the latter dry or white leprosy. The tuberculated form is at the present day the most common in Egypt and Syria, though the two in many cases work together.

1-8. First marks of leprosy. The features of the disease described here in Leviticus are not the advanced and developed characteristics, but the symptoms belonging to its earlier stages, and while its presence is a matter of doubt. 2. The first appearance which calls for the attention of the priest is a rising, i. e., inflamed patch, or a scab or cicatrix, or a bright, or, glossy, spot. If on examination the priest finds the hair on this spot to have turned white and its appearance to be deeper than the surface or scarf skin, the case is at once decided; the priest is to pronounce him unclean. If, however, these two decisive marks are wanting, it is a case of doubt, and the priest is to shut up the patient for seven days. If at the end of that time the disease does not seem to have advanced, the priest is required to shut him up seven days more. If on the second examination the plague has grown somewhat faint or dim the priest pronounces the person clean; it is only a common scab; but if the disease has advanced much in the skin it is leprosy.

9-11. Confirmed leprosy. The case here contemplated seems to be that of a person who has deferred showing himself to the priest until the disease has reached a more advanced stage.

10. The decisive mark is quick raw flesh, lit., the quickening of living flesh, in the rising. This may refer to an ulcer or open sore with "proud flesh" in it, or it may refer to the excessive tenderness of the bullæ in anæsthetic elephantiasis before it becomes insensible. 11. Shall not shut him up, i. e., shall not subject him to the periods of quarantine for purposes of examination.

12 And if a leprosy break out abroad in the skin, and the leprosy cover all the skin of him that hath the plague from his head even to his foot, wheresoever the priest looketh;

13 Then the priest shall consider: and, behold, if the leprosy have covered all his flesh, he shall pronounce him clean that hath the plague: it is all turned white: he is clean.

14 But when raw flesh appeareth in him, he shall be unclean.

15 And the priest shall see the raw flesh, and pronounce him to be unclean: for the raw flesh is unclean: it is a leprosy.

16 Or if the raw flesh turn again, and be changed unto white, he shall come unto the priest;

17 And the priest shall see him: and, behold, if the plague be turned into white; then the priest shall pronounce him clean that hath the plague: he is clean.

18 The flesh also, in which, even in the skin thereof, was a boil, and is healed,

19 And in the place of the boil there be a white rising, or a bright spot, white, and somewhat reddish, and it be shewed to the priest;

20 And if, when the priest seeth it, behold, it be in sight lower than the skin, and the hair thereof be turned white; the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is a plague of leprosy broken out of the boil.

21 But if the priest look on it, and, behold, there be no white hairs therein, and if it be not lower than the skin, but be somewhat dark; then the priest shall shut him up seven days:

22 And if it spread much abroad in the skin, then the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is a plague.

23 But if the bright spot stay in his place, and spread not, it is a burning boil; and the priest shall pronounce him clean.

24 Or if there be any flesh, in the skin whereof there is a hot burning, and the quick flesh that burneth have a white bright spot, somewhat reddish, or white;

25 Then the priest shall look upon it: and, behold, if the hair in the bright spot be turned white, and it be in sight deeper than the skin; it is a leprosy broken out of the burning: wherefore the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is the plague of leprosy.

26 But if the priest look on it, and, behold, there be no white hair in the bright spot, and it be no lower than the other skin, but be somewhat dark; then the priest shall shut him up seven days:

27 And the priest shall look upon him the seventh day: and if it be spread much abroad in the skin, then the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is the plague of leprosy.

28 And if the bright spot stay in his place, and spread not in the skin, but it be somewhat dark; it is a rising of the burning, and the priest shall pronounce him clean: for it is an inflammation of the burning.

12 unclean. And if the leprosy break out abroad in the skin, and the leprosy cover all the skin of him that hath the plague from his head even to

13 his feet, as far as appeareth to the priest; then the priest shall look: and, behold, if the leprosy have covered all his flesh, he shall pronounce him clean that hath the plague: it is all turned

14 white: he is clean. But whensoever raw flesh

15 appeareth in him, he shall be unclean. And the priest shall look on the raw flesh, and pronounce

16 him unclean: the raw flesh is unclean: it is leprosy. Or if the raw flesh turn again, and be

17 changed unto white, then he shall come unto the priest, and the priest shall look on him: and, behold, if the plague be turned into white, 18 then the priest shall pronounce him clean that hath the plague: he is clean.

19 And when the flesh hath in the skin thereof a

20 boil, and it is healed, and in the place of the boil there is a white rising, or a bright spot, reddish-white, then it shall be shewed to the priest;

21 and the priest shall look, and, behold, if the appearance thereof be lower than the skin, and the hair thereof be turned white, then the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is the plague

22 of leprosy, it hath broken out in the boil. But if the priest look on it, and, behold, there be no white hairs therein, and it be not lower than the skin, but be dim, then the priest shall shut

23 him up seven days: and if it spread abroad in the skin, then the priest shall pronounce him

24 unclean: it is a plague. But if the bright spot stay in its place, and be not spread, it is the scar of the boil; and the priest shall pronounce him

25 clean.

26 Or when the flesh hath in the skin thereof a burning by fire, and the quick flesh of the burning become a bright spot, reddish-white, or

27 white; then the priest shall look upon it: and, behold, if the hair in the bright spot be turned

28 white, and the appearance thereof be deeper than the skin; it is leprosy, it hath broken out in the burning: and the priest shall pronounce

29 him unclean: it is the plague of leprosy. But if the priest look on it, and, behold, there be no

30 white hair in the bright spot, and it be no lower than the skin, but be dim; then the priest shall

31 shut him up seven days: and the priest shall look upon him the seventh day: if it spread

32 abroad in the skin, then the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is the plague of leprosy.

33 And if the bright spot stay in its place, and be not spread in the skin, but be dim; it is the rising of the burning, and the priest shall pronounce

34 him clean: for it is the scar of the burning.

12-17. Common leprosy. An eruption which has so spread as to cover the whole body, turning it white, and yet without any raw flesh or ulcers appearing anywhere on the surface, cannot be true elephantiasis. It is only a case of lepra vulgaris, or dry tetter, "which, although an affection often of long duration, frequently disappears spontaneously, and is never malignant." If, however, the ulcers at any time appear, unless they prove only temporary, they are to be taken as indications of true leprosy, thus rendering the patient unclean.

18-28. Special cases of leprosy. The first case noticed in this passage is where an ulcer has healed leaving a scar; or perhaps where, as sometimes happens, the tubercles or bullæ of elephantiasis itself seem to subside and leave a scar, and in the scar appears a rising or white or reddish spot. The decisive mark in this, as in all other cases, is the presence of white hairs in the rising or spot and its appearing deeper than the scarf skin. This at once decides it as leprosy. Where this mark does not occur another sign is looked for after the patient has been secluded for seven days, namely, whether the disease advances. If not, the priest is to consider it simply the scar of the ulcer; but if it does, the patient is pronounced unclean.

29 If a man or woman have a plague upon the head or the beard;

30 Then the priest shall see the plague: and, behold, if it be in sight deeper than the skin; and there be in it a yellow thin hair; then the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is a dry scall, even a leprosy upon the head or beard.

31 And if the priest look on the plague of the scall, and, behold, it be not in the sight deeper than the skin, and that there is no black hair in it; then the priest shall shut up him that hath the plague of the scall seven days:

32 And in the seventh day the priest shall look on the plague: and, behold, if the scall spread not, and there be in it no yellow hair, and the scall be not in sight deeper than the skin;

33 He shall be shaven, but the scall shall he not shave; and the priest shall shut up him that hath the scall seven days more:

34 And in the seventh day the priest shall look on the scall: and, behold, if the scall be not spread in the skin, nor be in sight deeper than the skin; then the priest shall pronounce him clean: and he shall wash his clothes, and be clean.

35 But if the scall spread much in the skin after his cleansing;

36 Then the priest shall look on him: and, behold, if the scall be spread in the skin, the priest shall not seek for yellow hair; he is unclean.

37 But if the scall be in his sight at a stay, and that there is black hair grown up therein; the scall is healed, he is clean: and the priest shall pronounce him clean.

38 If a man also or a woman have in the skin of their flesh bright spots, even white bright spots;

39 Then the priest shall look: and, behold, if the bright spots in the skin of their flesh be darkish white; it is a freckled spot that groweth in the skin; he is clean.

40 And the man whose hair is fallen off his head, he is bald; yet is he clean.

41 And he that hath his hair fallen off from the part of his head toward his face, he is forehead bald; yet is he clean.

42 And if there be in the bald head, or bald forehead, a white reddish sore; it is a leprosy sprung up in his bald head, or his bald forehead.

43 Then the priest shall look upon it: and, behold, if the rising of the sore be white reddish in his bald head, or in his bald forehead, as the leprosy appeareth in the skin of the flesh;

29 And when a man or woman hath a plague upon the head or upon the beard, then the priest shall look on the plague: and, behold, if the appearance thereof be deeper than the skin, and there be in it yellow thin hair, then the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is a scall, it is leprosy of the head or of the beard.

31 And if the priest look on the plague of the scall, and, behold, the appearance thereof be not deeper than the skin, and there be no black hair in it, then the priest shall shut up him that hath the plague of the scall seven days: and in the seventh day the priest shall look on the plague: and, behold, if the scall be not spread, and there be in it no yellow hair, and the appearance of the scall be not deeper than the skin, then he shall be shaven, but the scall shall he not shave; and the priest shall shut up him that hath the scall seven days more: and in the seventh day the priest shall look on the scall: and, behold, if the scall be not spread in the skin, and the appearance thereof be not deeper than the skin; then the priest shall pronounce him clean: and he shall wash his clothes, and be clean.

32 And in the seventh day the priest shall look on the scall: and, behold, if the scall be not spread in the skin, nor be in sight deeper than the skin; then the priest shall pronounce him clean: and he shall wash his clothes, and be clean.

33 But if the scall spread much in the skin after his cleansing; then the priest shall look on him: and, behold, if the scall be spread in the skin, the priest shall not seek for the yellow hair; he is unclean.

34 But if the scall be in his eyes the scall be at a stay, and black hair be grown up therein; the scall is healed, he is clean: and the priest shall pronounce him clean.

35 And when a man or a woman hath in the skin of their flesh bright spots, even white bright spots; then the priest shall look: and, behold, if the bright spots in the skin of their flesh be of a dull white; it is a tetter, it hath broken out in the skin; he is clean.

36 And if a man's hair be fallen off his head, he is bald; yet is he clean. And if his hair be fallen off from the front part of his head, he is forehead bald; yet is he clean.

37 But if there be in the bald head, or the bald forehead, a reddish-white plague: it is leprosy breaking out in his bald head, or his bald forehead. Then the priest shall look upon him: and, behold, if the rising of the plague be reddish-white in his bald head, or in his bald forehead, as the appearance of

39 Then the priest shall look upon it: and, behold, if the rising of the sore be white reddish in his bald head, or in his bald forehead, as the leprosy appeareth in the skin of the flesh;

40 And when a man or woman hath a plague upon the head or upon the beard, then the priest shall look on the plague: and, behold, if the appearance thereof be deeper than the skin, and there be in it yellow thin hair, then the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is a scall, it is leprosy of the head or of the beard.

41 And if the priest look on the plague of the scall, and, behold, the appearance thereof be not deeper than the skin, and there be no black hair in it, then the priest shall shut up him that hath the plague of the scall seven days: and in the seventh day the priest shall look on the plague: and, behold, if the scall be not spread, and there be in it no yellow hair, and the appearance of the scall be not deeper than the skin, then he shall be shaven, but the scall shall he not shave; and the priest shall shut up him that hath the scall seven days more: and in the seventh day the priest shall look on the scall: and, behold, if the scall be not spread in the skin, and the appearance thereof be not deeper than the skin; then the priest shall pronounce him clean: and he shall wash his clothes, and be clean.

42 And in the seventh day the priest shall look on the scall: and, behold, if the scall be not spread in the skin, nor be in sight deeper than the skin; then the priest shall pronounce him clean: and he shall wash his clothes, and be clean.

43 But if the scall spread much in the skin after his cleansing; then the priest shall look on him: and, behold, if the scall be spread in the skin, the priest shall not seek for the yellow hair; he is unclean.

The second case is that of a rising or white or reddish spot appearing in a simple burn, or perhaps in a spot affected by inflammation resulting from disease or injury. The diagnosis is made precisely as in the other case; it being noticeable that in both of the cases mentioned here only a single period of quarantine is appointed instead of two.

29-37. Leprosy upon the head or chin. This form of leprosy was distinguished from leprosy in other parts of the body under the name, נֶתְהֶק, nēthēq, somewhat inexactly translated in our version scall. Its chief features are like those of ordinary elephantiasis, the morbid affection of the whole depth of the skin and the yellow or whitish hairs. It is recognized by modern writers under the name of fox mange. It seems somewhat less formidable than ordinary elephantiasis, because it not infrequently passes away after a period of months or years. In making his diagnosis the priest, as in ordinary cases, was to look for an affection deeper than the skin and for yellowish or whitish hairs. If these did not appear the person was to be isolated for seven days, and if at the end of that time the spot still remained without those decisive signs he was to be shaven without shaving the nēthēq. At the end of this second period, if the decisive marks were still absent, he might be definitely pronounced clean; but if the plague spread in the skin the patient was to be pronounced unclean even without the search for yellow hairs. In ver. 31 it is probable that the reading ought to be corrected to yellow hair, as in the Septuagint.

38, 39. Tetter. In these verses is described the harmless נֶהֶק, bohāq, still called by the same name among the modern Arabs, and by them considered harmless. It is a kind of eczema, which causes little or no inconvenience and lasts from two months to two years.

40-44. Leprosy in the bald head. This

44 He is a leprous man, he is unclean: the priest shall pronounce him utterly unclean; his plague is in his head.

45 And the leper in whom the plague is, his clothes shall be rent, and his head bare, and he shall put a covering upon his upper lip, and shall cry, Unclean, unclean.

46 All the days wherein the plague shall be in him he shall be defiled; he is unclean: he shall dwell alone; without the camp shall his habitation be.

47 The garment also that the plague of leprosy is in, whether it be a woollen garment, or a linen garment:

48 Whether it be in the warp, or woof; of linen, or of woollen; whether in a skin, or in any thing made of skin:

49 And if the plague be greenish or reddish in the garment, or in the skin, either in the warp, or in the woof, or in any thing of skin; it is a plague of leprosy, and shall be shewed unto the priest:

50 And the priest shall look upon the plague, and shut up it that hath the plague seven days:

51 And he shall look on the plague on the seventh day: if the plague be spread in the garment, either in the warp, or in the woof, or in a skin, or in any work that is made of skin; the plague is a fretting leprosy; it is unclean.

44 leprosy in the skin of the flesh; he is a leprous man, he is unclean: the priest shall surely pronounce him unclean; his plague is in his head.

45 And the leper in whom the plague is, his clothes shall be rent, and the hair of his head shall go loose, and he shall cover his upper lip, 46 and shall cry, Unclean, unclean. All the days wherein the plague is in him he shall be unclean; he is unclean: he shall dwell alone; without the camp shall his dwelling be.

47 The garment also that the plague of leprosy is in, whether it be a woollen garment, or a linen

48 garment; whether it be in warp, or woof; of linen, or of woollen; whether in a skin, or in

49 any thing made of skin; if the plague be greenish or reddish in the garment, or in the skin, or in the warp, or in the woof, or in any thing of skin; it is the plague of leprosy, and shall be

50 shewed unto the priest: and the priest shall look upon the plague, and shut up that which

51 hath the plague seven days: and he shall look on the plague on the seventh day: if the plague be spread in the garment, either in the warp, or in the woof, or in the skin, whatever service skin is used for; the plague is a fretting leprosy;

introduction of leprosy of the bald head or the bald forehead as a separate case occurs apparently in order to give the assurance that baldness in itself is not a mark of unclean disease, but that the appearance of leprosy in the bald head or the bald forehead will be treated as in ordinary cases.

45, 46. The law for the confirmed leper. The leper seems to have been considered as one upon whom death had got hold, and he therefore bore the usual marks of mourning for the dead (see Ezek. 24 : 17). "Let her not be as one dead," cried Aaron to the Lord regarding his leprous sister Miriam (Num. 12 : 12). The object of the separation of the leper from the common intercourse of life, which has been a practice common to nearly all nations and ages, does not seem to have been primarily sanitary. Leprosy is only very slightly contagious, if at all. But the leper, especially as his disease advanced, became a loathsome and hideous sight—a living example of death in life. The stroke was looked upon as a direct visitation of God. It was because Job regarded his sudden affliction of elephantiasis as God directly punishing him that the visitation seemed ethically so monstrous. It was because his friends felt him to be an object of divine resentment that they so zealously urged him to repent and make his peace with God. The hideousness and loathsomeness of the disease was a sort of symbol of the loathsomeness of moral depravity. The affliction was regarded by the Jews as distinctively an uncleanness rather than a disease—a polluting thing like death. Lepers were counted as rendering everything unclean by contact. In their isolated life in modern Syria the lepers form communities (comp. 2 Kings 7 : 3 ; Luke 17 : 12), often with a simple form of organization; and their participation in dreadful misfortune swallows up all differences as between Moslem and Christian (comp. Luke 17 : 16).

47-59. Leprosy in clothing and leather.

Wool and flax were the most common materials for garments among the Hebrews (Hosea 2 : 9 ; Prov. 31 : 13). As to the warp and woof being distinguishable in any spot which might appear in a garment (see ver. 48) the following note from the Polychrome Bible seems reasonable: "It has been objected that there was no reason why the warp and the woof should be distinguished here, and that one could not be affected without the other. But it is a very common thing for the woof of cloth to be so thick, that a spot on it would not touch the warp-thread at all, and vice versa. Or the direction in which the spot seemed to run, would be taken as indicating that the evil was in the warp or in the woof, as the case might be." A greenish or reddish plague in clothing or leather was to be shown to the priest. The priest shut it up seven days, and if at the end of that period the plague was found to have spread, the article was at once to be burned. If it had not spread, the suspected article, after washing, was to be shut up seven days more. At the end of that time if the plague appeared faint the priest was to tear it out of the garment, but if it still presented its original appearance the article was to be burned. If, on the other hand, the plague had entirely disappeared the article was to be thoroughly washed the second time and pronounced clean.

This form of plague in clothing when it was confirmed was called a malignant or fretting leprosy (ver. 51, 52). What was its nature cannot be 52 He shall therefore burn that garment, whether warp or woof, in woollen or in linen, or any thing of skin, wherein the plague is: for it is a fretting leprosy; it shall be burnt in the fire.

53 And if the priest shall look, and, behold, the plague be not spread in the garment, either in the warp, or in the woof, or in any thing of skin;

54 Then the priest shall command that they wash the thing wherein the plague is, and he shall shut it up seven days more:

55 And the priest shall look on the plague, after that it is washed: and, behold, if the plague have not changed his colour, and the plague be not spread; it is unclean; thou shalt burn it in the fire; it is fret inward, whether it be bare within or without.

56 And if the priest look, and, behold, the plague be somewhat dark after the washing of it; then he shall rend it out of the garment, or out of the skin, or out of the warp, or out of the woof:

57 And if it appear still in the garment, either in the warp, or in the woof, or in any thing of skin; it is a spreading plague: thou shalt burn that wherein the plague is with fire.

58 And the garment, either warp, or woof, or whatsoever thing of skin it be, which thou shalt wash, if the plague be departed from them, then it shall be washed the second time, and shall be clean.

59 This is the law of the plague of leprosy in a garment of woollen or linen, either in the warp, or woof, or any thing of skins, to pronounce it clean, or to pronounce it unclean.

52 it is unclean. And he shall burn the garment, whether the warp or the woof, in woollen or in linen, or any thing of skin, wherein the plague is: for it is a fretting leprosy; it shall be

53 burnt in the fire. And if the priest shall look, and, behold, the plague be not spread in the garment, either in the warp, or in the woof, or in

54 any thing of skin; then the priest shall command that they wash the thing wherein the plague is, and he shall shut it up seven days more:

55 and the priest shall look, after that the plague is washed: and, behold, if the plague have not changed its colour, and the plague be not spread, it is unclean; thou shalt burn it in the fire: it is a fret, whether the bareness be within or with-

56 out. And if the priest look, and, behold, the plague be dim after the washing thereof, then he shall rend it out of the garment, or out of the

57 skin, or out of the warp, or out of the woof: and if it appear still in the garment, either in the warp, or in the woof, or in anything of skin, it is breaking out: thou shalt burn that wherein

58 the plague is with fire. And the garment, either the warp, or the woof, or whatsoever thing of skin it be, which thou shalt wash, if the plague be departed from them, then it shall be washed precisely determined, but it was probably some kind, or perhaps more than one kind, of destructive mildew. There is nothing said about its causing any contagion of leprosy to the person wearing the garment, and the reason for such solemn and severe treatment of a mere article of clothing, and indeed the whole subject, is obscure. It is to be observed that no religious or symbolical rite is prescribed in connection with leprosy in clothing, as in the case of persons, and even houses (14 : 49-53).

59 the second time, and shall be clean. This is the law of the plague of leprosy in a garment of woollen or linen, either in the warp, or the woof, or anything of skin, to pronounce it clean, or to pronounce it unclean.

Chap. 14. THE PURIFICATION OF THE LEPER. If we may gauge the importance of the uncleanness by the minuteness of the rites which follow restoration, we should estimate that leprosy was regarded as the most momentous of all defilements. Perhaps some of this minuteness of ceremonial may be due to the extreme rarity of a case of restoration. That a special signification was attached to this particular form of uncleanness is evident not only from the rigid exclusion and funereal behavior of the patient, suggestive of death, but from the peculiar nature of the ceremonies connected with recovery. That the person was regarded as having been under the direct judgment and indignation of God is indicated by the guilt offering which was prescribed, as if for crime or delinquency. That the diseased state was thought of as having a special effect on the ecclesiastical or priestly standing of the person as a member of the sanctified nation is suggested by the ceremony of consecration with blood applied to ear, hand, and foot, like that of the priests. Or possibly such a priestly form of consecration may suggest the special gratitude of one who, in being restored from leprosy, has been virtually raised from the dead, and thus bound by incredible divine mercy to a life of the highest sanctity. The use of two victims, also, a dead and a living one, to suggest the cleansing and the carrying away of the uncleanness, was a ceremony of special solemnity only paralleled by the scapegoat ceremony of the great Day of Atonement. No other form of sin or uncleanness required purificatory rites in any way approaching these in elaborateness and variety of suggested meanings.

The later rabbinical refinements on these regulations placed especial restrictions on the priest in his examination of the restored person preparatory to pronouncing him clean. The examination was not to take place on the Sabbath, nor in the early morning, nor in the late afternoon, nor inside a house, nor on a cloudy day, nor in the glare of midday; and the priest must have good eyesight and only determine one case at a time, and he was not allowed to pass judgment on one of his own kindred. Such evident fear of the possibility of admitting a man to the privileges of ordinary life who was not worthy of them shows that the development of the Jewish conscience, under the influence of ceremonialism, was predominantly in the direction of intolerance of defilement, rather than in

CHAPTER XIV.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,
 2 This shall be the law of the leper in the day of his cleansing: He shall be brought unto the priest:
 3 And the priest shall go forth out of the camp; and the priest shall look, and, behold, if the plague of leprosy be healed in the leper;
 4 Then shall the priest command to take for him that is to be cleansed two birds alive and clean, and cedar wood, and scarlet, and hyssop:
 5 And the priest shall command that one of the birds be killed in an earthen vessel over running water:
 6 As for the living bird, he shall take it, and the cedar wood, and the scarlet, and the hyssop, and shall dip them and the living bird in the blood of the bird that was killed over the running water:
 7 And he shall sprinkle upon him that is to be cleansed from the leprosy seven times, and shall pronounce him clean, and shall let the living bird loose into the open field.
 8 And he that is to be cleansed shall wash his clothes, and shave off all his hair, and wash himself in water, that he may be clean: and after that he shall come into the camp, and shall tarry abroad out of his tent seven days.
 9 But it shall be on the seventh day, that he shall shave all his hair off his head and his beard and his eyebrows, even all his hair he shall shave off: and he shall wash his clothes, also he shall wash his flesh in water, and he shall be clean.
 10 And on the eighth day he shall take two he-lambs without blemish, and one ewe lamb of the first year without blemish, and three tenth deals of fine flour for a meat offering, mingled with oil, and one log of oil.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,
 2 This shall be the law of the leper in the day of his cleansing: he shall be brought unto the priest: and the priest shall go forth out of the camp; and the priest shall look, and, behold, if the plague of leprosy be healed in the leper;
 4 then shall the priest command to take for him that is to be cleansed two living clean birds, and
 5 cedar wood, and scarlet, and hyssop: and the priest shall command to kill one of the birds in an earthen vessel over running water: as for the living bird, he shall take it, and the cedar wood, and the scarlet, and the hyssop, and shall dip them and the living bird in the blood of the bird that was killed over the running water:
 7 and he shall sprinkle upon him that is to be cleansed from the leprosy seven times, and shall pronounce him clean, and shall let go the living
 8 bird into the open field. And he that is to be cleansed shall wash his clothes, and shave off all his hair, and bathe himself in water, and he shall be clean: and after that he shall come into the camp, but shall dwell outside his tent seven
 9 days. And it shall be on the seventh day, that he shall shave all his hair off his head and his beard and his eyebrows, even all his hair he shall shave off: and he shall wash his clothes, and he shall bathe his flesh in water, and he 10 shall be clean. And on the eighth day he shall take two he-lambs without blemish, and one ewe-lamb of the first year without blemish, and three tenth parts of an ephah of fine flour for a meal offering, mingled with oil, and one log of the more positive direction of encouragement to sanctity.

1-3. This seems to be addressed to Moses alone. 2. Brought unto the priest, i. e., to a rendezvous without the camp where the priest could meet and examine him. The ceremony of cleansing was two-fold, the one part being without the camp and qualifying the restored man to come within the camp and mingle with his brethren, while the second part, performed in the court of the tabernacle, restored the man to sanctuary privileges.

4-8. The rites performed without the camp. The two birds—צִפּוֹרִים, tsipporim, a term covering any of the smaller birds—were provided by the priest and were not a sacrifice in the strict sense of the word, as they were not brought to the altar. The water and scarlet and hyssop are mentioned by the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews (Heb. 9 : 19, 20) in describing the rite spoken of in Exod. 24 : 6, and the three substances here named seemed to have been much used in rites of purification. The scarlet was probably a band of wool dyed with "worm-crimson," with which the cedar and the hyssop were tied together. There is much difference of opinion as to what plant is meant by the Hebrew word חִסְסוֹן, 'ezōbh, Greek, ὑσσώπος, or hyssop. It was the plant with which the blood of the paschal lamb was sprinkled on the door-post (Exod. 12 : 22); it was a plant of low growth, furnishing a contrast to the cedar of Lebanon, and it grew on walls (1 Kings 4 : 33), and yet according to John 19 : 29 its stem might be a stick of considerable length. It was probably either the caper plant, or still more likely, the plant found in Syria classified as origanum maru.

The two birds perhaps symbolized the leper in his state of defilement, or constructive death, and in his restoration; or, more likely, they may have been the double means of enacting the cleansing of the leper and the carrying away of the divine displeasure. There is only one other ceremony mentioned in the law where two creatures, a slain and a living one, go to make up a single type, and that is the ceremony of the two sacrificial goats on the Day of Atonement (see 16 : 5, 7-10).

9-32. The rites in the court of the tabernacle. The restored man prepared himself for these rites by shaving all the hair off from his body and washing himself and his garments, after having been in the camp seven days. The three-tenth parts of an ephah of fine flour amounted to something over ten pints and a half. The term log as a measure occurs only in this chapter in the Old Testament. The log "is said to have been the twelfth part of a hin, and was computed by the rabbis to be the size of six eggs, about five-sixths of a pint." The three

11 And the priest that maketh him clean shall present the man that is to be made clean, and those things, before the Lord, at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation :

12 And the priest shall take one he lamb, and offer him for a trespass offering, and the log of oil, and wave them for a wave offering before the Lord :

13 And he shall slay the lamb in the place where he shall kill the sin offering and the burnt offering, in the holy place: for as the sin offering is the priest's, so is the trespass offering: it is most holy:

14 And the priest shall take some of the blood of the trespass offering, and the priest shall put it upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot:

15 And the priest shall take some of the log of oil, and pour it into the palm of his own left hand:

16 And the priest shall dip his right finger in the oil that is in his left hand, and shall sprinkle of the oil with his finger seven times before the Lord:

17 And of the rest of the oil that is in his hand shall the priest put upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot, upon the blood of the trespass offering:

18 And the remnant of the oil that is in the priest's hand he shall pour upon the head of him that is to be cleansed: and the priest shall make an atonement for him before the Lord.

19 And the priest shall offer the sin offering, and make an atonement for him that is to be cleansed from his uncleanness; and afterward he shall kill the burnt offering:

20 And the priest shall offer the burnt offering and the meat offering upon the altar: and the priest shall make an atonement for him, and he shall be clean.

21 And if he be poor, and cannot get so much; then he shall take one lamb for a trespass offering to be waved, to make an atonement for him, and one tenth deal of fine flour mingled with oil for a meat offering, and a log of oil;

22 And two turtledoves, or two young pigeons, such as he is able to get; and the one shall be a sin offering, and the other a burnt offering.

23 And he shall bring them on the eighth day for his cleansing unto the priest, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, before the Lord.

24 And the priest shall take the lamb of the trespass offering, and the log of oil, and the priest shall wave them for a wave offering before the Lord:

25 And he shall kill the lamb of the trespass offering, and the priest shall take some of the blood of the trespass offering, and put it upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot:

11 oil. And the priest that cleanseth him shall set the man that is to be cleansed, and those things, before the Lord, at the door of the tent of meet-

12 ing; and the priest shall take one of the he-lambs, and offer him for a guilt offering, and the log of oil, and wave them for a wave offering

13 before the Lord: and he shall kill the he-lamb in the place where they kill the sin offering and the burnt offering, in the place of the sanctuary: for as the sin offering is the priest's, so is the

14 guilt offering: it is most holy: and the priest shall take of the blood of the guilt offering, and the priest shall put it upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe

15 of his right foot: and the priest shall take of the log of oil, and pour it into the palm of his own

17 before the Lord: and of the rest of the oil that is in his hand shall the priest put upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot, upon the blood of

18 the guilt offering: and the rest of the oil that is in the priest's hand he shall put upon the head of him that is to be cleansed: and the priest shall make atonement for him before the Lord.

19 And the priest shall offer the sin offering, and make atonement for him that is to be cleansed because of his uncleanness; and afterward he shall kill the burnt offering: and the priest shall offer the burnt offering and the meal offering upon the altar: and the priest shall make atonement for him, and he shall be clean.

21 And if he be poor, and cannot get so much, then he shall take one he-lamb for a guilt offering to be waved, to make atonement for him, and one tenth part of an ephah of fine flour mingled with oil for a meal offering, and a log of oil;

22 and two turtledoves, or two young pigeons, such as he is able to get; and the one shall be a sin offering, and the other a burnt offering. And on the eighth day he shall bring them for his cleansing unto the priest, unto the door of the tent of

23 meeting, before the Lord. And the priest shall take the lamb of the guilt offering, and the log of oil, and the priest shall wave them for a wave offering before the Lord: and he shall kill the

24 lamb of the guilt offering, and the priest shall take of the blood of the guilt offering, and put it upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right victims provided (ver. 10) were for a guilt offering, a sin offering, and a burnt offering. That a guilt offering should be waved (ver. 12) in token of consecration (see on 7: 28-34) is explained in ver. 13 by the fact that it was sacred to the priest's use. The guilt offering was required when the rights of others, whether of Jehovah or of a fellow-man, had been violated, and was usually accompanied by restitution (see 5: 14-16 and note). It is somewhat difficult to see exactly how a guilt offering could be required in this case. The leper could hardly be held responsible for the services and offerings withheld from a sanctuary to which he was incapable of holding any relation. For a similar protracted exclusion from the temple services in the case of the one unclean on account of secretions no guilt offering is prescribed. From the fact that the leper on his recovery had to be restored to the sanctuary in a manner similar to the consecration of a priest, it seems likely that his affliction, as a direct mark of God's anger, was felt somehow to be a matter requiring to be dealt with throughout on a higher or more sacred level than ordinary uncleanness. The leper was the direct object of Jehovah's attention, and so his case fell specifically within the sphere of the sanctuary. His sacred character was entirely destroyed by the divine blow, so that a satisfaction must be made to Jehovah by a guilt offering, as if for violation or damage to the sanctuary. The Nazarite was also directly

26 And the priest shall pour of the oil into the palm of his own left hand :

27 And the priest shall sprinkle with his right finger some of the oil that is in his left hand seven times before the Lord :

28 And the priest shall put of the oil that is in his hand upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot, upon the place of the blood of the trespass offering :

29 And the rest of the oil that is in the priest's hand he shall put upon the head of him that is to be cleansed, to make an atonement for him before the Lord.

30 And he shall offer the one of the turtle-doves, or of the young pigeons, such as he can get ;

31 Even such as he is able to get, the one for a sin offering, and the other for a burnt offering, with the meat offering ; and the priest shall make an atonement for him that is to be cleansed before the Lord.

32 This is the law of him in whom is the plague of leprosy, whose hand is not able to get that which pertaineth to his cleansing.

33 And the Lord spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying,

34 When ye be come into the land of Canaan, which I give to you for a possession, and I put the plague of leprosy in a house of the land of your possession ;

35 And he that owneth the house shall come and tell the priest, saying, It seemeth to me there is as it were a plague in the house :

36 Then the priest shall command that they empty the house, before the priest go into it to see the plague, that all that is in the house be not made unclean : and afterward the priest shall go in to see the house :

37 And he shall look on the plague, and, behold, if the plague be in the walls of the house with hollow strakes, greenish or reddish, which in sight are lower than the wall ;

38 Then the priest shall go out of the house to the door of the house, and shut up the house seven days :

39 And the priest shall come again the seventh day, and shall look : and, behold, if the plague be spread in the walls of the house ;

26 and the priest shall pour of the oil into the palm of his own left hand : and the priest shall sprinkle with his right finger some of the oil that is in his left hand seven times before the Lord :

28 and the priest shall put of the oil that is in his hand upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot, upon the place of the blood of the guilt offering : and the rest of the oil that is in the priest's hand he shall put upon the head of him that is to be cleansed, to make atonement for him before the Lord. And he shall offer one of the turtle-doves, or of the young pigeons, such as

31 he is able to get ; even such as he is able to get, the one for a sin offering, and the other for a burnt offering, with the meal offering : and the priest shall make atonement for him that is to be cleansed before the Lord. This is the law of him in whom is the plague of leprosy, who is not able to get that which pertaineth to his cleansing.

33 And the Lord spake unto Moses and unto

34 Aaron, saying, When ye be come into the land of Canaan, which I give to you for a possession, and I put the plague of leprosy in a house of the

35 land of your possession ; then he that owneth the house shall come and tell the priest, saying, There seemeth to me to be as it were a plague in the house : and the priest shall command that they empty the house, before the priest go in to

36 see the plague, that all that is in the house be not made unclean : and afterward the priest shall go in to see the house : and he shall look on the plague, and, behold, if the plague be in the walls of the house with hollow strakes, greenish or reddish, and the appearance thereof be

38 lower than the wall ; then the priest shall go out of the house to the door of the house, and shut up the house seven days : and the priest shall come again the seventh day, and shall look :

39 and, behold, if the plague be spread in the walls

under Jehovah's attention, through his special consecration, and his character and shortcomings were in a similar way estimated from the sanctuary level. We have already seen that the common level of life, which was for ordinary persons entirely innocent, was for him or for the intending priest sinful and needed a sin offering. A Nazarite who had been defiled by the dead was, like the restored leper, required to present a guilt offering (see Num. 6 : 11, 12).

This ceremony, particularly in the application of the blood and the oil to the ear, the thumb, and the toe, resembled the disposal of the blood of the ram of consecration in the case of Aaron and his sons on their induction into office (see 8 : 23, 24) and may possibly point to the restored leper's reinstatement as a member of the priestly nation.

In the case of the person who was too poor to afford these sacrifices only the he-lamb for the guilt offering was required, while the sin and burnt offerings might be of turtle-doves or young pigeons. The meal offering of fine flour was only one-third the usual quantity for such cases, though the quantity of oil remained unchanged.

33-53. Leprosy in a house. This part is addressed to both Moses and Aaron. It is distinguished from the rest of the section on leprosy in that it is wholly prospective, i. e., adapted to the time when the children of Israel should have settled dwellings in the Promised Land. The subject-matter of this section would come in more naturally at the close of the last chapter. What the plague of leprosy in a house was is not known, and any assertion with regard to it is pure conjecture. It was evidently not anything which could infect persons with leprosy, since those who went into the house (ver. 46) or ate or slept in it (ver. 47) simply contracted an ordinary ceremonial uncleanness which passed away that night on their washing themselves or their clothes. The furniture, moreover, was not rendered unclean by the house leprosy unless it remained in the house after the priest had inspected it (ver. 36). It was perhaps some form of decay, or some parasitic growth that was familiarly known.

40 Then the priest shall command that they take away the stones in which the plague is, and they shall cast them into an unclean place without the city:

41 And he shall cause the house to be scraped within round about, and they shall pour out the dust that they scrape off without the city into an unclean place:

42 And they shall take other stones, and put them in the place of those stones; and he shall take other mortar, and shall plaister the house.

43 And if the plague come again, and break out in the house, after that he hath taken away the stones, and after he hath scraped the house, and after it is plastered;

44 Then the priest shall come and look, and, behold, if the plague be spread in the house, it is a fretting leprosy in the house: it is unclean.

45 And he shall break down the house, the stones of it, and the timber thereof, and all the mortar of the house; and he shall carry them forth out of the city into an unclean place.

46 Moreover he that goeth into the house all the while that it is shut up shall be unclean until the even.

47 And he that lieth in the house shall wash his clothes; and he that eateth in the house shall wash his clothes.

48 And if the priest shall come in, and look upon it, and, behold, the plague hath not spread in the house, after the house was plastered: then the priest shall pronounce the house clean, because the plague is healed.

49 And he shall take to cleanse the house two birds, and cedar wood, and scarlet, and hyssop:

50 And he shall kill the one of the birds in an earthen vessel over running water:

51 And he shall take the cedar wood, and the hyssop, and the scarlet, and the living bird, and dip them in the blood of the slain bird, and in the running water, and sprinkle the house seven times:

52 And he shall cleanse the house with the blood of the bird, and with the running water, and with the living bird, and with the cedar wood, and with the hyssop, and with the scarlet:

53 But he shall let go the living bird out of the city into the open fields, and make an atonement for the house: and it shall be clean.

54 This is the law for all manner of plague of leprosy, and scall,

55 And for the leprosy of a garment, and of a house,

56 And for a rising, and for a scab, and for a bright spot:

57 To teach when it is unclean, and when it is clean: this is the law of leprosy.

40 of the house; then the priest shall command that they take out the stones in which the plague is, and cast them into an unclean place without

41 the city: and he shall cause the house to be scraped within round about, and they shall pour out the mortar that they scrape off without the

42 city into an unclean place: and they shall take other stones, and put them in the place of those stones; and he shall take other mortar, and shall

43 plaister the house. And if the plague come again, and break out in the house, after that he hath taken out the stones, and after he hath

44 scraped the house, and after it is plastered; then the priest shall come in and look, and, behold, if the plague be spread in the house, it is a fretting

45 leprosy in the house: it is unclean. And he shall break down the house, the stones of it, and the timber thereof, and all the mortar of the house; and he shall carry them forth out of the

46 city into an unclean place. Moreover he that goeth into the house all the while that it is shut up shall be unclean until the even. And he

47 that lieth in the house shall wash his clothes; and he that eateth in the house shall wash his clothes. And if the priest shall come in, and

48 look, and, behold, the plague hath not spread in the house, after the house was plastered; then the priest shall pronounce the house clean, because the plague is healed. And he shall take

49 to cleanse the house two birds, and cedar wood, and scarlet, and hyssop: and he shall kill one of the birds in an earthen vessel over running

50 water: and he shall take the cedar wood, and the hyssop, and the scarlet, and the living bird, and dip them in the blood of the slain bird, and in the running water, and sprinkle the house

51 seven times: and he shall cleanse the house with the blood of the bird, and with the running water, and with the living bird, and with the cedar wood, and with the hyssop, and with the

52 scarlet: but he shall let go the living bird out of the city into the open field: so shall he make atonement for the house: and it shall be clean.

53 This is the law for all manner of plague of leprosy, and for a scall; and for the leprosy of a garment, and for a house; and for a rising, and 54 for a scab, and for a bright spot: to teach when it is unclean, and when it is clean: this is the law of leprosy.

CHAPTER XV.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses and to Aaron, saying,

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When any man hath a running issue out of his flesh, because of his issue he is unclean.

3 And this shall be his uncleanness in his issue: whether his flesh run with his issue, or his flesh be stopped from his issue, it is his uncleanness.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses and to Aaron, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When any man hath an issue out of his flesh, because of his issue he is unclean.

3 And this shall be his uncleanness in his issue: whether his flesh run with his issue, or his flesh be stopped from his issue, it is his uncleanness.

The steps taken to cleanse the house after the disease had yielded to scraping and re-plastering were exactly those taken with the leper while still outside the camp. This cleansing is called (ver. 49, 52) freeing from sin (Heb.), and in ver. 53 the priest is said to make atonement for the house, as if in some symbolic way it were guilty of a moral offense.

54-57. Subscription to the whole. The main intent of this law was to teach the priest how to read the first obscure symptoms which might accompany leprosy—when these indicated uncleanness and when not; literally, in the day of uncleanness and in the day of cleanness.

Chap. 15. UNCLEANNESS FROM SECRECTIONS. 1-18. Uncleanness in the male. The running issue referred to in ver. 1-15 is the result of a diseased condition, and therefore the steps to be taken when the person is restored

4 Every bed, whereon he lieth that hath the issue, is unclean: and every thing, whereon he sitteth, shall be unclean.

5 And whosoever toucheth his bed shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

6 And he that sitteth on any thing whereon he sat that hath the issue shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

7 And he that toucheth the flesh of him that hath the issue shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

8 And if he that hath the issue spit upon him that is clean; then he shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

9 And what saddle soever he rideth upon that hath the issue shall be unclean.

10 And whosoever toucheth any thing that was under him shall be unclean until the even: and he that beareth any of those things shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

11 And whomsoever he toucheth that hath the issue, and hath not rinsed his hands in water, he shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

12 And the vessel of earth, that he toucheth which hath the issue, shall be broken: and every vessel of wood shall be rinsed in water.

13 And when he that hath an issue is cleansed of his issue; then he shall number to himself seven days for his cleansing, and wash his clothes, and bathe his flesh in running water, and shall be clean.

14 And on the eighth day he shall take to him two turtledoves, or two young pigeons, and come before the Lord unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and give them unto the priest:

15 And the priest shall offer them, the one for a sin offering, and the other for a burnt offering; and the priest shall make an atonement for him before the Lord for his issue.

16 And if any man's seed of copulation go out from him, then he shall wash all his flesh in water, and be unclean until the even.

17 And every garment, and every skin, whereon is the seed of copulation, shall be washed with water, and be unclean until the even.

18 The woman also with whom man shall lie with seed of copulation, they shall both bathe themselves in water, and be unclean until the even.

19 And if a woman have an issue, and her issue in her flesh be blood, she shall be put apart seven days: and whosoever toucheth her shall be unclean until the even.

20 And every thing that she lieth upon in her separation shall be unclean: every thing also that she sitteth upon shall be unclean.

21 And whosoever toucheth her bed shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

22 And whosoever toucheth any thing that she sat upon shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

4 Every bed whereon he that hath the issue lieth shall be unclean: and every thing whereon he

5 sitteth shall be unclean. And whosoever toucheth his bed shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

6 And he that sitteth on any thing whereon he that hath the issue sat shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean

7 until the even. And he that toucheth the flesh of him that hath the issue shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean

8 until the even. And if he that hath the issue spit upon him that is clean; then he shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be un-

9 clean until the even. And what saddle soever he that hath the issue rideth upon shall be unclean.

10 And whosoever toucheth any thing that was under him shall be unclean until the even: and he that beareth those things shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be un-

11 clean until the even. And whomsoever he that hath the issue toucheth, without having rinsed his hands in water, he shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean

12 until the even. And the earthen vessel, which he that hath the issue toucheth, shall be broken: and every vessel of wood shall be rinsed in 13 water. And when he that hath an issue is cleansed of his issue, then he shall number to himself seven days for his cleansing, and wash his clothes; and he shall bathe his flesh in run-

14 ning water, and shall be clean. And on the eighth day he shall take to him two turtledoves, or two young pigeons, and come before the Lord

15 unto the door of the tent of meeting, and give them unto the priest: and the priest shall offer them, the one for a sin offering, and the other

16 for a burnt offering; and the priest shall make atonement for him before the Lord for his issue.

17 And if any man's seed of copulation go out from him, then he shall bathe all his flesh in 18 water, and be unclean until the even. And every garment, and every skin, whereon is the seed of copulation, shall be washed with water, 19 and be unclean until the even. The woman also with whom a man shall lie with seed of copulation, they shall both bathe themselves in water, and be unclean until the even.

20 And if a woman have an issue, and her issue in her flesh be blood, she shall be in her impurity seven days: and whosoever toucheth her

21 shall be unclean until the even. And every thing that she lieth upon in her impurity shall be unclean: every thing also that she sitteth

22 upon shall be unclean. And whosoever toucheth her bed shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

23 And whosoever toucheth any thing that she sitteth upon shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

are prescribed (ver. 13-15). While the sacrifice required is not very burdensome, the extreme scrupulosity of the lawgiver with regard to the pollution of persons, garments, vessels, and furniture communicated by the touch, had the effect of rendering the people extremely sensitive to uncleanness of this kind. Hating the garment spotted by the flesh would be one of the signs of personal religion (Jude 23). Most of the ancient religions made a similar recognition of uncleanness and of the need of purification. Ver. 16-18 refer to natural, healthful secretions.

These require no sacrifice, but entail the necessity of washing the garments and the person, and the technical condition of uncleanness for the remainder of the day.

19-30. Uncleanness in the female. In the case of the woman the natural uncleanness is mentioned first (ver. 19-24), and no sacrifice is prescribed. The act mentioned in ver. 24 must mean a case of the accidental concurrence of the menstrual period with the act of cohabitation, since voluntary intercourse during that period was a heavy crime (see 18 : 19 ; 20 : 18). For the 23 And if it be on her bed, or on any thing whereon she sitteth, when he toucheth it, he shall be unclean until the even.

24 And if any man lie with her at all, and her flowers be upon him, he shall be unclean seven days; and all the bed whereon he lieth shall be unclean.

25 And if a woman have an issue of her blood many days out of the time of her separation, or if it run beyond the time of her separation; all the days of the issue of her uncleanness shall be as the days of her separation: she shall be unclean.

26 Every bed whereon she lieth all the days of her issue shall be unto her as the bed of her separation: and whatsoever she sitteth upon shall be unclean, as the uncleanness of her separation.

27 And whosoever toucheth those things shall be unclean, and shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

28 But if she be cleansed of her issue, then she shall number to herself seven days, and after that she shall be clean.

29 And on the eighth day she shall take unto her two turtles, or two young pigeons, and bring them unto the priest, to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

30 And the priest shall offer the one for a sin offering, and the other for a burnt offering; and the priest shall make an atonement for her before the Lord for the issue of her uncleanness.

31 Thus shall ye separate the children of Israel from their uncleanness; that they die not in their uncleanness, when they defile my tabernacle that is among them.

32 This is the law of him that hath an issue, and of him whose seed goeth from him, and is defiled therewith;

33 And of her that is sick of her flowers, and of him that hath an issue, of the man, and of the woman, and of him that lieth with her that is unclean.

23 And if it be on the bed, or on any thing whereon she sitteth, when he toucheth it, he shall be unclean until the even.

24 And if any man lie with her, and her impurity be upon him, he shall be unclean seven days; and every bed whereon he lieth shall be unclean.

25 And if a woman have an issue of her blood many days not in the time of her impurity, or if she have an issue beyond the time of her impurity; all the days of the issue of her uncleanness she shall be as in the days of her impurity: she is unclean.

26 Every bed whereon she lieth all the days of her issue shall be unto her as the bed of her impurity: and every thing whereon she sitteth shall be unclean, as the uncleanness of her impurity.

27 And whosoever toucheth those things shall be unclean, and shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

28 But if she be cleansed of her issue, then she shall number to herself seven days, and after that she shall be clean.

29 And on the eighth day she shall take unto her two turtles, or two young pigeons, and bring them unto the priest, to the door of the tent of meeting.

30 And the priest shall offer the one for a sin offering, and the other for a burnt offering; and the priest shall make atonement for her before the Lord for the issue of her uncleanness.

31 Thus shall ye separate the children of Israel from their uncleanness; that they die not in their uncleanness, when they defile my tabernacle that is in the midst of them.

32 This is the law of him that hath an issue, and of him whose seed of copulation goeth from him, 33 so that he is unclean thereby; and of her that is sick with her impurity, and of him that hath an issue, of the man, and of the woman, and of him that lieth with her that is unclean.

CHAPTER XVI.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses after the death of the two sons of Aaron, when they offered before the Lord, and died;

2 And the Lord said unto Moses, Speak unto Aaron thy brother, that he come not at all times into the holy place within the veil before the mercy seat, which is upon the ark; that he die not: for I will appear in the cloud upon the mercy seat.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, after the death of the two sons of Aaron, when they drew near before the Lord, and died; and the Lord said unto Moses, Speak unto Aaron thy brother, that he come not at all times into the holy place within the veil, before the mercy-seat which is upon the ark; that he die not: for I will appear unnatural menstruation resulting from a diseased condition a quarantine and sacrifice was required on its cessation like that required of the man who had recovered from a morbid issue (cf. ver. 13-15).

31-39. Subscription. The main object of this law was evidently to cultivate the habit of recognizing and abhorring uncleanness. It is noteworthy how this separation from uncleanness is connected with religious feeling by making the highest degree of fault and danger to consist in communicating a taint to the habitation of God (ver. 31) that was among the people. Uncleanness neglected is in danger of becoming as it were an injury to the purity of the very temple of God. Compare the features in the cleansing of the leper (14: 12-14) which seem to indicate that leprosy as the highest type of all impurity was regarded as a violation of the sanctuary. There seems to be latent here the feeling of the identity of the temple of God with the human body—a feeling which was so developed and vivid in Christ that he spoke of the temple and of his body in one inclusive assertion (John 2: 19). Paul too makes this identity the basis of one of his most expressive metaphors (1 Cor. 6: 19).

Chap. 16. THE DAY OF ATONEMENT.

1, 2. The historical occasion. Historically this chapter is connected with the events narrated in chap. 10, and the interposition of chap. 11-15, so entirely unrelated in subject to this apparently continuous section, may possibly indicate a redaction by which this chapter has been removed from its original context. In a book so scantily historical in its form as Leviticus, however, this supposition is by no means necessary. The reference to the death of Nadab and Abihu simply supplies the historical occasion for the legislation, rather than makes any attempt to

3 Thus shall Aaron come into the holy place: with a young bullock for a sin offering, and a ram for a burnt offering.

4 He shall put on the holy linen coat, and he shall have the linen breeches upon his flesh, and shall be girded with a linen girdle, and with the linen mitre shall he be attired: these are holy garments; and therefore shall he wash his flesh in water, and so put them on.

5 And he shall take of the congregation of the children of Israel two kids of the goats for a sin offering, and one ram for a burnt offering.

6 And Aaron shall offer his bullock of the sin offering, which is for himself, and make an atonement for himself, and for his house.

7 And he shall take the two goats, and present them before the Lord at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

8 And Aaron shall cast lots upon the two goats; one lot for the Lord, and the other lot for the scapegoat.

9 And Aaron shall bring the goat upon which the Lord's lot fell, and offer him for a sin offering.

10 But the goat, on which the lot fell to be the scapegoat, shall be presented alive before the Lord, to make an atonement with him, and to let him go for a scapegoat into the wilderness.

11 And Aaron shall bring the bullock of the sin offering, which is for himself, and shall make an atonement for himself, and for his house, and shall kill the bullock of the sin offering which is for himself:

12 And he shall take a censer full of burning coals of fire from off the altar before the Lord, and his hands full of sweet incense beaten small, and bring it within the veil:

13 And he shall put the incense upon the fire before the Lord, that the cloud of the incense may cover the mercy seat that is upon the testimony, that he die not:

14 And he shall take of the blood of the bullock, and sprinkle it with his finger upon the mercy seat eastward; and before the mercy seat shall he sprinkle of the blood with his finger seven times.

3 in the cloud upon the mercy-seat. Herewith shall Aaron come into the holy place: with a young bullock for a sin offering, and a ram for a burnt offering. He shall put on the holy linen coat, and he shall have the linen breeches upon his flesh, and shall be girded with the linen girdle, and with the linen mitre shall he be attired: they are the holy garments; and he shall bathe his flesh in water, and put them on. And he shall take of the congregation of the children of Israel two he-goats for a sin offering, and one ram for a burnt offering. And Aaron shall present the bullock of the sin offering, which is for himself, and make atonement for himself, and for his house. And he shall take the two goats, and set them before the Lord at the door of the tent of meeting. And Aaron shall cast lots upon the two goats; one lot for the Lord, and the other lot for Azazel. And Aaron shall present the goat upon which the lot fell for the Lord, and offer him for a sin offering. But the goat, on which the lot fell for Azazel, shall be set alive before the Lord, to make atonement for him, to send him away for Azazel into the wilderness. And Aaron shall present the bullock of the sin offering, which is for himself, and shall make atonement for himself, and for his house, and shall kill the bullock of the sin offering which is for himself: and he shall take a censer full of coals of fire from off the altar before the Lord, and his hands full of sweet incense beaten small, and bring it within the veil: and he shall put the incense upon the fire before the Lord, that the cloud of the incense may cover the mercy-seat that is upon the testimony, that he die not: and he shall take of the blood of the bullock, and sprinkle it with his finger upon the mercy-seat on the east; and before the mercy-seat shall he sprinkle of the blood with continue a narrative. It was natural that a visitation so awful should intensify the meditations of the lawgiver on the sacredness of the sanctuary, and so render him receptive to a divine revelation on the subject.

The Day of Atonement was the climax of the Jewish system of offerings for sin, and was called by the rabbins Yoma, or the Day, as if it were the day par excellence of the sacred year. It is probably the same as the fast mentioned in Acts 27 : 9.

3-13. The reverent preparations. Having provided himself with a young bullock for a sin offering and a ram for a burnt offering, Aaron was to substitute for his ordinary glorious high-priestly garments (Exod. 28) which had been sanctified with sprinkled blood and oil (3 : 7-9, 30) a suit of pure white linen differing from the dress of the ordinary priests in having a high priest's turban of linen instead of the head-tire of the common priests and a white linen girdle instead of the variegated one such as they wore. Before assuming these garments and after putting them off (ver. 24) Aaron was to bathe his whole person in water. The white garments perhaps signified the purity with which he should approach the awful presence of God, and their absence of adornment may have been also a token of humiliation. For the congregation Aaron was to take two shaggy he-goats—the rabbins say, exactly alike—which were to serve in a wholly unique manner as one sin offering. With these three animals he was to appear at the door of the tent of meeting, and having first cast lots on the two goats so as to determine which one was to be slain that his blood might be used in the holy place, Aaron was to kill the bullock for his own sin offering, preparing himself for his solemn function of entering the holy place by making atonement in behalf of himself and of his house. A still further preparation for the reverent approach to the awful presence of Jehovah was to make a cloud of incense, by means of a censer brought within the veil, so that the mercy seat might be hidden.

14-19. The sprinkling of blood. Silently and alone, no one being permitted to be in the tent of meeting, Aaron was to enter beyond the veil with the blood of the bullock slain for his own sin offering, which he was to sprinkle upon the mercy seat on the east side, i. e., the side next to the veil, and also seven times on the 15 Then shall he kill the goat of the sin offering, that is for the people, and bring his blood within the veil, and do with that blood as he did with the blood of the bullock, and sprinkle it upon the mercy seat, and before the mercy seat:

16 And he shall make an atonement for the holy place, because of the uncleanness of the children of Israel, and because of their transgressions in all their sins: and so shall he do for the tabernacle of the congregation, that remaineth among them in the midst of their uncleanness.

17 And there shall be no man in the tabernacle of the congregation when he goeth in to make an atonement in the holy place, until he come out, and have made an atonement for himself, and for his household, and for all the congregation of Israel.

18 And he shall go out unto the altar that is before the Lord, and make an atonement for it; and shall take of the blood of the bullock, and of the blood of the goat, and put it upon the horns of the altar round about.

19 And he shall sprinkle of the blood upon it with his finger seven times, and cleanse it, and hallow it from the uncleanness of the children of Israel.

20 And when he hath made an end of reconciling the holy place, and the tabernacle of the congregation, and the altar, he shall bring the live goat:

21 And Aaron shall lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat, and confess over him all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their transgressions in all their sins, putting them upon the head of the goat, and shall send him away by the hand of a fit man into the wilderness:

22 And the goat shall bear upon him all their iniquities unto a land not inhabited: and he shall let go the goat in the wilderness.

15 his finger seven times. Then shall he kill the goat of the sin offering, that is for the people, and bring his blood within the veil, and do with his blood as he did with the blood of the bullock, and sprinkle it upon the mercy-seat, and before

16 the mercy-seat: and he shall make atonement for the holy place, because of the uncleanness of the children of Israel, and because of their transgressions, even all their sins: and so shall he do for the tent of meeting, that dwelleth with

17 them in the midst of their uncleanness. And there shall be no man in the tent of meeting when he goeth in to make atonement in the holy place, until he come out, and have made atonement for himself, and for his household,

18 and for all the assembly of Israel. And he shall go out unto the altar that is before the Lord, and make atonement for it; and shall take of the blood of the bullock, and of the blood of the goat, and put it upon the horns of the altar

19 round about. And he shall sprinkle of the blood upon it with his finger seven times, and cleanse it, and hallow it from the uncleanness of the children of Israel. And when he hath made an end of atoning for the holy place, and the tent

20 of meeting, and the altar, he shall present the live goat: and Aaron shall lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat, and confess over him all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their transgressions, even all their sins:

21 and he shall put them upon the head of the goat, and shall send him away by the hand of a man that is in readiness into the wilderness:

22 and the goat shall bear upon him all their iniquities unto a solitary land: and he shall let go ground before the mercy seat. The Hebrew in ver. 14 leaves it somewhat doubtful whether there was any sprinkling except the seven-fold sprinkling before the mercy seat, and Jewish authority favors the opinion that this was the only sprinkling. But in ver. 15, which describes the precisely similar ceremony with the blood of the goat, the expression unambiguously specifies a single sprinkling upon and a seven-fold one before the mercy seat. Then having returned and slain the goat designated by lot as the people's sin offering to Jehovah, he was to enter within the veil once more and sprinkle its blood as he had done that of the bullock. This was to make atonement for the holy place because of the taint which it had acquired on account of the sins and uncleannesses of the people. In like manner the tent of meeting was to be purified, and this purification especially included the altar of incense, as we learn from Exod. 30:10. Finally the great brazen altar "before the Lord," i. e., in the court (cf. Exod. 29:11) was to be purified by the application of the mingled blood to its horns round about, and the seven-fold sprinkling.

20-22. The sending away of the live goat. It was in connection with this part of the ceremonial that the most noticeable feature of the ritual of atonement occurred. The consideration of ver. 8 and 10 comes in here. In direct antithesis to the lot which is cast "for the Lord" (ver. 8) is the lot "for the scapegoat," or rather, "for Azazel" (R. V.). Ver. 10 reads: "But the goat on which the lot fell for Azazel shall be set alive before Jehovah, to make atonement upon him, to send him away to Azazel into the wilderness." The word אַזָּזֵל, 'Azāzēl, occurs only in this chapter—here and in ver. 26. By the best modern scholars it is considered most probable that the word is derived from a root in use in Arabic but not in Hebrew, meaning to remove or separate, and that it designates a personal being placed in opposition to Jehovah, perhaps some evil spirit or demon believed to be in banishment and to inhabit desert places. The notion of such beings infesting the desert was not unfamiliar to Jewish thought (see Isa. 13:21; 34:14; Matt. 12:43; Luke 8:27; Rev. 18:2). "In the earliest parts of the book of Enoch (probably about 180 B. C.), Azazel appears as the leader of the angels who formed unions with the daughters of men, and whose offspring, the giants, filled the earth with unrighteousness and blood (Enoch 6:1, 2; 7:1-5; 9:6, 8-11; see Gen. 6:1-6), and he is represented (10:4, 5) as fast bound, as a punishment for his sins, under rough and jagged rocks in the wilderness" (DRIVER). But what notion lay at the root of the practice of sending a goat to him is not known. As the two goats constituted complementary elements

23 And Aaron shall come into the tabernacle of the congregation, and shall put off the linen garments, which he put on when he went into the holy place, and shall leave them there:

24 And he shall wash his flesh with water in the holy place, and put on his garments, and come forth, and offer his burnt offering, and the burnt offering of the people, and make an atonement for himself, and for the people.

25 And the fat of the sin offering shall he burn upon the altar.

26 And he that let go the goat for the scapegoat shall wash his clothes, and bathe his flesh in water, and afterward come into the camp.

27 And the bullock for the sin offering, and the goat for the sin offering, whose blood was brought in to make atonement in the holy place, shall one carry forth without the camp; and they shall burn in the fire their skins, and their flesh, and their dung.

28 And he that burneth them shall wash his clothes, and bathe his flesh in water, and afterward he shall come into the camp.

29 And this shall be a statute for ever unto you: that in the seventh month, on the tenth day of the month, ye shall afflict your souls, and do no work at all, whether it be one of your own country, or a stranger that sojourneth among you:

30 For on that day shall the priest make an atonement for you, to cleanse you, that ye may be clean from all your sins before the Lord.

24 there: and he shall bathe his flesh in water in the holy place, and put on his garments, and come forth, and offer his burnt offering and the burnt offering of the people, and make atone-

25 ment for himself and for the people. And the fat of the sin offering shall he burn upon the

26 altar. And he that leteth go the goat for Azazel shall wash his clothes, and bathe his flesh in water, and afterward he shall come into the

27 camp. And the bullock of the sin offering, and the goat of the sin offering, whose blood was brought in to make atonement in the holy place,

28 shall be carried forth without the camp; and they shall burn in the fire their skins, and their flesh, and their dung. And he that burneth

29 them shall wash his clothes, and bathe his flesh in water, and afterward he shall come into the camp.

30 that sojourneth among you: for on this day shall atonement be made for you, to cleanse you; from all your sins shall ye be clean before in one sin offering, and as therefore the goat sent away could be no idolatrous propitiation to an evil spirit, it seems most probable that the sending of the confessed and atoned-for sins to Azazel was simply their dismissal, in an indefinite way, as befits all consignment to forgetfulness, to the vaguely conceived place where they belonged. For the common worshiper, then, the broad impression of this Day of Atonement was that the sins of the people were not only atoned for by the death of a victim, but separated from them and banished to forgetfulness through the same offering in another phase. While in the typical sacrifice this could be effected only by means of two victims, in the eternal reality to which it pointed the one Saviour who died and rose again becomes at once the atoning Sacrifice and the risen Sanctifier by whom our sin is removed (Heb. 9 : 24-28). Some such idea as this of sending the people's sins away into the unclean wilderness is found in the visions of Zechariah, chap. 5, where the nation's sin which God has forgiven is carried into the unclean land of Babylon.

23-28. Remaining ceremonies. Having bathed his flesh and reassumed his high-priestly garments, Aaron was to offer the burnt offering for himself and for the people, and to burn the fat of the sin offering whose blood had been brought into the holy place. It will be remembered that none of this sin offering might be eaten (see 6 : 30). The ordinary ritual of the burnt and sin offering was used. The one who conducted away the goat to Azazel and also the one who burned the flesh of the sin offering without the camp were to bathe their flesh and wash their clothes before returning to the camp, perhaps under a rule that whoever left the camp during a religious solemnity incurred uncleanness. Certain accessory offerings in connection with the Day of Atonement are mentioned in Num. 29 : 7-11. These consisted of a young bullock, a ram, seven lambs, and a hairy he goat for a sin offering, with their meal and drink offerings.

29-34. The institution of the Day of Atonement. This seventh month of the sacred year has been called the Sabbatical month. In the first day was celebrated the feast of Trumpets (23 : 24); the tenth day was the Day of Atonement, and on the fifteenth the feast of Booths began (23 : 34). 29. The stranger means a foreigner who dwelt among the people and conformed to their customs. Foreigners could share in most of the privileges of sacrifice and religious festivity; but in order to participate in the Passover they must be circumcised (see Exod. 12 : 48; Num. 9 : 14). Afflict your souls, probably by fasting. This is the only fast prescribed in the law. The succeeding generations of high priests in their succession were to preside over the Day of Atonement by a perpetual statute or ordinance of eternity. The great general idea of the day and its purpose was, that ye may be clean from all your sins before the Lord (ver. 30).

The last sentence of ver. 34 hardly seems an appropriate ending for the chapter in its present

31 It shall be a sabbath of rest unto you, and ye shall afflict your souls, by a statute for ever.

32 And the priest, whom he shall anoint, and whom he shall consecrate to minister in the priest's office in his father's stead, shall make the atonement, and shall put on the linen clothes, even the holy garments :

33 And he shall make an atonement for the holy sanctuary, and he shall make an atonement for the tabernacle of the congregation, and for the altar, and he shall make an atonement for the priests, and for all the people of the congregation.

34 And this shall be an everlasting statute unto you, to make an atonement for the children of Israel for all their sins once a year. And he did as the Lord commanded Moses.

31 the Lord. It is a sabbath of solemn rest unto you, and ye shall afflict your souls; it is a statute for ever.

32 And the priest, who shall be anointed and who shall be consecrated to be priest in his father's stead, shall make the atonement, and shall put on the linen garments, even the

33 holy garments: and he shall make atonement for the holy sanctuary, and he shall make atonement for the tent of meeting and for the altar; and he shall make atonement for the priests

34 and for all the people of the assembly. And this shall be an everlasting statute unto you, to make atonement for the children of Israel because of all their sins once in the year. And he did as the Lord commanded Moses.

form. It has been suggested that it may be a survival from an earlier stage of the chapter when it contained only directions which could be executed immediately. The chapter, it will be remembered, sets out from the occasion of the death of Nadab and Abihu as if its object were simply to define when and how Aaron might enter the holy place (ver. 2), but it goes on to give a complete and elaborate ritual for the great annual cleansing of the sanctuary and the priests and the people; and it is not improbable that additions were made to it as the usages of the temple grew in elaborateness. It is certain that if ceremonial did not grow during the time preceding the codification of the priestly law, it did afterward, as is illustrated in the Mishnic treatise Yoma, in which several additions in practice are made to the law as laid down in Leviticus.

“For the like of the great Day of Atonement, we look in vain in any other people. If every sacrifice pointed to Christ, this most luminously of all. What the fifty-third of Isaiah is to his Messianic prophecies, that, we may truly say, is the sixteenth of Leviticus to the whole system of Mosaic types, the most consummate flower of the Messianic symbolism. All the sin offerings pointed to Christ, the great High Priest and Victim of the future; but this . . . with a distinctness found in no other” (KELLOGG).

As the system of sin offerings appears to have been the creation of the law, and as the Day of Atonement is the culmination of the expiatory sacrifices, it will be interesting at this point to observe what conception of the nature of sin and of its remedy was indicated and contributed to the world by means of this highest attainment of ritual expression. Perhaps we may say that the definite conception which this ceremonial treatment of sin added to the world's thought was that of sin as a thing—a substance which could be made the object of attention and of remedial treatment, a thing which could defile, which could be abhorred, which by atonement could be covered from the divine observation, which could be so imaged in the common mind that measures could be taken to send it away into banishment. In short, the system of expiation objectified sin. This is a distinct modification of, and for some purposes an advance on, the first obvious idea of the nature of sin which common perception would form of it. To the obvious primary perception sin is an act of disobedience or transgression by which one incurs the displeasure of the superior Power. The act is thought of purely and only as related to an external higher Will. The obvious remedial treatment of sin in this aspect of it is simply to desist from the act and obtain the forgiveness of the one aggrieved. Now this is called the ethical conception of sin, and it is sometimes thought of as the only just and complete conception—a later achievement of the human mind and destined to supersede that lower conception of sin by which it becomes as it were a substance, an object of expiation and purification.

But as a matter of fact, is not this latter conception, this quasi physical thought of sin, a more developed idea, and one taking a deeper hold upon human nature? Is it not a conception distinctly necessary as complementary to the purely ethical idea, if the human race is to get such a grasp on the nature of its corruption as to be delivered from it? Thinking of himself as a transgressor, related simply to an external will, the sinner is put upon the round of penitence, of resolutions of amendment, of attempts at better behavior, all of which is necessary to make a good man of him, but all of which is only one side of the process of renewal. On the other hand, thinking of himself as a defiled and unclean creature, reckoning with a condition rather than with an act, related not simply to an external will transgressed but to his own rightful nature debased, the sinner is put upon the round of finding out his own nature and corruption—he enters on that spiritual development which issues in his purifying himself even as his Redeemer is pure. The first step in the development of this thought of purification from the deeply ingrained defilement of sin is the conception of sin as a thing which defiles, a thing separable in thought from the actor, a thing that can be washed away, atoned away, sent away, symbolically by lustrations and sprinkled blood, really by the infusion of the purifying divine life.

So in the priestly cultus there was the provision made by which the congregation was constantly reminded of the substantial nature of sin. Whenever a victim was slain as a sin offering, and especially when on the great Day of Atonement the confessed sins of the whole congregation were sent away in symbol to Azazel, the people's moral and ceremonial corruption was exhibited as a thing which could be handled and dealt with, which could be separated from human nature and detested, a thing which did not vanish into nothingness on the person's desisting from the act but remained as a defiling element in the life until it was confessed and atoned for and done away. And this conception of sin as a substance came in connection with that other ceremonial schooling by which the Israelitish conscience was made exceedingly sensitive to physical defilement; so that with double vividness there would be impressed on the rightly developed mind of the worshiper, by the public services of his church, the momentously practical truth that sin defiles the conscience so that the only salvation is by a purifying atonement.

This idea of sin as a defilement was contributed to the world as a permanent possession.

The expiatory system of the Hebrews was a foreshadowing of the atonement of Christ; but it was not simply a transitory type, appearing beforehand and then destined to be lost, engulfed, annihilated by the all-superseding glory of the fulfillment. It remains as a permanent element in the thought by which we are enabled to conceive of the nature of Christ's work itself. The life and death and resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ, with all its inspiring power as a culmination of God's revelation of himself, is a mighty fact which cannot be exhausted by a single expression. It relates itself to sin as transgression, and procures for the believer forgiveness. It relates itself to sin as a fatal selfishness, and opens out the broader life of love. It relates itself to sin as a death, a spiritual helplessness, and imparts the power of a resurrection. But all these thoughts of Christ's relation to us would be incomplete if our schooling through the Old Testament had not taught us to look deeper into our own souls and find Christ related to sin as a momentous and deadly defilement to which he ministers atonement and cleansing. It is this aspect of the death of Christ to which the sin offering of the Jews points forward. There is nothing gained for the cause of truth by the exercise of that ingenuity which seeks to find everything about Christ promiscuously foreshadowed in these types. It is enough that by this schooling in the conception of sin as a defilement, and this age-long ceremonial habit of seeking atonement, the lost world has been enabled to accept Christ as the divine atonement and cleanser from the uncleanness which makes us unfit for communion with the infinite purity.

PART SECOND. THE LAW OF HOLINESS, CHAPTERS 17 TO 26.

The part of Leviticus included in these chapters seems to constitute a distinct section by itself, characterized by the predominance of certain expressions very rarely found in other parts of the priestly legislation, and provided with a hortatory framework in a manner unlike that of the other laws of Leviticus. It begins, indeed, and ends in a manner quite similar to the two great pentateuchal codes, the so-called "Book of the Covenant" (Exod. 20 : 22 to 23 : 33), and the Deuteronomic code (Deut. 12 to 28). All three of these groups of laws open with instructions regarding the place of sacrifice and end with an exhortation containing promises and threatenings. The principle which characterizes the section is the principle of holiness—partly ceremonial, partly moral—as a quality distinguishing Israel or demanded of Israel by Jehovah and regulating that people's life. While holiness is demanded in other parts of the Pentateuch, here it is insisted on with such emphasis and frequency as to make it the leading motive. The divine commands are repeatedly grounded on the proposition, "for I Jehovah am holy," or "I am Jehovah that sanctify you." The title, therefore, "The Law of Holiness," given it by Klostermann in 1877, has ever since been recognized by critics as a peculiarly happy one.

CHAPTER XVII.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,
 2 Speak unto Aaron, and unto his sons, and unto all the children of Israel, and say unto them, This is the thing which the Lord hath commanded, saying,
 3 What man soever there be of the house of Israel, that killeth an ox, or lamb, or goat, in the camp, or that killeth it out of the camp,
 4 And bringeth it not unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, to offer an offering unto the Lord before the tabernacle of the Lord; blood shall be imputed unto that man; he hath shed blood; and that man shall be cut off from among his people:
 5 To the end that the children of Israel may bring their sacrifices, which they offer in the open field, even that they may bring them unto the Lord, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, unto the priest, and offer them for peace offerings unto the Lord.
 6 And the priest shall sprinkle the blood upon the altar of the Lord at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and burn the fat for a sweet savour unto the Lord.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,
 2 Speak unto Aaron, and unto his sons, and unto all the children of Israel, and say unto them; This is the thing which the Lord hath commanded, saying, What man soever there be of the house of Israel, that killeth an ox, or lamb, or goat, in the camp, or that killeth it without the 4 camp, and hath not brought it unto the door of the tent of meeting, to offer it as an oblation unto the Lord before the tabernacle of the Lord: blood shall be imputed unto that man; he hath shed blood; and that man shall be cut off from 5 among his people: to the end that the children of Israel may bring their sacrifices, which they sacrifice in the open field, even that they may bring them unto the Lord, unto the door of the tent of meeting, unto the priest, and sacrifice them for sacrifices of peace offerings unto the 6 Lord. And the priest shall sprinkle the blood upon the altar of the Lord at the door of the tent of meeting, and burn the fat for a sweet savour

Some of the words and phrases almost if not quite peculiar to this section are so frequently repeated as to be characteristic. Such are the two forms of expression already mentioned, and also such expressions as "I will set my face against," "I will cut off from his people," "My statutes and my ordinances," "To keep and do," "To profane the name of Jehovah," "To profane a holy thing, or sanctuary," "And thou shalt fear thy God," "Their blood shall be upon them," "Bear sin, or iniquity," in various forms of the phrase, all of them indicating an imperative element of personal responsibility and of divine requirement.

"The characteristic which immediately strikes us is that of a priestly law, satisfying, above all things, the requirements of the ritual. The Deuteronomic demand that sacrifices should be brought to only one sanctuary, allowing, however, according to Deut. 12:15, that animals might be slaughtered and eaten at any place, is now raised higher, so as to mean that every act of slaughter is to be regarded as a sacrifice, and consequently can only be performed at the one legitimate sanctuary. . . Then there follow in confused alternation regulations concerning the eating of blood and carcasses, forbidden degrees of marriage and sins of unchastity, treatment of the sacrifices, the gleanings, the rights of neighbors in every conceivable relation, also the priests' duties, the celebration of the religious festivals, the Sabbath year and the year of Jubilee—all from the point of view that the transgression of these commandments defiles the land and violates the divinely willed holiness of the people, and thus of Jahweh himself" (KAUTZSCH). Ezekiel, the priestly prophet, has affinities with the priestly legislation in general, but his affinities with this part of the priest code are peculiarly striking and numerous.

Chap. 17. ON KILLING ANIMALS FOR FOOD. 1-7. The legislation given here is directed toward a particular end, namely, the promotion of the practice in Israel of bringing all sacrifices to the door of the tent of meeting as peace offerings (ver. 5). The motive seems to be to discourage the practice of idolatry or nature-worship, a motive which is particularly strong in the law of holiness. The general principle which was intended to be lodged in the conscience of the individual was that a person was responsible for the blood of an animal of the kind offered in sacrifice as much as for that of a person (ver. 4), only in the case of the beast the imputation of murder was removed by the act of sacrifice. It should be remembered that in the East flesh-eating is not an everyday custom. "Except at a feast, or to entertain a guest, or in sacrifice before a local shrine, the Bedouin tastes no meat but the flesh of the gazelle or other game." "Among the Semitic nations above all others the taking of the life of an animal, especially an animal of a kind which might be offered in sacrifice, has always been regarded as a solemn act, partaking of a somewhat religious character." Indeed, the same Hebrew word means both to slay and to sacrifice. The ordinances of Manu do not approve of any flesh being eaten which has not been offered to a deity. Modern Moslems "appear to reckon all flesh as carrion unless Bismillah (i. e., 'in the name of God') is pronounced when the throat is cut, or, in the case of game, when the gun is fired or the leash of the dog slipped."

7 And they shall no more offer their sacrifices unto devils, after whom they have gone a whoring. This shall be a statute for ever unto them throughout their generations.

8 And thou shalt say unto them, Whatsoever man there be of the house of Israel, or of the strangers which sojourn among you, that offereth a burnt offering or sacrifice,

9 And bringeth it not unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, to offer it unto the Lord; even that man shall be cut off from among his people.

10 And whatsoever man there be of the house of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn among you, that eateth any manner of blood; I will even set my face against that soul that eateth blood, and will cut him off from among his people.

11 For the life of the flesh is in the blood: and I have given it to you upon the altar to make an atonement for your souls: for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul.

7 unto the Lord. And they shall no more sacrifice their sacrifices unto the he-goats, after whom they go a whoring. This shall be a statute for ever unto them throughout their generations.

8 And thou shalt say unto them, Whatsoever man there be of the house of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn among them, that offereth

9 a burnt offering or sacrifice, and bringeth it not unto the door of the tent of meeting, to sacrifice it unto the Lord; even that man shall be cut off from his people.

10 And whatsoever man there be of the house of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn among them, that eateth any manner of blood; I will set my face against that soul that eateth blood, and will cut him off from among his people.

11 For the life of the flesh is in the blood: and I have given it to you upon the altar to make atonement for your souls: for it is the blood that maketh atonement by reason of the life.

7. And they shall no more offer, etc. The universally prevalent religious or superstitious feelings with which the slaughter of animals was regarded would constitute an ever-haunting temptation to the people to sacrifice to some strange deity or demon in the absence of the sanctuary and the educated priest. It seems to have been in order to stamp out this practice that this restriction of slaughter to animals presented at the sanctuary was intended. The devils, or rather he-goats (R. V.), were satyrs or unclean spirits, "field devils" (LUTHER), supposed to inhabit the desert (Isa. 13 : 21 ; 34 : 14); and these under the form of the goat were worshiped especially in Lower Egypt with the accompaniment of the most impure rites, such as are most aptly and literally described by the clause, after whom they have gone a whoring, with which this sentence ends. The idolatrous Jeroboam is said by the chronicler (2 Chron. 11 : 15) to have made provision for their worship, and possibly some of the high places which Josiah removed (2 Kings 23 : 8) ought to be called "high places of the satyrs" instead of "high places of the gates," a change of reading which involves the alteration of only one vowel-point in Hebrew.

This shall be a statute forever, etc. The method of explaining this somewhat puzzling enactment, which is apparently abrogated in Deut. 12 : 15, 16, 20-24, constitutes the distinguishing mark of the critic who finds these laws in their present form to be a comparatively late compilation, on the one hand, or the critic who holds that the whole Pentateuch as it stands was written by Moses on the other. There seems to be a closer restriction to the sanctuary in this place than in the priest code outside of the law of holiness (see 7 : 22-27). It seems incredible that a single author should enact in the wilderness a "perpetual statute," and then in the natural event of his arriving at the borders of his destined promised land, which he could not but have foreseen, should contradict himself without explanation a few years later. A possible explanation of the matter, on the supposition that under the first temple régime the priest legislation was in a state of growth, would be that the compiler of the present book of Leviticus found in his original document a requirement of this nature, only compelling the bringing of slaughtered beasts to some sanctuary, and reflecting the practice of the time when local sanctuaries were legal (see Exod. 20 : 24); and possibly when the final codification was made the exilic redactor contemplated only a restricted community such as on their return from the captivity would settle in the immediate vicinity of Jerusalem, and so accommodated the regulation to the single sanctuary (see ver. 4). The permission of the Deuteronomist to slaughter and eat freely in the fields was necessary at the time when the rigid restriction of worship to the central sanctuary characteristic of Deuteronomy was enacted (see Deut. 12 : 15, 16).

8, 9. Sacrifices not to be offered except at the central sanctuary. This is simply the negative side of the precept which has been given in positive form with the ritual of each kind of sacrifice—it being specified in each case that the offering shall be at the door of the tent of meeting. It includes in the prohibition the foreigner dwelling among the people, and prescribes the punishment for transgression, namely, that the man shall be cut off from among his people by death.

10-14. Blood not to be eaten: in the case of animals of a kind not offered in sacrifice, it is to be poured upon the earth. The prohibition of the eating of blood is repeated seven times in the Pentateuch: Gen. 9 : 4; Lev. 3 : 17; 7 : 26, 27; 17 : 10-14; 19 : 26; Deut. 12 : 16, 23, 24;

12 Therefore I said unto the children of Israel, No soul of you shall eat blood, neither shall any stranger that sojourneth among you eat blood.

13 And whatsoever man there be of the children of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn among you, which hunteth and catcheth any beast or fowl that may be eaten; he shall even pour out the blood thereof, and cover it with dust.

14 For it is the life of all flesh; the blood of it is for the life thereof: therefore I said unto the children of Israel, Ye shall eat the blood of no manner of flesh: for the life of all flesh is the blood thereof: whosoever eateth it shall be cut off.

15 And every soul that eateth that which died of itself, or that which was torn with beasts, whether it be one of your own country, or a stranger, he shall both wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even: then shall he be clean.

16 But if he wash them not, nor bathe his flesh; then he shall bear his iniquity.

12 Therefore I said unto the children of Israel, No soul of you shall eat blood, neither shall any stranger that sojourneth among you eat blood.

13 And whatsoever man there be of the children of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn among them, which taketh in hunting any beast or fowl that may be eaten; he shall pour out the blood thereof, and cover it with dust. For as to the life of all flesh, the blood thereof is all one with the life thereof: therefore I said unto the children of Israel, Ye shall eat the blood of no manner of flesh: for the life of all flesh is the blood thereof: whosoever eateth it shall be cut

15 off. And every soul that eateth that which dieth of itself, or that which is torn of beasts, whether he be homeborn or a stranger, he shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even: then shall he be clean.

16 But if he wash them not, nor bathe his flesh, then he shall bear his iniquity.

CHAPTER XVIII.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

15 : 23. Compare comment on 3 : 17 ; 7 : 26, 27. The law in this place is especially extended to the foreigner dwelling among the Israelites; and it enters more particularly into the reason for the prohibition. That reason is that the blood is the life or soul, a principle which is also stated more briefly in Gen. 9 : 4 and Deut. 12 : 23. As identified with the life of the animal the blood is set apart as the medium of atonement upon the altar; and this is to rest upon the conscience as a supplementary reason for abstaining from eating it. The last part of ver. 11 literally reads, the blood it maketh atonement by virtue of the soul, i. e., "It was not the blood as such, but the blood as the vehicle of the soul which possessed expiatory virtue" (KEIL). In the case of edible game the fact of the blood being used for expiation could not be urged as a reason for abstaining, but the general principle is reverted to: As to the life of all flesh, the blood thereof is all one with the life thereof.

15, 16. Purification in case one eats that which dies naturally or is torn by beasts. Considering the strong feeling against eating flesh that is not properly slaughtered which is apparent in all the legislation (Exod. 22 : 31 ; Deut. 14 : 21), one is struck by the easy form of purification here prescribed for the reinstatement of the offender. If this was neglected, however, the person must bear his iniquity, i. e., became guilty (ver. 16); and under the general principle contained in 5 : 2 a sin offering was required. The law in this place reflects a different feeling toward the foreigner from that in Deut. 14 : 21; he being there so strongly differentiated from the "holy people" that the selling to him, or his eating, of a carcass was entirely legitimate, while here he is included in the regulation. It is observable that the status of the foreigner throughout the priest code is more nearly like that of the Israelite than in Deuteronomy; and by some modern critics this is thought to indicate a later stage of development in which the term foreigner is "on the way to assume the later technical sense of προσήλυτος, the foreigner who, being circumcised and observing the law generally, is in full religious communion with Israel" (DRIVER on Deut. 14 : 21). "In the 'Book of the Covenant' (Exod. 20 to 23) the 'sojourner' seems to have no legal status, but there is the injunction not to oppress him (Exod. 22 : 21 ; 23 : 9); in the Decalogue (Exod. 20 : 10) he is commanded to observe the Sabbath. In Deuteronomy he is often commended to the charitable regard and equity of the Israelite, but in one respect (Deut. 14 : 21) the two are on a different footing. His complete equalization with the native Israelite, such as we find in P (e. g., 24 : 22 ; Exod. 12 : 49), dates from the time when Israel was becoming a religious community rather than a nation" (DRIVER).

Chap. 18. UNLAWFUL MARRIAGES AND LUSTS. This chapter consists of a central portion made up of specific laws (ver. 6-23), with an introduction containing a general exhortation enforced by a promise (ver. 1-5) and a conclusion consisting of warnings and threatenings (ver. 24-30). The peculiar style of the law of holiness is especially apparent in the introduction and conclusion. The laws are in the second person singular, while the introduction and conclusion are in the second person plural.

1-5. Paranetic introduction. 2. This introduction commences and ends with that note of the law of holiness so well calculated to stir the conscience of a peculiar people, I am the Lord your God, Jehovah. It is a general admonition not to do after the doings of the Egyptians and Canaanites, but to walk in the statutes and judgments of Jehovah. Of these precepts it is said: 5. Which if a man do, he shall live in them, an expression which is used thrice verbatim by Ezekiel (20 : 11, 13, 21) and once in the Levitical confession in Nehemiah (9 : 29). Paul quotes it twice as a proof that the law as a whole was intended as a means of salvation or eternal life (Rom. 10 : 5 ; Gal. 3 : 12), and our Lord makes the same claim for it in his teachings (Luke 10 : 28). It appears, however, that Ezekiel, and probably also the present author, intended to make no greater claim for the keeping of these statutes than that it would issue in long life and prosperity. Ezekiel, indeed, seems to be speaking not of the law as a whole but of certain statutes which he characterized as tending to life, while others he contrasted with these as not good, and not such that one could live in them (Ezek. 20 : 25). Among the latter statutes, those whose outcome was unfortunate, was apparently that command given in Exodus (13 : 12) that all the firstborn should be set apart unto Jehovah, which under the pressure of superstitious fear had issued in some desolating form of idolatry (Ezek. 20 : 26).

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, I am the Lord your God.

8 The nakedness of thy father's wife shalt thou not uncover: it is thy father's nakedness.

9 The nakedness of thy sister, the daughter of thy father, or daughter of thy mother, whether she be born at home, or born abroad, even their nakedness thou shalt not uncover.

6-18. Unlawful marriages. The general principle is given in ver. 6 that none shall approach to one that is near of kin for the purpose of carnal intercourse, while the following verses are by way of defining the prohibition in detail. An exhaustive list of proscribed degrees is perhaps not intended. The grandmother and the niece are omitted. The daughter and the full sister are not expressly mentioned, though they are necessarily implied in ver. 9, 17. The mother-in-law does not appear in this list, though she is specified in the curse in Deut. 27 : 23. The prohibition relates to both married and unmarried sexual intercourse—technically called “uncovering the nakedness”—but the reference is chiefly to the former. It is addressed to men and not to women; and therefore the reference in ver. 7 to the father's nakedness indicates the father's honor as involved in that of the mother (see R. V.). In general (see ver. 8, 10, 12, 14, 15, 16) it is the honor of the man as the head of the family which is made the main consideration in impressing the person with the enormity of the crime. The offenses specified in ver. 7, 8, 9, 15, 17 are expressly mentioned in chap. 20 (11, 12, 14, 17) as to be punished by death; while on the other hand the only threat held out against the offenses mentioned in ver. 12, 14, 15, 16 is that those committing such crimes shall bear their iniquity, or die childless (see 20 : 19-21). The cases mentioned in ver. 10, 11 are passed over in chap. 20.

8. Thy father's wife. This was Reuben's crime (Gen. 35 : 22 ; 49 : 3, 4) and in Paul's time the offense was held in such abhorrence as to be “not so much as named among the Gentiles” (1 Cor. 5 : 1). 9. Thy sister. It is difficult to distinguish this case from that in ver. 11, but between them they certainly forbid connection with a half-sister. This rule does not seem to have been observed by the early Hebrews, as we should infer from the case of Abraham (Gen. 20 :

12 Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy father's sister: she is thy father's near kinswoman.

13 Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy mother's sister: for she is thy mother's near kinswoman.

14 Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy father's brother, thou shalt not approach to his wife: she is thine aunt.

15 Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy daughter in law: she is thy son's wife; thou shalt not uncover her nakedness.

16 Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy brother's wife: it is thy brother's nakedness.

17 Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of a woman and her daughter, neither shalt thou take her son's daughter, or her daughter's daughter, to uncover her nakedness; for they are her near kinswomen: it is wickedness.

18 Neither shalt thou take a wife to her sister, to vex her, to uncover her nakedness, beside the other in her life time.

19 Also thou shalt not approach unto a woman to uncover her nakedness, as long as she is put apart for her uncleanness.

20 Moreover thou shalt not lie carnally with thy neighbour's wife, to defile thyself with her.

21 And thou shalt not let any of thy seed pass through the fire to Molech, neither shalt thou profane the name of thy God: I am the Lord.

22 Thou shalt not lie with mankind, as with womankind: it is abomination.

12 shalt not uncover her nakedness. Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy father's sister:

13 she is thy father's near kinswoman. Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy mother's sister: for she is thy mother's near kinswoman.

14 Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy father's brother, thou shalt not approach to his wife: she is thine aunt. Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy daughter in law: she is thy son's wife; thou shalt not uncover her naked-

15 ness. Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy brother's wife: it is thy brother's nakedness.

16 Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of a woman and her daughter; thou shalt not take her son's daughter, or her daughter's daughter, to uncover her nakedness; they are near kins-

17 women: it is wickedness. And thou shalt not take a woman to her sister, to be a rival to her, to uncover her nakedness, beside the other in

18 her life time. And thou shalt not approach unto a woman to uncover her nakedness, as long as

19 she is impure by her uncleanness. And thou shalt not lie carnally with thy neighbour's wife,

20 to defile thyself with her. And thou shalt not give any of thy seed to make them pass through

21 the fire to Molech, neither shalt thou profane the name of thy God: I am the Lord. Thou shalt

22 not lie with mankind, as with womankind: it is

12). 12. Thy father's sister. Moses himself was the fruit of such a connection as this, which does not appear to have been considered wrong when the children of Israel were in Egypt (see Exod. 6 : 20). There was perhaps greater prejudice against the marriage of a nephew and aunt than against that of an uncle and niece, which is not mentioned here, and which is permitted by Jewish tradition, because in the former case the question of the kinswoman's superiority to the husband might be more likely to arise and become troublesome. 16. Thy brother's wife. When the brother's widow was left without children it became the duty of the surviving brother, according to another stratum of the legislation, to take her to wife (see Deut. 25 : 5; cf. Matt. 22 : 24). This appears to have been an old Hebrew custom (see Gen. 38 : 8), which was perhaps recognized in Deuteronomy as an exception rendered necessary by the peculiar circumstances described, while the general rule is given here. "As the importance of the individual over the family increased, Levirate marriages were regarded with increasing disfavor. They were discouraged by later Jewish feeling; and in Talmudic times (first to fifth cent. A. D.) legal authorities pronounced usually against them" (DRIVER). 18. A woman to her sister. This refers to the taking of two sisters as wives at the same time to be rivals to each other. The sharp dealing of Laban with Jacob in the matter of Leah and Rachel seems to have rankled in Israelitish memory (see Gen. 29 : 15-30).

19 - 23. Unchastity and Molech worship. 19. Also thou shalt not approach, etc. This crime was to be visited with the heaviest penalty (see 20 : 18). 20. Moreover thou shalt not lie, etc. This comes under the explicit prohibition of the Decalogue (see Exod. 20 : 14), and is also punished with the supreme penalty (20 : 10; Deut. 22 : 22; cf. John 8 : 5). 21. Pass through the fire to Molech, lit., pass through to Molech. The Molech—always with the article—is literally the king. The word consists of the consonants of melek, "king," perhaps vocalized with the vowels of bosheth, "shame," in order to express the Jewish contempt and abhorrence for the heathen god. It is the name or title of the divinity which the men of Judah in the last days of the monarchy were wont to propitiate by the sacrifice of their own children. This "causing to pass through the fire" appears from Ezek. 16 : 20, 21 to have been an actual slaying of the children rather than a mere consecration to Molech by passing through or between fires. The late rabbinical picture of a calf-headed image in which children were burned alive is of very slight authority. At the same time the allusions are not decisive as to whether the victims were first slain like any other burnt offering, or burned alive (comp. Jer. 7 : 31; 19 : 5, with Ezek. 16 : 20; Isa. 57 : 5; Jer. 19 : 4; Ps. 106 : 38), or possibly, as the peculiar expression, "passing through the fire," might indicate, subjected to a fiery ordeal involving the risk, or almost the certainty, of death. These horrid rites were associated especially with the valley of 23 Neither shalt thou lie with any beast to defile thyself therewith; neither shall any woman stand before a beast to lie down thereto: it is confusion.

24 Defile not ye yourselves in any of these things: for in all these the nations are defiled which I cast out before you:

25 And the land is defiled: therefore I do visit the iniquity thereof upon it, and the land itself vomiteth out her inhabitants.

26 Ye shall therefore keep my statutes and my judgments, and shall not commit any of these abominations; neither any of your own nation, nor any stranger that sojourneth among you:

27 (For all these abominations have the men of the land done, which were before you, and the land is defiled;)

28 That the land spue not you out also, when ye defile it, as it spued out the nations that were before you.

29 For whosoever shall commit any of these abominations, even the souls that commit them shall be cut off from among their people.

24 Defile not ye yourselves in any of these things: for in all these the nations are defiled which I

25 cast out from before you; and the land is defiled: therefore I do visit the iniquity thereof upon it, and the land vomiteth out her inhabit-

26 ants. Ye therefore shall keep my statutes and my judgments, and shall not do any of these abominations; neither the homeborn, nor the

27 stranger that sojourneth among you; (for all these abominations have the men of the land done, which were before you, and the land is

28 defiled;) that the land vomit not you out also, when ye defile it, as it vomited out the nation

29 that was before you. For whosoever shall do any of these abominations, even the souls that do them shall be cut off from among their peo-

30 ple. Therefore shall ye keep my charge, that ye do not any of these abominable customs, which were done before you, and that ye defile not yourselves therein: I am the Lord your God.

CHAPTER XIX.

1 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

Hinnom or Tophet where they were practised; and possibly these horrible associations may have contributed to qualify that ill-omened valley to furnish the name Gehenna, "land of Hinnom," to the place of eternal fire, or punishment, as conceived of in the New Testament times (see Matt. 5 : 22, 29, 30). The children of Israel seem to have developed a propensity for this gloomy form of worship, derived from the Canaanites, in the later days of the monarchy when under the anxieties and miseries caused by the advance of the Assyrian power the old gladness of Israel's faith was swallowed up in a sense of divine anger, and all religion was transformed into servile fear. "At the same time the horrid ritual was so closely associated with Jehovah-worship (Ezek. 23 : 39) that Jeremiah more than once finds it necessary to protest that it is not of Jehovah's institution (Jer. 7 : 31; 19 : 5). So too, it is the idea of sacrificing the firstborn to Jehovah that is discussed and rejected in Micah 6 : 7" (W. R. SMITH). Whether these overwhelming temptations to propitiate an angry deity by human sacrifice existed in the time of Moses, or whether, on the other hand, these precepts reflect the conditions of the time when the priest code was put into its final shape, is a question which the present state of our knowledge leaves undecided. The rites connected with the worship of Molech are not known. From the connection in which the prohibitions of Molech worship are found, and from the expressions associated with them, these practices appear to have been essentially connected with magical arts, probably also with unlawful lusts (see 20 : 5, 6; Deut. 18 : 10, 11) and with some particular form of profane swearing (see last clause of this ver. ; 20 : 3; cf. Zeph. 1 : 5). The law in ver. 22, though general in its wording, is probably aimed at the same practice as that prohibited in Deut. 23 : 17, namely, religious prostitution, or prostitution in connection with the temple worship, a practice of Canaanitish origin which made its way into Israel and Judah in the days of the monarchy (see 1 Kings 14 : 24; 15 : 12; 22 : 46; 2 Kings 23 : 7).

24-30. Warning conclusion. The warning circumstance which is held up before the children of Israel, evidently as a great palpable object-lesson, is the destruction of the Canaanites which, except as a matter of faith and intention, had not become a visible fact in the time of the wilderness journey. These nations had defiled the land with the crimes named, particularly, we may presume, those of abominable unchastity and Molech worship. Their destruction is attributed to the visitation of God, and to the disgust of the very land itself which is described as vomiting them out. The people are warned against doing the like acts lest the land also eject them in the same way.

Chap. 19. 1-8. A COLLECTION OF MISCELLANEOUS LAWS. The precepts of this chapter are addressed to the whole congregation of Israel, and they inculcate especially those duties toward God and toward one's neighbor which are derived from the consideration of the 2 Speak unto all the congregation of the children of Israel, and say unto them, Ye shall be holy: for I the Lord your God am holy.

3 Ye shall fear every man his mother, and his father, and keep my sabbaths: I am the Lord your God.

4 Turn ye not unto idols, nor make to yourselves molten gods: I am the Lord your God.

5 And if ye offer a sacrifice of peace offerings unto the Lord, ye shall offer it at your own will.

6 It shall be eaten the same day ye offer it, and on the morrow: and if ought remain until the third day, it shall be burnt in the fire.

7 And if it be eaten at all on the third day, it is abominable; it shall not be accepted.

8 Therefore every one that eateth it shall bear his iniquity, because he hath profaned the hallowed thing of the Lord: and that soul shall be cut off from among his people.

9 And when ye reap the harvest of your land, thou shalt not wholly reap the corners of thy field, neither shalt thou gather the gleanings of thy harvest.

10 And thou shalt not glean thy vineyard, neither shalt thou gather every grape of thy vineyard: thou shalt leave them for the poor and stranger: I am the Lord your God.

11 Ye shall not steal, neither deal falsely, neither lie one to another.

12 And ye shall not swear by my name falsely, neither shalt thou profane the name of thy God: I am the Lord.

13 Thou shalt not defraud thy neighbour, neither rob him: the wages of him that is hired shall not abide with thee all night until the morning.

14 Thou shalt not curse the deaf, nor put a stumblingblock before the blind, but shalt fear thy God: I am the Lord.

15 Ye shall do no unrighteousness in judgment: thou shalt not respect the person of the poor, nor honour the person of the mighty: but in righteousness shalt thou judge thy neighbour.

2 Speak unto all the congregation of the children of Israel, and say unto them, Ye shall be holy:

3 for I the Lord your God am holy. Ye shall fear every man his mother, and his father, and ye shall keep my sabbaths: I am the Lord your God.

4 Turn ye not unto idols, nor make to yourselves

5 molten gods: I am the Lord your God. And when ye offer a sacrifice of peace offerings unto

6 the Lord, ye shall offer it that ye may be accepted. It shall be eaten the same day ye offer

7 it, and on the morrow: and if aught remain until the third day, it shall be burnt with fire.

8 And if it be eaten at all on the third day, it is

9 an abomination; it shall not be accepted: but every one that eateth it shall bear his iniquity, because he hath profaned the holy thing of the 10 Lord: and that soul shall be cut off from his people.

11 And when ye reap the harvest of your land, thou shalt not wholly reap the corners of thy

12 field, neither shalt thou gather the gleanings of thy harvest. And thou shalt not glean thy vine-

13 yard, neither shalt thou gather the fallen fruit of thy vineyard; thou shalt leave them for the 14 poor and for the stranger: I am the Lord your God. Ye shall not steal; neither shall ye deal

15 falsely, nor lie one to another. And ye shall not swear by my name falsely, so that thou profane

16 the name of thy God: I am the Lord. Thou shalt not oppress thy neighbour, nor rob him:

17 the wages of a hired servant shall not abide with thee all night until the morning. Thou shalt

18 not curse the deaf, nor put a stumblingblock before the blind, but thou shalt fear thy God: I

19 am the Lord. Ye shall do no unrighteousness in judgement: thou shalt not respect the person

20 of the poor, nor honour the person of the mighty: but in righteousness shalt thou judge thy neigh-holiness of the God with whom each one had to do. 2. The keynote is Ye shall be holy, for I am holy (cf. 11 : 44, 45 : 20 : 7 ; 1 Peter 1 : 16). This is the characteristic note of the Law of Holiness; but here the divine holiness seems to be conceived of as the prototype and sanction of ethical worth and mercy, rather than as a mere separateness or distance from human frailty such as forms the sanction for ceremonial separateness from common life. This precept is ethically more explicit than the Shema of Deuteronomy (6 : 5), which our Lord calls the first and great commandment, because it expressly teaches the moral nature of Jehovah, while the other assumes that as known and simply emphasizes his unity; but it is in this chapter that the further duty of love to our neighbor—the second commandment—is deduced from the primary obligation of godlike holiness (see on ver. 18). The laws in this first group are analogous to those of the first table of the Decalogue. We have here the fifth and the fourth (ver. 3) and the first and second commandments (ver. 4). The rest of the paragraph is taken up with a repetition and amplification of the regulation already given in 7 : 15–18. 5. Ye shall offer it at your own will, rather, that ye may be accepted (see R. V. ; comp. 1 : 3). In the seventh chapter (loc. cit.) the permission to eat on the next day is given only in case of a vow or a freewill offering, while in case of a thanksgiving offering the sacrifice must be eaten the same day.

9-18. The commands of this group are mostly analogous to those of the second table of the Decalogue, except ver. 12 which is the same as the third commandment. The humane teaching of ver. 9, 10 is repeated in 23 : 22, and still more fully in Deut. 24 : 19–21. 10. Every grape, rather, fallen fruit, as in R. V. The word vineyard may be taken to mean any fruit garden. “The poor is the poor Israelite—the stranger is properly the foreigner, who could possess no land of his own in the land of Israel” (“Bible Commentary”). In ver. 11 we have the eighth commandment, and it is expanded so as to include a prohibition of cheating and lying. The commands in ver. 13–18 indicate a singular humanity and delicacy whose spirit is fittingly summed up in the last clause of ver. 18. 13. Defraud thy neighbor should be oppress thy neighbor (R. V.), the crime being distinguished from that in ver. 11 as a crime of violence or power rather than of craft. The latter clause of this verse inculcates a thought-

16 Thou shalt not go up and down as a talebearer among thy people: neither shalt thou stand against the blood of thy neighbour: I am the Lord.

17 Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thine heart: thou shalt in any wise rebuke thy neighbour, and not suffer sin upon him.

18 Thou shalt not avenge, nor bear any grudge against the children of thy people, but thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself: I am the Lord.

19 Ye shall keep my statutes. Thou shalt not let thy cattle gender with a diverse kind: thou shalt not sow thy field with mingled seed: neither shall a garment mingled of linen and woollen come upon thee.

20 And whosoever lieth carnally with a woman, that is a bondmaid, betrothed to an husband, and not at all redeemed, nor freedom given her; she shall be scourged; they shall not be put to death, because she was not free.

21 And he shall bring his trespass offering unto the Lord, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, even a ram for a trespass offering.

22 And the priest shall make an atonement for him with the ram of the trespass offering before the 16 baur. Thou shalt not go up and down as a talebearer among thy people: neither shalt thou stand against the blood of thy neighbour: I am the Lord.

17 the Lord. Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thine heart: thou shalt surely rebuke thy neighbour, and not bear sin because of him. Thou shalt not take vengeance, nor bear any grudge against the children of thy people, but thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself: I am the Lord.

18 baur, and not bear sin because of him. Thou shalt not take vengeance, nor bear any grudge against the children of thy people, but thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself: I am the Lord.

19 Ye shall keep my statutes. Thou shalt not let thy cattle gender with a diverse kind: thou shalt not sow thy field with two kinds of seed: neither shall there come upon thee a garment of two

20 kinds of stuff mingled together. And whosoever lieth carnally with a woman, that is a bondmaid, betrothed to an husband, and not at all redeemed, nor freedom given her; they shall be punished; they shall not be put to death, be-

21 cause she was not free. And he shall bring his guilt offering unto the Lord, unto the door of the tent of meeting, even a ram for a guilt offering.

22 And the priest shall make atonement for him with the ram of the guilt offering before the fulness for the poor—a golden-rule consideration for his condition as dependent on his daily wage such as was no doubt often neglected (see James 5 : 4). At the same time the poor are not dealt with in any demagogue's spirit, nor stirred up against the rich as a class. In ver. 15 it is to be observed that they are no more to be treated with respect of persons than the mighty. 16. This is practically the ninth commandment somewhat enlarged in its scope. To stand against the blood of thy neighbour is to seek or wish to destroy him by legal means, using the instrumentality of the courts against him in the spirit of revenge rather than of justice. 17. Thou shalt in any wise rebuke, etc. The sense would be more nearly expressed by: Thou shalt take pains to set thy neighbor right, and not bear sin on his account, that is, do not leave him in the dark, or pursue him with secret hatred. All these verses inculcate such a spirit of neighborliness and avoidance of malice as is expressed in general terms in ver. 18, while for exalted delicacy and thoughtfulness nothing could exceed the beauty of ver. 14 which forbids taking advantage of the physically unfortunate. The summary precept in the second half of ver. 18, the benefit of which is extended in ver. 34 to the foreigner, was counted by our Saviour as one of the two commands on which hang all the law and the prophets (Matt. 22 : 39, 40). Its importance was very strongly felt by Paul (Rom. 13 : 9 ; Gal. 5 : 14) and James (James 2 : 8).

19-22. 19. This verse in form commences a new section with a distinct introduction, Ye shall keep my statutes. These four verses, however, seem to be somewhat miscellaneous, or dislocated and alien to the general tenor of the chapter. Ver. 20, for instance, which, unlike the verses preceding, is in the third person, seems to be more properly of a piece with chap. 20, where it would stand suitably after ver. 10. Ver. 21, 22, prescribing a guilt offering, are more after the manner of the priest code than of this Law of Holiness. Thou shalt not let thy cattle, etc. The use of mules was customary, at least in the royal family, in David's time and onward (see 2 Sam. 13 : 29 ; 18 : 9 ; 1 Kings 1 : 33) but these may have been imported from abroad (see 1 Kings 10 : 25). Thou shalt not sow thy field, etc. In Deuteronomy (22 : 9) it is the vineyard, and the penalty is that the seed sown and also the product of the vineyard shall become consecrated to the sanctuary. In the description of the garment of mixed stuff, the addition, of linen and woolen, in the authorized version, is imported by the translators from Deut. 22 : 11. The word שְׂאֵת, sha'atnez, used in both of these passages to describe the stuff, is a peculiar one whose meaning is not exactly known; and it appears that only the particular mixture thus named was forbidden, as it is not unlikely, if we follow Josephus and the rabbins, that the priests' garments and the curtains of the tabernacle were made of some permitted mixture of linen and woolen. 20. She shall be scourged, rather, there shall be judicial investigation, but the penalty according to the Mishnah was scourging. Death was the punishment for unfaithfulness in a betrothed woman, according to Deuteronomy (see Deut. 22 : 23, 24), and she was presumed unfaithful if she was in a position to summon help by an outcry and did not. The apparent difference in these regulations may perhaps be explained by the fact that here the word translated betrothed is not the regular word, and may mean simply legally secured, e. g. as a concubine. 21, 22. The guilt offering was due because the Lord for his sin which he hath done: and the sin which he hath done shall be forgiven him.

23 And when ye shall come into the land, and shall have planted all manner of trees for food, then ye shall count the fruit thereof as uncircumcised: three years shall it be as uncircumcised unto you: it shall not be eaten of.

24 But in the fourth year all the fruit thereof shall be holy to praise the Lord withal.

25 And in the fifth year shall ye eat of the fruit thereof, that it may yield unto you the increase thereof: I am the Lord your God.

26 Ye shall not eat any thing with the blood: neither shall ye use enchantment, nor observe times.

27 Ye shall not round the corners of your heads, neither shalt thou mar the corners of thy beard.

28 Ye shall not make any cuttings in your flesh for the dead, nor print any marks upon you: I am the Lord.

29 Do not prostitute thy daughter, to cause her to be a whore; lest the land fall to whoredom, and the land become full of wickedness.

30 Ye shall keep my sabbaths, and reverence my sanctuary: I am the Lord.

31 Regard not them that have familiar spirits, neither seek after wizards, to be defiled by them: I am the Lord your God.

32 Thou shalt rise up before the hoary head, and honour the face of the old man, and fear thy God: I am the Lord.

33 And if a stranger sojourn with thee in your land, ye shall not vex him.

Lord for his sin which he hath sinned: and he shall be forgiven for his sin which he hath sinned. And when ye shall come into the land, and shall have planted all manner of trees for food, then ye shall count the fruit thereof as their uncircumcision: three years shall they be as uncircumcised unto you; it shall not be eaten.

24 But in the fourth year all the fruit thereof shall be holy, for giving praise unto the Lord. And in the fifth year shall ye eat of the fruit thereof, that it may yield unto you the increase thereof:

26 I am the Lord your God. Ye shall not eat any thing with the blood: neither shall ye use enchantments, nor practise augury. Ye shall not round the corners of your heads, neither shalt thou mar the corners of thy beard. Ye shall not make any cuttings in your flesh for the dead, nor print any marks upon you: I am the

29 Lord. Profane not thy daughter, to make her a harlot; lest the land fall to whoredom, and the land become full of wickedness. Ye shall keep my sabbaths, and reverence my sanctuary: I am

31 the Lord. Turn ye not unto them that have familiar spirits, nor unto the wizards; seek them not out, to be defiled by them: I am the Lord your God. Thou shalt rise up before the hoary head, and honour the face of the old man, and

33 thou shalt fear thy God: I am the Lord. And if a stranger sojourn with thee in your land, ye person had not only sinned with the woman, but had inflicted a damage on the rights of the master. See on the guilt offering, 5 : 14, seq.

23-37. This group of verses is a kind of supplement to ver. 2-19, with a special introduction in ver. 23, and containing injunctions of a somewhat more general character. The section explicitly refers to the condition of things when the people of Israel shall have entered upon their anticipated possession, and is pervaded with the apprehension of the corrupting idolatrous influences with which they will be surrounded. All that goes to foster the feeling that they are a separate people is carefully prescribed. The fruit trees which are planted (ver. 23-25) are to be treated in a way suggestive of the abhorrence of uncircumcision. The eating of meat "upon the blood," i. e. not properly slaughtered (ver. 26), which is many times forbidden (see on 17 : 10) is again referred to, perhaps because among the heathen there may have been idolatrous or magic rites embodying this practice (cf. Ezek. 33 : 25). The rounding of the corners of the head (ver. 27), according to Herodotus, was practised by the desert Arabs in honor of their god Orotal, whence Jeremiah nicknamed them "clipped-corners" (Jer. 9 : 26 ; 25 : 23 ; 49 : 32). The injunction against clipping the corners of the beard is especially emphasized for the priests in 21 : 5. The cutting of the flesh (ver. 28) in token of grief was very common among the excitable races of the East (see Jer. 16 : 6 ; 48 : 37), but it was especially characteristic of the gloomy and fanatical heathen (see 1 Kings 18 : 28). The tattoo marks (ver. 28 b) were not a token of grief, but were often made with some superstitious significance. Finally, the temptation to prostitution (ver. 29) lurked everywhere, and the act often had a religious sanction (cf. 17 : 7 ; Num. 25 : 1, seq.). The great safeguard, calculated to keep strong the sense of national and religious separateness, was faithfulness and reverence for Jehovah's sabbaths and his sanctuary (ver. 30). It was the effort to give these, especially the latter, their essential significance and power which led to the careful regulations about bringing beasts for slaughter to the door of the tent of meeting (see 17 : 1-9).

Faithfulness to God's sabbaths and reverence for his sanctuary would awaken confidence in his guidance, and so preserve the people from the temptation to turn aside after superstitious means of communicating with the unseen world.

31. Them that have familiar spirits . . . wizards, rather, ghosts and familiar spirits. The words used, אֲבוֹתָיִם, רְעֵנִים, 'obhoth, yidd'e 'onim, refer here to the spirits themselves rather than to the persons, as also in 20 : 27, where the expression is, "a man or woman in whom is a spirit or a familiar." The 'obhoth were apparently speaking spirits within the soothsayer, whose oracles came with a twittering or weak and muttering sound as if from the person's belly (Isa. 8 : 19) or by the ventriloquist's art were made to seem to come from the ground (Isa. 29 : 4). The word translated "wizard," which 36 Just balances, just weights, a just ephah, and a just hin, shall ye have: I am the Lord your God, which brought you out of the land of Egypt.

37 Therefore shall ye observe all my statutes, and all my judgments, and do them: I am the Lord.

36 weight, or in measure. Just balances, just weights, a just ephah, and a just hin, shall ye have: I am the Lord your God, which brought 37 you out of the land of Egypt. And ye shall observe all my statutes, and all my judgements, and do them: I am the Lord.

CHAPTER XX.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Again, thou shalt say to the children of Israel, Whosoever he be of the children of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn in Israel, that giveth any of his seed unto Molech; he shall surely be put to death: the people of the land shall stone him with stones.

3 And I will set my face against that man, and will cut him off from among his people; because he hath given of his seed unto Molech, to defile my sanctuary, and to profane my holy name.

4 And if the people of the land do any ways hide their eyes from the man, when he giveth of his seed unto Molech, and kill him not:

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Moreover, thou shalt say to the children of Israel, Whosoever he be of the children of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn in Israel, that giveth of his seed unto Molech; he shall surely be put to death: the people of the land shall

3 stone him with stones. I also will set my face against that man, and will cut him off from among his people; because he hath given of his seed unto Molech, to defile my sanctuary, and to

4 profane my holy name. And if the people of the land do any ways hide their eyes from that man, when he giveth of his seed unto Molech, and put is from the root to know, is apparently another term for the same spirit only under a different aspect, that of being "familiar" with the particular person, or perhaps being acquainted with the secrets of the unseen world. The second term is never used except in connection with the first. Respect for the aged (ver. 32) was and is a virtue in which most of the Eastern nations are exemplary. As to the stranger (ver. 34), or foreigner, the Israelite is expressly forbidden in Exod. 22 : 21 ; 23 : 9 to oppress him, and on the same ground as here, namely, that he himself has been a stranger in the land of Egypt. Here, however, he is bidden to take the foreigner to his heart and treat him like a brother, or love him as himself. The duty of conducting all exchanges with just measures (ver. 35, 36) is a frequent theme for the Old Testament teacher (cf. Deut. 25 : 13-16 ; Prov. 11 : 1 ; 16 : 11 ; 20 : 10 ; Ezek. 45 : 10 ; Amos 8 : 5 ; Micah 6 : 10, 11). The ephah was the standard of dry measure, and according to the estimation of the rabbins contained a little over half a bushel; the hin was the standard of liquid measure, and contained a little less than three quarts. The whole is concluded with the solemn repetition of the formula so often occurring in this Law of Holiness, "I am Jehovah your God, who brought you out of the land of Egypt."

Chap. 20. PENALTIES ENJOINED FOR CERTAIN OFFENSES SPECIFIED IN CHAP. 18, 19.
1-7. Molech worship and divination. This crime of Molech worship is definitely prohibited in 18 : 21. For an account of Molech, see the comment on that verse. The penalty for that form of idolatry is here annexed: the people shall stone the offender with stones, a form of capital punishment calculated to commit all the people in the most public way against the crime, as they all participated in the punishment as executioners. Sojourners or foreigners were as much subject to the law in this matter as the people of the land. If this retributory arrangement should miscarry on account of the idolater's personal popularity among the people (ver. 4, 5), still Jehovah's displeasure would remain, and he would set his face against that man and his family and all those who were carried away by the impure fascination of that base superstition to cut them off from among their people. And the soul that turneth, etc. (see on 19 : 31). This form of superstition, like the Molech worship, is called going a whoring, as if its fascination were something like that appeal to the unreined baser nature made by the immodest and impure. The term is often used simply for spiritual declension from the worship of Jehovah, a sin which, in correspondence with the Hebrew prophetic idea of Jehovah's relation with his people as being like that of a husband to his wife, would possess the nature of adultery. It is interesting to observe how deeply that connubial consciousness of the church, and even of the personal worshiper, as the spouse of God pervades the Jewish and the early Christian religious feeling, so that even James cries out against the avaricious and self-indulgent, "Ye adulteresses, know ye not that the love of the world is enmity against 5 Then I will set my face against that man, and against his family, and will cut him off, and all that go a whoring after him, to commit whoredom with Molech, from among their people.

6 And the soul that turneth after such as have familiar spirits, and after wizards, to go a whoring after them, I will even set my face against that soul, and will cut him off from among his people.

7 Sanctify yourselves therefore, and be ye holy: for I am the Lord your God.

8 And ye shall keep my statutes, and do them: I am the Lord which sanctify you.

9 For every one that curseth his father or his mother shall surely be put to death: he hath cursed his father or his mother; his blood shall be upon him.

10 And the man that committeth adultery with another man's wife, even he that committeth adultery with his neighbour's wife, the adulterer and the adulteress shall surely be put to death.

11 And the man that lieth with his father's wife hath uncovered his father's nakedness: both of them shall surely be put to death; their blood shall be upon them.

12 And if a man lie with his daughter in law, both of them shall surely be put to death: they have wrought confusion; their blood shall be upon them.

13 If a man also lie with mankind, as he lieth with a woman, both of them have committed an abomination: they shall surely be put to death; their blood shall be upon them.

14 And if a man take a wife and her mother, it is wickedness: they shall be burnt with fire, both he and they; that there be no wickedness among you.

15 And if a man lie with a beast, he shall surely be put to death: and ye shall slay the beast.

16 And if a woman approach unto any beast, and lie down thereto, thou shalt kill the woman, and the beast: they shall surely be put to death; their blood shall be upon them.

17 And if a man shall take his sister, his father's daughter, or his mother's daughter, and see her nakedness, and she see his nakedness; it is a wicked thing; and they shall be cut off in the sight of their people: he hath uncovered his sister's nakedness; he shall bear his iniquity.

18 And if a man shall lie with a woman having her sickness, and shall uncover her nakedness: he hath discovered her fountain, and she hath uncovered the fountain of her blood: and both of them shall be cut off from among their people.

5 him not to death: then I will set my face against that man, and against his family, and will cut him off, and all that go a whoring after him, to commit whoredom with Molech, from among

6 their people. And the soul that turneth unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto the wizards, to go a whoring after them, I will even set my face against that soul, and will cut him

7 off from among his people. Sanctify yourselves therefore, and be ye holy: for I am the Lord

8 your God. And ye shall keep my statutes, and do them: I am the Lord which sanctify you.

9 For every one that curseth his father or his mother shall surely be put to death: he hath cursed his father or his mother; his blood shall

10 be upon him. And the man that committeth adultery with another man's wife, even he that committeth adultery with his neighbour's wife, the adulterer and the adulteress shall surely be

11 put to death. And the man that lieth with his father's wife hath uncovered his father's nakedness: both of them shall surely be put to death; their blood shall be upon them. And if a man

12 lie with his daughter in law, both of them shall surely be put to death: they have wrought confusion; their blood shall be upon them. And if a man lie with mankind, as with womankind, both of them have committed abomination: they shall surely be put to death; their blood

14 shall be upon them. And if a man take a wife and her mother, it is wickedness: they shall be burnt with fire, both he and they; that there be

15 no wickedness among you. And if a man lie with a beast, he shall surely be put to death: and ye shall slay the beast. And if a woman

16 approach unto any beast, and lie down thereto, thou shalt kill the woman, and the beast: they shall surely be put to death; their blood shall

17 be upon them. And if a man shall take his sister, his father's daughter, or his mother's daughter, and see her nakedness, and she see his nakedness; it is a shameful thing; and they shall be cut off in the sight of the children of 18 their people: he hath uncovered his sister's nakedness; he shall bear his iniquity. And if a man shall lie with a woman having her sickness, and shall uncover her nakedness; he hath made naked her fountain, and she hath uncovered the fountain of her blood: and both of them shall be cut off from among their people.

God?" (James 4 : 4); and with the belief that he is reproducing the spirit of the Old Testament writings, he likens the intense yearning of the indwelling divine Spirit, in the face of such unfaithfulness, to a conjugal jealousy (ibid., ver. 5). The form of expression, I will set my face against is characteristic of this Law of Holiness (see ver. 3, 5, 6; 17 : 10; 26 : 17). Ver. 7 is a sort of general spiritual expression for the specific duties named in the preceding verses.

8-21. Unlawful marriages and unchastity. This section relates to the marriages and connections prohibited in chap. 18, with the exception of ver. 9. It begins with a fresh introduction, ye shall keep my statutes, like that in 19 : 19. The crime of cursing father or mother (ver. 9) is threatened with the death penalty also in the book of the Covenant (Exod. 21 : 17) and made the subject of a solemn curse in Deuteronomy (27 : 16). It is noteworthy how the crime of cursing a person is made of more importance than modern feeling is apt to attribute to it, as if the curse or imprecation had a validity to harm its victim in some supernatural way beyond the mere outrage to his feelings. Compare 19 : 14, where the legislation defends the unheeding deaf from such an infliction. Our Saviour also cites this penal legislation (Matt. 15 : 4; Mark 7 : 10) when denouncing the hypocrisy of the Pharisees. The offenses mentioned in ver. 10-16, all of which are prohibited in chap. 18, are to be punished by the death of both offenders, including the beasts that are abused. In ver. 17, 18 the punishment is a cutting off from the people, by which Keil understands death, at least an outlawry which would take away the security and happiness or self-respect of the culprit. For the crime specified in ver. 14, the punishment is heightened by the burning of the bodies of the offenders after they are put to 19 And thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy mother's sister, nor of thy father's sister: for he uncovereth his near kin: they shall bear their iniquity.

20 And if a man shall lie with his uncle's wife, he hath uncovered his uncle's nakedness: they shall bear their sin: they shall die childless.

21 And if a man shall take his brother's wife, it is an unclean thing: he hath uncovered his brother's nakedness; they shall be childless.

22 Ye shall therefore keep all my statutes, and all my judgments, and do them: that the land, whither I bring you to dwell therein, spue you not out.

23 And ye shall not walk in the manners of the nation, which I cast out before you: for they committed all these things, and therefore I abhorred them.

24 But I have said unto you, Ye shall inherit their land, and I will give it unto you to possess it, a land that floweth with milk and honey: I am the Lord your God, which have separated you from other people.

25 Ye shall therefore put difference between clean beasts and unclean, and between unclean fowls and clean: and ye shall not make your souls abominable by beast, or by fowl, or by any manner of living thing that creepeth on the ground, which I have separated from you as unclean.

26 And ye shall be holy unto me: for I the Lord am holy, and have severed you from other people, that ye should be mine.

27 A man also or woman that hath a familiar spirit, or that is a wizard, shall surely be put to death: they shall stone them with stones: their blood shall be upon them.

19 And thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy mother's sister, nor of thy father's sister: for he hath made naked his near kin: they shall bear their iniquity.

21 And if a man shall take his brother's wife, it is impurity: he hath uncovered his brother's nakedness; they shall be childless.

22 Ye shall therefore keep all my statutes, and all my judgments, and do them: that the land, whither I bring you to dwell therein, vomit you

23 not out. And ye shall not walk in the customs of the nation, which I cast out before you: for they did all these things, and therefore I abhorred them.

24 But I have said unto you, Ye shall inherit their land, and I will give it unto you to possess it, a land flowing with milk and honey: I am the Lord your God, which have

25 separated you from the peoples. Ye shall therefore separate between the clean beast and the unclean, and between the unclean fowl and the clean: and ye shall not make your souls abominable by beast, or by fowl, or by any thing

26 wherewith the ground teemeth, which I have separated from you as unclean. And ye shall be holy unto me: for I the Lord am holy, and have

27 separated you from the peoples, that ye should be mine. A man also or a woman that hath a familiar spirit, or that is a wizard, shall surely be put to death: they shall stone them with stones; their blood shall be upon them.

CHAPTER XXI.

1 AND the Lord said unto Moses, Speak unto the priests the sons of Aaron, and say unto them, There shall none be defiled for the dead among his people:

2 But for his kin, that is near unto him, that is, for his mother, and for his father, and for his son, and for his daughter, and for his brother,

3 And for his sister a virgin, that is nigh unto him, which hath had no husband; for her may he be defiled.

4 But he shall not defile himself, being a chief man among his people, to profane himself.

5 They shall not make baldness upon their head, neither shall they shave off the corner of their beard, nor make any cuttings in their flesh.

1 AND the Lord said unto Moses, Speak unto the priests the sons of Aaron, and say unto them, There shall none defile himself for the dead

2 among his people; except for his kin, that is near unto him, for his mother, and for his father, and for his son, and for his daughter, and

3 for his brother; and for his sister a virgin, that is near unto him, which hath had no husband,

4 for her may he defile himself. He shall not defile himself, being a chief man among his people,

5 to profane himself. They shall not make baldness upon their head, neither shall they shave off the corner of their beard, nor make any cut-death (cf. 21 : 9; Josh. 7 : 25). In ver. 19-21, Jehovah seems to reserve the punishment to himself, saying, they shall bear their iniquity, an expression which is explained in ver. 20, 21 as meaning that they shall die childless.

22-27. Conclusion and supplement. General faithfulness to Jehovah's statutes is again enjoined, as in ver. 8. The reasons for these regulations and the importance of the people's separateness are again emphasized, as in chap. 18. In connection with this obligation of separateness, recurrence is had in ver. 25 to the distinctions between clean and unclean beasts treated at length in chap. 11. This verse has features in common especially with 11 : 43-45. Modern critics very generally recognize the marked affinity, or identity of origin, of much of that eleventh chapter with this Law of Holiness.

Ver. 27 is supplementary to ver. 6.

Chap. 21, 22. REGULATIONS TOUCHING PRIESTS AND OFFERINGS.

Chap. 21. 1-9. Rules to be observed in certain cases of domestic life by the ordinary priest. These rules relate especially to the priests defiling themselves for the dead, i. e., coming in contact with their bodies so as to become unclean, and to the purity of their domestic relations. The pious offices of the dead by which one became unclean were denied to the priest except in the case of a few very near relatives, those who would form a part of the same family. Even the wife is not mentioned. The conception of the priest's office is dominated by the idea of separateness and purity rather than of sympathy. That picture of the good man acting as the servant and lowly helper of all in distress, carrying their troubles in his heart and alleviating their ills with the touch

6 They shall be holy unto their God, and not profane the name of their God: for the offerings of the Lord made by fire, and the bread of their God, they do offer: therefore they shall be holy.

7 They shall not take a wife that is a whore, or profane; neither shall they take a woman put away from her husband: for he is holy unto his God.

8 Thou shalt sanctify him therefore; for he offereth the bread of thy God: he shall be holy unto thee: for I the Lord, which sanctify you, am holy.

9 And the daughter of any priest, if she profane herself by playing the whore, she profaneth her father: she shall be burnt with fire.

10 And he that is the high priest among his brethren, upon whose head the anointing oil was poured, and that is consecrated to put on the garments, shall not uncover his head, nor rend his clothes;

6 tings in their flesh. They shall be holy unto their God, and not profane the name of their God: for the offerings of the Lord made by fire, the bread of their God, they do offer: therefore

7 they shall be holy. They shall not take a woman that is a harlot, or profane; neither shall they take a woman put away from her husband:

8 for he is holy unto his God. Thou shalt sanctify him therefore; for he offereth the bread of thy God: he shall be holy unto thee: for I the Lord,

9 which sanctify you, am holy. And the daughter of any priest, if she profane herself by playing the harlot, she profaneth her father: she shall be burnt with fire.

10 And he that is the high priest among his brethren, upon whose head the anointing oil is poured, and that is consecrated to put on the garments, shall not let the hair of his head go of divine comfort, so characteristic of the best portrayals of the Christian pastor, is wanting in the Jewish conception of the model priest. The divine as the servant of the human was a conception introduced by Jesus Christ. The priest was rather the cold, dignified witness and exponent of the holiness of Jehovah and his oppositeness to death and corruption. For him to indulge in the ordinary public manifestations in token of grief for the dead was unprofessional conduct, and especially was he to avoid those eccentricities of the toilet which might convey a suggestion of pagan feeling. Any such profaning or secularizing of their high office was forbidden to the priests because it was their office to offer the sacrifices, the bread of their God. This expression, "food" or "bread of God," is characteristic of these two chapters, 21, 22, though a similar form is used in 3 : 16. It is probably a very ancient designation, pointing back to the primitive conception of sacrifice as a meal with the deity worshiped. To avoid uncleanness, the priest would need to keep away from the tent or house where the corpse lay, as its presence, according to Num. 19 : 14, communicated defilement to all who came in. The common priest, however, need not leave the house or tent on the approach of the death of one near of kin, but might remain and take part in the funeral and then regain his sacerdotal qualifications by subsequent purification and sacrifice. The same regulation and permission is given by Ezekiel (44 : 25), and that the permission, despite the absence of express mention in this chapter, included also the wife seems apparent from the fact that when Ezekiel on a special occasion was forbidden to mourn for his wife, it was noticeable enough to serve as a sign (Ezek. 24 : 16, 19). No making baldness on the head, no shaving of the corners of the beard, no cutting of the flesh was permitted, a regulation which was also given to the people at large (cf. 19 : 27, 28; Deut. 14 : 1).

The purity of the priest's family connections (ver. 7) is so vital a concern, not only to himself but to the people, that these are directly addressed, as if singly ("thou," ver. 8), and enjoined to hold him in reverence for the sake of his office. Because the sanctifying influence of religion for the individual depended on its representatives being respected and revered, therefore those conditions must exist which rendered this possible. Not only must the priest be holy to God, not only must there be an official recognition of the dignity of his office, but he must be holy unto thee, the common man. He must not only enforce an outward respect, he must command an inward respect and reverence by all that appeals to the social sense of propriety. The priesthood, therefore, was no irresponsible, divine-right institution, able to ignore the speech of people; as in the first place we saw an obligation to God whose food the priest was set to offer, so now we see an obligation to the good opinion of the people. The daughter of a priest (ver. 9) who should wantonly prostitute herself must be punished, not only with death but with the marked indignity of subsequent burning. The meaning of ver. 4, being a chief man, or husband, among his people, is not certainly known, some word having probably dropped out of the original text that is necessary to its clear understanding.

10-15. By the chief priest. The regulations for the high priest upon whose head the anointing oil had been poured, and who had filled his hand to put on the vestments, were stricter than for the ordinary priests. He is here called the priest who is chief among his brethren, an expression peculiar to this passage. He was not to let the hair of his head go loose nor rend his clothes (ver. 10); he was not to go in to any dead body—not even that of his nearest relative—nor to go out of the sanctuary, i. e., perhaps, incur a ceremonial taint which would debar him from constant fitness for duty. As to his domestic

11 Neither shall he go in to any dead body, nor defile himself for his father, or for his mother;

12 Neither shall he go out of the sanctuary, nor profane the sanctuary of his God; for the crown of the anointing oil of his God is upon him: I am the Lord.

13 And he shall take a wife in her virginity.

14 A widow, or a divorced woman, or profane, or an harlot, these shall he not take; but he shall take a virgin of his own people to wife.

15 Neither shall he profane his seed among his people: for I the Lord do sanctify him.

16 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

17 Speak unto Aaron, saying, Whosoever he be of thy seed in their generations that hath any blemish, let him not approach to offer the bread of his God.

18 For whatsoever man he be that hath a blemish, he shall not approach: a blind man, or a lame, or he that hath a flat nose, or any thing superfluous,

19 Or a man that is brokenfooted, or brokenhanded,

20 Or crookbackt, or a dwarf, or that hath a blemish in his eye, or be scurvy, or scabbed, or hath his stones broken;

21 No man that hath a blemish of the seed of Aaron the priest shall come nigh to offer the offerings of the Lord made by fire: he hath a blemish; he shall not come nigh to offer the bread of his God.

22 He shall eat the bread of his God, both of the most holy, and of the holy.

23 Only he shall not go in unto the vail, nor come nigh unto the altar, because he hath a blemish; that he profane not my sanctuaries: for I the Lord do sanctify them.

24 And Moses told it unto Aaron, and to his sons, and unto all the children of Israel.

11 loose, nor rend his clothes; neither shall he go in to any dead body, nor defile himself for his

12 father, or for his mother; neither shall he go out of the sanctuary, nor profane the sanctuary of his God; for the crown of the anointing oil of

13 his God is upon him: I am the Lord. And he

14 shall take a wife in her virginity. A widow, or one divorced, or a profane woman, an harlot, these shall he not take: but a virgin of his own

15 people shall he take to wife. And he shall not profane his seed among his people: for I am the Lord which sanctify him.

16 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

17 Speak unto Aaron, saying, Whosoever he be of thy seed throughout their generations that hath a blemish, let him not approach to offer the 18 bread of his God. For whatsoever man he be that hath a blemish, he shall not approach: a blind man, or a lame, or he that hath a flat nose,

19 or any thing superfluous, or a man that is brokenfooted, or brokenhanded, or crookbackt, or a dwarf, or that hath a blemish in his eye, or is

20 scurvy, or scabbed, or hath his stones broken; 21 no man of the seed of Aaron the priest, that hath a blemish, shall come nigh to offer the offerings of the Lord made by fire: he hath a

22 blemish; he shall not come nigh to offer the bread of his God. He shall eat the bread of his God, both of the most holy, and of the holy.

23 Only he shall not go in unto the veil, nor come nigh unto the altar, because he hath a blemish; that he profane not my sanctuaries: for I am 24 the Lord which sanctify them. So Moses spake unto Aaron, and to his sons, and unto all the children of Israel.

CHAPTER XXII.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Speak unto Aaron and to his sons, that they

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Speak unto Aaron and to his sons, that they relations, he was permitted to take for a wife only a virgin of his own people. This is understood by the LXX and Philo to mean only a member of the priestly family, but others extend the meaning so as to include any one of pure Israelitish descent. Thus he was not to taint his posterity by a marriage not in keeping with his holy office.

16-24. Conditions of bodily perfection to be satisfied by those discharging priestly duties. These blemishes are correctly named in the Revised version, with the exception, perhaps, of the "flat nose" of ver. 18, which probably means a mutilation of the nose or face. As in the first place there was indicated an amenability of the priest to the dignity of Jehovah, and in the second to the opinion of the judicious among the people, so here there is indicated a care even for the thoughtless and superficial—those who form their impressions from the first glance, and might be hopelessly repelled by an initial aversion. While it is well for all to be schooled to the truth that character is a thing of the heart (cf. 1 Sam. 16 : 7), and that God's minister is not spiritually incapacitated by external awkwardness or inelegance or even deformity, yet it is also well that public religious service should be embodied in an outward form which does not dissipate the unified religious impression or call the attention away from the main purpose to what is unpleasant or in any way particularly obtrusive.

The priest with any of the infirmities named could not officiate publicly or approach the sanctuary in a sacerdotal capacity. He was permitted, however, to be supported by the offerings which were devoted to the sustenance of the priests, namely, the wave offerings, the first-fruits, the firstlings, tithes, and things laid under a ban (Num. 18 : 11-19, 26-29), those which are designated as most holy, as well as the holy gifts. But for those unfortunate men to appear in their disfigurement and imperfection as hierophants was to profane the sanctuary.

The word sanctuaries (ver. 23) does not indicate a plurality of places of public worship, for the single sanctuary is presupposed in this Law of Holiness, but probably the various holy places of the sanctuary itself.

Chap. 22. TWO CONDITIONS FOR PARTAKING OF THE SACRIFICIAL FOOD. 1-9.

4 What man soever of the seed of Aaron is a leper, or hath a running issue; he shall not eat of the holy things, until he be clean. And whoso toucheth any thing that is unclean by the dead, or a man whose seed goeth from him;

1. Ceremonial purity. The general injunction is that the priests shall separate themselves from the holy things (ver. 2), i. e., shall feel and respect the difference between these hallowed things and common things. It is a caution against the danger to which priests are subject, that familiarity with holy things shall breed irreverence and carelessness. The holy things here dealt with are somewhat different from the dread sanctities which Nadab and Abihu suffered such a summary punishment for violating. They are rather the foods which the people have sanctified to God's service, and which have in a sense passed into domestic use by becoming a part of the priests' sustenance. The carelessness into which the priest would be in danger of falling does not so much resemble the modern lineman's carelessness bred by familiarity with the deadly electric current as did that of Nadab and Abihu or Uzzah. It is rather the carelessness which consists in ignoring the pious and tender feelings of the people who have sanctified the gifts, and subjecting them to the shock and grief of seeing the offerings which have carried the tenderest feelings of their hearts put to unworthy uses. There seems to be the consciousness of the worshiping people conveyed in the expression, those things which they hallow unto me (ver. 2). It is noteworthy how strongly the amenability of the priest to the religious or æsthetic feelings of the people comes out in these chapters. He must be holy unto thee, the common layman, according to the regulations of the last chapter (21 : 8), and here he must not outrage the layman's feelings by putting his hallowed gift to unhallowed or even lay use

(ver. 10, seq.). A similar consideration for the pious imagination of the common layman regarding the minister's family ought perhaps to characterize the temporal management of modern pastors. The things which grateful worshippers have sanctified to God by giving to a loved pastor never to their minds become wholly secularized; and the restive young minister who is fain to assert his manliness by being wholly independent of his flock in his domestic management, and flaunting an unworthy use of their gifts before their eyes as a disciplinary lesson, may do the cause of religion an incalculable injury. The modern progressive Protestant notion of the pastor's being wholly secularized and indistinguishable from other people in his common life has much to recommend it, but it must wisely reckon with the tender religious feelings of the people as well as with the sanctities of the church.

The command is first with regard to the hallowed things in general, which the priest is not even to approach (ver. 3) with his uncleanness upon him; but the more specific application is to the holy offerings which were designated for the sustenance of the priests (see on 21 : 16-24). Although these after they had been waved or solemnly lifted became articles of everyday food, yet they never were to be regarded as exactly on a level with food that had not been so offered. The forms of uncleanness which debarred from partaking of the holy food are here recapitulated from other parts of the law. The penalty for the priest who approached the holy things with his uncleanness upon him was exclusion from the sanctuary (ver. 3); and for disregard of 9 They shall therefore keep mine ordinance, lest they bear sin for it, and die therefore, if they profane it: I the Lord do sanctify them.

10 There shall no stranger eat of the holy thing: a sojourner of the priest, or an hired servant, shall not eat of the holy thing.

11 But if the priest buy any soul with his money, he shall eat of it, and he that is born in his house: they shall eat of his meat.

12 If the priest's daughter also be married unto a stranger, she may not eat of an offering of the holy things.

13 But if the priest's daughter be a widow, or divorced, and have no child, and is returned unto her father's house, as in her youth, she shall eat of her father's meat: but there shall no stranger eat thereof.

14 And if a man eat of the holy thing unwittingly, then he shall put the fifth part thereof unto it, and shall give it unto the priest with the holy thing.

15 And they shall not profane the holy things of the children of Israel, which they offer unto the Lord:

16 Or suffer them to bear the iniquity of trespass, when they eat their holy things: for I the Lord do sanctify them.

17 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

18 Speak unto Aaron, and to his sons, and unto all the children of Israel, and say unto them, Whosoever he be of the house of Israel, or of the strangers in Israel, that will offer his oblation for all his vows, and for all his freewill offerings, which they will offer unto the Lord for a burnt offering;

19 Ye shall offer at your own will a male without blemish, of the beeves, of the sheep, or of the goats.

20 But whatsoever hath a blemish, that shall ye not offer: for it shall not be acceptable for you.

21 And whosoever offereth a sacrifice of peace offerings unto the Lord to accomplish his vow, or a freewill offering in beeves or sheep, it shall be perfect to be accepted; there shall be no blemish therein.

9 defile himself therewith: I am the Lord. They shall therefore keep my charge, lest they bear sin for it, and die therein, if they profane it: I am the Lord which sanctify them.

10 There shall no stranger eat of the holy thing: a sojourner of the priest's, or an hired servant, shall not eat of the holy thing.

11 But if a priest buy any soul, the purchase of his money, he shall eat of it; and such as are born in his house, they shall eat of his bread.

12 And if a priest's daughter be married unto a stranger, she shall not eat of the heave offering of the holy things.

13 But if a priest's daughter be a widow, or divorced, and have no child, and is returned unto her father's house, as in her youth, she shall eat of her father's bread: but there shall no stranger eat thereof.

14 And if a man eat of the holy thing unwittingly, then he shall put the fifth part thereof unto it, and shall give unto the priest the holy thing.

15 And they shall not profane the holy things of the children of Israel, which they offer unto the Lord; and so cause them to bear the iniquity that bringeth guilt, when they eat their holy things: for I am the Lord which sanctify them.

16 Or suffer them to bear the iniquity of trespass, when they eat their holy things: for I am the Lord which sanctify them.

17 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 18 Speak unto Aaron, and to his sons, and unto all the children of Israel, and say unto them, Whosoever he be of the house of Israel, or of the strangers in Israel, that offereth his oblation, whether it be any of their vows, or any of their freewill offerings, which they offer unto the Lord

19 for a burnt offering; that ye may be accepted, ye shall offer a male without blemish, of the 20 beeves, of the sheep, or of the goats. But whatsoever hath a blemish, that shall ye not offer:

21 for it shall not be acceptable for you. And whosoever offereth a sacrifice of peace offerings unto the Lord to accomplish a vow, or for a freewill offering, of the herd or of the flock, it shall be perfect to be accepted; there shall be no blemish

Jehovah's ordinances there was even peril of death (ver. 9; cf. Exod. 28 : 35; Lev. 8 : 35; Num. 18 : 32). "When the Israelite offended in a similar manner by eating of the peace offering with his uncleanness upon him, he was to be cut off from amongst his people" (7 : 20).

10-16. 2. Membership in a priest's family. The stranger here is not a foreigner, but any one not of the family of Aaron, a layman. If a layman ate unwittingly he was to restore it with the addition of a fifth (ver. 14), according to the law of the guilt offering (5 : 14-16). The sense of ver. 15, 16, which are somewhat obscure in the original, appears to be that the priests are not to profane the holy things, in which the tenderest feelings of the offerer find expression, by allowing a disorderly sharing of these by laymen, thus causing them, i. e., these unqualified partakers, to bear the iniquity that bringeth guilt when they eat their holy things. The force of the negative at the beginning of the fifteenth verse passes over so as also to include the verb in the sixteenth verse.

17-25. Animals offered in sacrifices to be free from imperfections. Ye shall offer at your own will, etc., rather, that ye may be accepted, etc., as in R. V. The admonition against offering animals with a blemish (ver. 20) is repeated in other places in the law (see Deut. 15 : 21; 17 : 1), and Malachi inveighs against the sin as a grievous and notorious practice in his day (see Mal. 1 : 8, 13, 14). The principle at the basis of this forbidding of imperfect offerings to Jehovah is that God is worthy of nothing short of our best, but this principle is something deeper than a humanly formulated theistic doctrine. It is a trait of human nature. Religious feeling is among the most tender and most easily outraged instincts of human nature, because it is one of the highest. The same is true of æsthetic feeling. Religion and fine art both seek to propitiate our sense for the perfect. While mere mechanical art may be satisfied with a utility which serves a limited purpose, the art which aims at beauty or truth for its own sake can tolerate nothing short of the best in the artist's power. While the tribute or price which discharges a limited human obligation may count itself sufficient when a measurable equity has been satisfied, the gift which religious feeling renders to the Infinite must issue from the top of the offerer's powers. It is not a

26 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

33 that brought you out of the land of Egypt, to be your God: I am the Lord.

utility, it is a yearning expression, and whatever is palpably and purposely imperfect outrages religious feeling. The offer of what is imperfect is the expression of the spirit of mercantilism or barter—a disposition which reduces religion from the spiritual to the conventional and art from the ideal to the utilitarian.

For a freewill offering (ver. 23) an animal with a limb too large or too small might be accepted, but an obligation assumed by a solemn vow could not be so easily discharged, as any performance short of perfect would involve the element of bad faith. The reference of all the items in ver. 24 is to different modes of castration, all of which were practised among the ancients. The last clause in the verse (see R. V.) is understood by Josephus and the rabbins to forbid the practice of castration entirely (see Josephus, "Ant.," IV., 8: 40); and the prohibition of such a perversion of God's creation comports well with such legislation as that found in 19: 19. Driver, however, translates, "Nor shall you sacrifice such animals in your land," and maintains that Josephus' understanding involves a very harsh construction of the Hebrew.

In ver. 25 the stranger, literally, son of the unknown, is not simply the resident foreigner, but, as the rabbins hold, any one dwelling in another land and desiring to honor Israel's God.

26-33. Three special injunctions respecting sacrifices, with concluding exhortation. These three injunctions are: (1) that the young of the herd or the flock are not eligible for sacrifice until they are a week old (cf. Exod. 22: 30); (2) that the mother-animal and its young shall not be killed the same day—a making sacred of the relation between parent and offspring quite in the spirit of Exod. 23: 19 (cf. Exod. 34: 26; Deut. 14: 21) and Deut. 22: 6, 7; (3) that the sacrifice of thanksgiving shall be eaten the same day that it is killed, which is a repetition for the praise offering of the command already given in regard to the peace offering (see 7: 15; 19: 5, 6).

The solemn exhortation which forms the conclusion to the whole chapter may be compared with the conclusion of chap. 18 (ver. 29, 30) and 19 (ver. 37). The injunction against profaning the name of Jehovah is paralleled in ver. 9; 10: 3; 11: 44, 45; 18: 21; 19: 12.

Chap. 23. A CALENDAR OF SACRED SEASONS. This chapter does not give a complete calendar of feasts, but only a list of those stated days and periods of the year on which "holy convocations," or solemn meetings were appointed to be held. Of the recurring regulations concerning the festivals which are found in the various codes of the Pentateuch, this chapter and Num. 28, 29 deal most minutely with the details of their observance; the stress in this chapter being chiefly on the part to be taken in them by the people, while Num. 28, 29 regulates the public sacrifices by which they are to be marked.

CHAPTER XXIII.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,
2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, Concerning the feasts of the Lord, which ye shall proclaim to be holy convocations, even these are my feasts.

3 Six days shall work be done: but the seventh day is the sabbath of rest, an holy convocation; ye shall do no work therein: it is the sabbath of the Lord in all your dwellings.

4 These are the feasts of the Lord, even holy convocations, which ye shall proclaim in their seasons.

5 In the fourteenth day of the first month at even is the Lord's passover.

6 And on the fifteenth day of the same month is the feast of unleavened bread unto the Lord: seven days ye must eat unleavened bread.

7 In the first day ye shall have an holy convocation: ye shall do no servile work therein.

8 But ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord seven days: in the seventh day is an holy convocation: ye shall do no servile work therein.

9 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

10 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye be come into the land which I give unto you, and shall reap the harvest thereof, then ye shall bring a sheaf of the firstfruits of your harvest unto the priest:

11 And he shall wave the sheaf before the Lord, to be accepted for you: on the morrow after the sabbath the priest shall wave it.

12 And ye shall offer that day when ye wave the sheaf an he lamb without blemish of the first year for a burnt offering unto the Lord.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,
2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, the set feasts of the Lord, which ye shall proclaim to be holy convocations. even these are
3 my set feasts. Six days shall work be done: but on the seventh day is a sabbath of solemn rest, an holy convocation; ye shall do no manner of work: it is a sabbath unto the Lord in all your dwellings.

4 These are the set feasts of the Lord, even holy convocations, which ye shall proclaim in their 5 appointed season. In the first month, on the fourteenth day of the month at even, is the 6 Lord's passover. And on the fifteenth day of the same month is the feast of unleavened bread unto the Lord: seven days ye shall eat unleavened bread. In the first day ye shall have an holy convocation: ye shall do no servile work.

8 But ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord seven days: in the seventh day is an holy convocation; ye shall do no servile work.

9 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

10 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye be come into the land which I give unto you, and shall reap the harvest thereof, then ye shall bring the sheaf of the firstfruits

11 of your harvest unto the priest: and he shall wave the sheaf before the Lord, to be accepted for you: on the morrow after the sabbath the

12 priest shall wave it. And in the day when ye wave the sheaf, ye shall offer a he-lamb without blemish of the first year for a burnt offering unto

1-3. The word rendered "feasts," or in R. V. "set feasts," is the plural of the word מועֵד, mo'ed meaning an appointed time. It is a wider term than חַג, chag, "feast," or rather "pilgrimage," which is used to designate the three pilgrimage feasts, Mazzoth or Unleavened Bread, Weeks or Pentecost, and Ingathering or Booths, at which all males were to make a pilgrimage to the sanctuary (see Exod. 23 : 14-17). The word mo'ed on the other hand covers all appointed seasons. The appointed times of Jehovah which ye shall proclaim as holy convocations, these are my appointed times. The meaning of "holy convocation" is not a general assembling of the nation at the central sanctuary—for this was required only at the three pilgrimage feasts—but an occasion of sabbath rest for all the people, which probably owed its name to the gatherings for religious edification which in later times were held in every town and village in the Holy Land. The typical and most frequently recurring "holy convocation" was the weekly Sabbath, in which no manner of work was to be done.

4-8. Passover and Mazzoth. In ver. 4 occurs a new title introducing the yearly festivals. The Passover is mentioned only as introductory to the seven-day Mazzoth feast which occurs in immediate connection with it, and this latter principally for its first and seventh days which were holy convocations. The weekly Sabbath and the Day of Atonement (ver. 3, 30) were marked by the greatest sabbatic strictness, no manner of work being permitted on them, not even the kindling of a fire for cooking (Exod. 35 : 2, 3). On the holy convocation connected with the other festivals only servile work, lit., "work of labor," i. e., work that belongs to one's worldly calling, was prohibited (see ver. 7, 8, 21, 25, 35, 36). In the prohibition of work on the first and seventh days of Mazzoth in Exod. 12 : 16, exception is especially made of "that which every man must eat." For the more detailed directions for the celebration of Mazzoth see Exod. 12 : 15-20; and for the sacrifices appointed for that festival see Num. 28 : 19-24.

9-14. The first sheaf of the harvest. The injunction of this section falls outside the scope of the calendar, as fixed by the title; it relates to an offering to be made on a day for which no convocation is prescribed. In its present connection, moreover there is nothing to fix the day that is meant. It says (ver. 11) the morrow after the sabbath, without any indication as to what sabbath is intended. This seems to indicate that the passage no longer stands in its original connection. It is generally marked by critics, along with ver. 15-20, 22, as belonging to the Law of Holiness, while the most of the chapter has the characteristics of P.

This is the only place in the Pentateuch where the offering of the first sheaf is mentioned. In 13 And the meat offering thereof shall be two tenth deals of fine flour mingled with oil, an offering made by fire unto the Lord for a sweet savour: and the drink offering thereof shall be of wine, the fourth part of an hin.

15 And ye shall count unto you from the morrow after the sabbath, from the day that ye brought the sheaf of the wave offering; seven sabbaths shall be complete:

16 Even unto the morrow after the seventh sabbath shall ye number fifty days; and ye shall offer a new meat offering unto the Lord.

17 Ye shall bring out of your habitations two wave loaves of two tenth deals: they shall be of fine flour; they shall be baked with leaven; they are the firstfruits unto the Lord.

18 And ye shall offer with the bread seven lambs without blemish of the first year, and one young bullock, and two rams; they shall be for a burnt offering unto the Lord, with their meat offering, and their drink offerings, even an offering made by fire, of sweet savour unto the Lord.

19 Then ye shall sacrifice one kid of the goats for a sin offering, and two lambs of the first year for a sacrifice of peace offerings.

20 And the priest shall wave them with the bread of the firstfruits for a wave offering before the Lord, with the two lambs: they shall be holy to the Lord for the priest.

16 shall there be complete: even unto the morrow after the seventh sabbath shall ye number fifty days; and ye shall offer a new meal offering

20 year for a sacrifice of peace offerings. And the priest shall wave them with the bread of the firstfruits for a wave offering before the Lord,

Josh. 5 : 11 there is an account of the people's beginning to eat of the produce of the land on the day after the Passover, which seems to be an allusion to the prohibition in ver. 14. The offering which was waved was probably a sheaf of barley, the grain which was first ripe, while the first fruits of the wheat harvest were offered later in the loaves of Pentecost (see ver. 17). The "morrow after the sabbath" is traditionally understood to be the day after the first day of Mazzoth, i. e., the sixteenth of Nisan—the first day of the feast being a "sabbath" in the sense of being a day of holy convocation on which no servile work was allowed. The Day of Atonement is similarly called a sabbath (see ver. 32). This, however, is not the usual sense of the term sabbath; so that some have thought that the sabbath meant was the ordinary weekly Sabbath that falls during the seven days of Mazzoth. The meal offering of two tenth-parts of an ephah of fine flour (ver. 13) has been observed to be twice as large as the usual meal offering allotted to a lamb (see Exod. 29 : 40), a greater liberality befitting a harvest feast.

15-22. The feast of Weeks. This feast is brought into close connection with the preceding, or offering of the sheaf, as marking the completion of the harvest which formally commenced with that ceremonial. The later Jews called it עֲצֵרֶת, atzereth, or closing festival (cf. ver. 36, R. V., Margin). The time of its observance depends strictly on that "morrow after the sabbath," which is the starting-point from which the fifty days are reckoned. In the Apocrypha (Tobit 2 : 1; 2 Macc. 12 : 32) and the New Testament (Acts 2 : 1; 20 : 16; 1 Cor. 16 : 8) the festival is called Pentecost, from the Greek word meaning the fiftieth. 15. Seven sabbaths means seven weeks, the term sabbath being often used in the New Testament as well as the Old by simple metonymy for week. 17. Out of your habitations does not mean that each householder should bring two loaves to the priests, which would certainly overwhelm them with bread, but that the congregation should bring to the feast such loaves as are used in their "habitations," i. e., in common life (therefore leavened), not sacred bread baked for the purpose. The sacrifices named in ver. 18, 19 differ from those prescribed in Num. 28 : 26, 27 in one particular. In that place two young bulls and one ram are commanded, instead of one young bull and two rams, as here. Some commentators think that the whole middle part of ver. 18, from the word bread to and including drink offerings, is interpolated, with the accidental change, from the passage in Numbers. The Jewish authorities think that the sacrifices prescribed in Numbers are additional to these. On waving (ver. 20) see note on 7 : 28-34. Living creatures were waved, it is said, by being led to and fro before the sanctuary in a pre-for ever in all your dwellings throughout your generations.

22 And when ye reap the harvest of your land, thou shalt not make clean riddance of the corners of thy field when thou reapest, neither shalt thou gather any gleanings of thy harvest: thou shalt leave them unto the poor, and to the stranger: I am the Lord your God.

23 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

24 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, In the seventh month, in the first day of the month, shall ye have a sabbath, a memorial of blowing of trumpets, an holy convocation.

25 Ye shall do no servile work therein: but ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord.

26 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

27 Also on the tenth day of this seventh month there shall be a day of atonement: it shall be an holy convocation unto you; and ye shall afflict your souls, and offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord.

28 And ye shall do no work in that same day: for it is a day of atonement, to make an atonement for you before the Lord your God.

29 For whatsoever soul it be that shall not be afflicted in that same day, he shall be cut off from among his people.

30 And whatsoever soul it be that doeth any work in that same day, the same soul will I destroy from among his people.

31 Ye shall do no manner of work: it shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations in all your dwellings.

32 It shall be unto you a sabbath of rest, and ye shall afflict your souls: in the ninth day of the month at even, from even unto even, shall ye celebrate your sabbath.

33 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

34 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, The fifteenth day of this seventh month shall be the feast of tabernacles for seven days unto the Lord.

35 On the first day shall be an holy convocation: ye shall do no servile work therein.

36 Seven days ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord: on the eighth day shall be an holy convocation unto you; and ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord: it is a solemn assembly; and ye shall do no servile work therein.

22 And when ye reap the harvest of your land, thou shalt not wholly reap the corners of thy field, neither shalt thou gather the gleanings of thy harvest: thou shalt leave them for the poor, and for the stranger: I am the Lord your God.

23 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

24 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, In the seventh month, in the first day of the month, shall be a solemn rest unto you, a memorial of blowing of trumpets, an holy convocation. Ye shall do no servile work; and ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord.

26 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

27 Howbeit on the tenth day of this seventh month is the day of atonement: it shall be an holy convocation unto you, and ye shall afflict your souls; and ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord. And ye shall do no manner of work in that same day: for it is a day of atonement, to make atonement for you before the Lord your God. For whatsoever soul it be that shall not be afflicted in that same day, he shall be cut off from his people. And whatsoever soul it be that doeth any manner of work in that same day, that soul will I destroy from among his people.

31 Ye shall do no manner of work: it is a statute for ever throughout your generations in all your dwellings. It shall be unto you a sabbath of solemn rest, and ye shall afflict your souls: in the ninth day of the month at even, from even unto even, shall ye keep your sabbath.

33 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

34 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, On the fifteenth day of this seventh month is the feast of tabernacles for seven days unto the Lord.

35 On the first day shall be an holy convocation:

36 ye shall do no servile work. Seven days ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord: on the eighth day shall be an holy convocation unto you; and ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord: it is a solemn assembly; ye shall do no servile work.

scribed way. This pentecost was one of the three  $\text{חַגֵּי הַדָּבָר}$ , chaggim, or pilgrimage feasts, and it was a day of holy convocation (ver. 21). The injunction in ver. 22, which repeats the law in 19: 9, 10, is appropriately inserted in connection with a festival celebrating the completion of harvest.

23-25. The New Year. This festival is named only here and in Num. 29: 1. According to uniform tradition this first day of the seventh month is the beginning of the civil year in use before the Exodus. The seventh month, that most sacred of months, containing the Day of Atonement and the feast of Booths, was fittingly ushered in in this exceptional way. As the months were lunar, there was a new moon observance at the beginning of each month, but this new moon festival was of unique importance. The trumpet is not mentioned in the Hebrew text of either this place or Num. 29: 1, the word translated "blowing of trumpets" meaning literally shouting; but there is no reason to doubt the tradition that trumpet-blowing was the characteristic method of observance. The day is called, not strictly a sabbath (ver. 24), but  $\text{שַׁבְּתוֹן}$ , shabbathon, or "solemn rest" (see R. V.); and only servile work is prohibited.

26-32. The Day of Atonement. This day was to be kept with the greatest of Sabbath strictness. The matter on which stress is laid here is the duty of "afflicting the soul," and of abstaining from work from the ninth evening to the tenth. The manner of observing the day is prescribed in chap. 16.

33-38. The feast of Booths. The real feast of Booths lasted seven days, from the fifteenth of the month. It was one of the feasts called by the name  $\text{חַג}$ , chag, or pilgrimage. The first day was a holy convocation in which no "work of labor," or servile work, was allowed. After the festival had been kept for seven days with the remarkable series of sacrifices described in Num. 29: 12-34, an eighth day of holy convocation served as a supplemental day, constituting a solemn close to the whole series of the year's

37 These are the feasts of the Lord, which ye shall proclaim to be holy convocations, to offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord, a burnt offering, and a meat offering, a sacrifice, and drink offerings, every thing upon his day :

38 Beside the sabbaths of the Lord, and beside your gifts, and beside all your vows, and beside all your freewill offerings, which ye give unto the Lord.

39 Also in the fifteenth day of the seventh month, when ye have gathered in the fruit of the land, ye shall keep a feast unto the Lord seven days: on the first day shall be a sabbath, and on the eighth day shall be a sabbath.

37 These are the set feasts of the Lord, which ye shall proclaim to be holy convocations, to offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord, a burnt offering, and a meal offering, a sacrifice, and 38 drink offerings, each on its own day: beside the sabbaths of the Lord, and beside your gifts, and beside all your vows, and beside all your freewill offerings, which ye give unto the Lord.

39 Howbeit on the fifteenth day of the seventh month, when ye have gathered in the fruits of the land, ye shall keep the feast of the Lord seven days: on the first day shall be a solemn rest, and on the eighth day shall be a solemn feasts. This was characterized as an עֲצֵרֶת, 'atzereth, or solemn assembly (ver. 36), a term so often used of the gathering at the last day of the feast (see Num. 29 : 35; 2 Chron. 7 : 9; Neh. 8 : 18), being also applied to the last day of Mazzoth (see Deut. 16 : 8) that it has been sometimes translated closing festival (see R. V., Margin). Its use, however, to denote an assembly of men (Jer. 9 : 2), especially an assembly gathered for a religious purpose (2 Kings 10 : 20; Amos 5 : 21), is decisive against this meaning. The sacrifices on this day were somewhat less extensive than on the other days of the feast (see Num. 29 : 35-38). From the text of 1 Kings 8 : 65, 66 it appears that Solomon kept the feast for only seven days, dismissing the people on the eighth day. In post-exilic times, however, the supernumerary day was observed, with express reference to the law here (see Neh. 8 : 18): and even Solomon's practice, already referred to, is made by an alteration of the text in 2 Chron. 7 : 9 to conform to this command.

Ver. 37, 38 are a subscription corresponding to the title, ver. 2, 4, and by apparently closing the chapter make ver. 39-44 supplementary in their nature. The sacrifices to be offered on these days of holy convocation are to be stated sacrifices, in addition to those prescribed for the weekly Sabbath (see Num. 28 : 9, 10), and also to the gifts and vows and freewill offerings which the various promptings of religious feeling would lead men to bring.

39-44. Additional directions for the feast of Booths. These supplementary verses have more distinctly the characteristics of the Law of Holiness, while the greater part of the preceding portions of the chapter are in the style of P. It is characteristic of the Law of Holiness to regulate the time of the festivals by reference to the land and to agriculture, while P. has more of a tendency to make these festivals occasions fixed arbitrarily for worship. In this respect the Law of Holiness still preserves the traditions of the earlier legislation of the Book of the Covenant and Deuteronomy according to which two out of the only three festivals recognized (Exod. 23 : 14; 34 : 23; Deut. 16) were harvest feasts. "In the Priests' Law (Lev. 23; Num. 28, 29) the Passover precedes the seven days of Unleavened Bread as an independent feast, and, together with them, is regarded as commemorating nothing but the divine protection experienced by the people when they went out of Egypt. The autumn festival also lasts eight days, and is devoted to the memory of the dwelling in booths during the journey through the desert. The only one which has no theocratic foundation in the Old Testament is the feast of Weeks (Pentecost). There are the following new feasts: the day of Memorial-Blowing on the first of the seventh month, and the great Day of Atonement on the tenth of the same month. The old feasts, like these new ones, are now precisely dated (Passover on the fourteenth of the first month; Tabernacles from the fifteenth to the twenty-second of the seventh month), whereas in earlier times each was proclaimed according to the state of the harvest" (KAUTZSCH). The present chapter, as a final redaction, represents in some places the ultimate exactness of the priestly legislators, and in some the somewhat earlier sentiment of the Law of Holiness. "The centralization of worship at Jerusalem would tend to greater regularity in fixing the time of the several feasts; and this tendency would be carried still further when the close connection between the life of the people and the operations of agriculture had been broken. In the Law of Holiness, as is clear from many passages, the old connection was still felt; the priestly prophet Ezekiel appoints fixed days for the feasts. In the present chapter one legislator represents the tradition current among the people; the other shows the systematization of worship and observance which was carried on in priestly circles" (DRIVER).

39. When ye have gathered in the fruit of the land. In Exodus (23 : 16; 34 : 22) this feast is called the feast of Ingathering at the year's end. In the Holy Land the whole of the harvest would be completed about the first of October. The 'atzereth, or supplemental eighth day of the feast, is mentioned in ver. 39, but it

And ye shall take you on the first day the fruit of goodly trees, branches of palm trees, and boughs of thick trees, and willows of the brook; and ye shall rejoice before the Lord your God 41 seven days. And ye shall keep it a feast unto the Lord seven days in the year: it is a statute for ever in your generations: ye shall keep it in 42 the seventh month. Ye shall dwell in booths seven days; all that are homeborn in Israel 43 shall dwell in booths: that your generations may know that I made the children of Israel to dwell in booths, when I brought them out of the land 44 of Egypt: I am the Lord your God. And Moses declared unto the children of Israel the set feasts of the Lord.

CHAPTER XXIV.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,
2 Command the children of Israel, that they bring unto thee pure olive beaten for the light, to cause the lamps to burn continually.

3 Without the veil of the testimony, in the tabernacle of the congregation, shall Aaron order it from the evening unto the morning before the Lord continually: it shall be a statute for ever in your generations.

4 He shall order the lamps upon the pure candlestick before the Lord continually.

5 And thou shalt take fine flour, and bake twelve cakes thereof: two tenth deals shall be in one cake.

seems to be ignored in the remaining verses. The festival does not appear to have been observed by dwelling in booths from the first entrance into the Holy Land until after the exile; but its observance in Jerusalem after the return is minutely described in Neh. 8: 14-18. Booths were temporary huts of branches such as were used by herdsmen for cattle. It is to be noted that in the history the kind of habitation used by the children of Israel in the wilderness is never called הַסֹּכֶה, sukkah, booth, but הַאֹהֶל, 'ohel, tent of cloth or skin. No doubt, however, in their forty years' wandering, when scattered far from the immediate vicinity of the sanctuary seeking sustenance for their cattle, the people frequently used booths. But the law is formulated here, not from the standpoint of the sojourn at Sinai, but from that of the later time, when the wandering in the wilderness of Sin was a historic memory. While the command to observe the feast seems in ver. 42 to include only the home-born, yet its joys were according to Deuteronomy to extend to foreigners, perhaps as their guests (see Deut. 16: 14).

Chap. 24. MISCELLANEOUS REGULATIONS.

1-4. On the lamps in the tabernacle. This is an almost verbatim repetition of directions given in Exod. 27: 20, 21. The pure candlestick is described in Exod. 25: 31-39; and the execution by Aaron of the command is recorded in Num. 8: 1-4. The directions both here and in Exodus seem to treat the maintenance of the light as a popular offering, as the command is issued to the congregation, and stress is laid on the purity and choiceness of the material which the people are to supply. It is noteworthy that in the vision of Zechariah (Zech. 4), which is evidently the product of the prophetic mind making a homiletic use of this piece of tabernacle furniture, nearly all the interest turns on the supply of oil. Whatever of divine illumination may be typified by the perpetual burning of a light before Jehovah, it is an illumination for which the people are specially made responsible. It is a phenomenon in the temple which does not present itself to the worshiper as a light from an unknown source supposedly supernatural, but a light which results from the priestly manipulation of his own gifts. The continual illumination is therefore an act of worship—the people's offering of light to Jehovah. It expresses perhaps the perpetual watchfulness and intelligence which belong to true religion, just as the various sacrifices and minchahs express the perpetual outgo of devotion and friendship, or the special emotion of penitence, which characterizes religion from other points of view.

5-9. On the shewbread. The shewbread is mentioned in various places (Exod. 25: 30; 35: 13; 39: 36; 2 Chron. 13: 11, etc.), but it is only here that its preparation and treatment are expressly described. Its distinctive name, the bread of the 7 And thou shalt put pure frankincense upon each row, that it may be on the bread for a memorial, even an offering made by fire unto the Lord.

8 Every sabbath he shall set it in order before the Lord continually, being taken from the children of Israel by an everlasting covenant.

9 And it shall be Aaron's and his sons'; and they shall eat it in the holy place: for it is most holy unto him of the offerings of the Lord made by fire by a perpetual statute.

10 And the son of an Israelitish woman, whose father was an Egyptian, went out among the children of Israel: and this son of the Israelitish woman and a man of Israel strove together in the camp;

11 And the Israelitish woman's son blasphemed the name of the Lord, and cursed. And they brought him unto Moses: (and his mother's name was Shelomith, the daughter of Dibri, of the tribe of Dan:)

12 And they put him in ward, that the mind of the Lord might be shewed them.

13 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

14 Bring forth him that hath cursed without the camp; and let all that heard him lay their hands upon his head, and let all the congregation stone him.

15 And thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel, saying, Whosoever curseth his God shall bear his sin.

16 And he that blasphemeth the name of the Lord, he shall surely be put to death, and all the congregation shall certainly stone him: as well the stranger, as he that is born in the land, when he blasphemeth the name of the Lord, shall be put to death.

6 ephah shall be in one cake. And thou shalt set them in two rows, six on a row, upon the pure

7 table before the Lord. And thou shalt put pure frankincense upon each row, that it may be to the bread for a memorial, even an offering made

8 by fire unto the Lord. Every sabbath day he shall set it in order before the Lord continually; it is on the behalf of the children of Israel, an

9 everlasting covenant. And it shall be for Aaron and his sons; and they shall eat it in a holy place: for it is most holy unto him of the offerings of the Lord made by fire by a perpetual statute.

10 And the son of an Israelitish woman, whose father was an Egyptian, went out among the children of Israel: and the son of the Israelitish woman and a man of Israel strove together

11 in the camp; and the son of the Israelitish woman blasphemed the Name, and cursed: and they brought him unto Moses. And his mother's name was Shelomith, the daughter of Dibri, of the 12 tribe of Dan. And they put him in ward, that it might be declared unto them at the mouth of the Lord.

13 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 14 Bring forth him that hath cursed without the camp; and let all that heard him lay their hands upon his head, and let all the congrega-

15 tion stone him. And thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel, saying, Whosoever curseth

16 his God shall bear his sin. And he that blasphemeth the name of the Lord, he shall surely be put to death; all the congregation shall certainly stone him: as well the stranger, as the homeborn, when he blasphemeth the name presence, is not used here. The cakes were without doubt unleavened, according to the rule for the meal offering that was offered to Jehovah (2: 11), though as none of this was burned on the altar the special reason for forbidding the leaven in the case of the ordinary meal offering did not exist. The quantity of fine flour in the cakes was the same as that of the wave loaves of Pentecost (23: 17); and we note the generous size—each cake containing two-tenths of an ephah or about six pounds and a quarter of flour. They were arranged in two piles rather than rows (ver. 6, see R. V., Margin), and the incense, according to Jewish tradition, was placed in golden saucers, one on each pile, and burned on the altar as an זִכְרֹה, 'azkarah, or memorial (ver. 7) on the removal of the loaves each Sabbath.

10-23. The incident of the blasphemer, and the laws arising out of it. This is a somewhat peculiar interpolation of narrative as a basis for a law. A similar instance of law derived as a divine decision from a particular case is found in Num. 15: 32-36. The uncertainty of the children of Israel as to what to do in the case was due not alone to this being the first instance of outspoken blasphemy, but especially to the fact that the transgressor was not strictly of the congregation of Israel, being the son of an Egyptian father. The offense is described as blaspheming the Name (ver. 11, see R. V.). This expression, the Name, used absolutely for Jehovah, is not found elsewhere in the Old Testament, and is a post-biblical expression which came into use in an age when the Jews shrank from pronouncing the sacred name itself. Some critics think that "the Name" has been substituted by the scribes for "Jehovah." The verb rendered blasphemed in ver. 11 is taken by Jewish interpreters as meaning pronounced (cf. LXX, ἐπονόμασας), and the rabbinites based on this verse the notion that it is not lawful to speak the name which we seek to represent by the word Jehovah or Jahveh. The true pronunciation of the name is irretrievably lost, it being known only that its consonants are JHVH, while for the original vowels others have systematically been substituted from time immemorial by the scribes.

The witnesses were directed (ver. 14) to lay their hands on the offender's head, perhaps in token of throwing off from themselves the blasphemy which they had heard and returning it to the blasphemer himself, in a manner analogous to the washing of hands in Deut. 21: 6. In the punishment of blasphemy described in Acts (7: 58; 22: 20) the witnesses evidently took the heaviest labor of the stoning. The law derived from the incident is specifically formulated in ver. 16, and is carefully made to include the foreigner as well as the Israelite. The

And if a man cause a blemish in his neighbour; as he hath done, so shall it be done to him; breach for breach, eye for eye, tooth for tooth: as he hath caused a blemish in a man, so shall it be rendered unto him. And he that killeth a beast shall make it good: and he that killeth a man shall be put to death. Ye shall have one manner of law, as well for the stranger, as for the homeborn: for I am the Lord your God. ## CHAPTER XXV.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses in mount Sinai, saying,

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye come into the land which I give you, then shall the land keep a sabbath unto the Lord.

3 Six years thou shalt sow thy field, and six years thou shalt prune thy vineyard, and gather in the fruit thereof;

4 But in the seventh year shall be a sabbath of rest unto the land, a sabbath for the Lord: thou shalt neither sow thy field, nor prune thy vineyard.

5 That which groweth of its own accord of thy harvest thou shalt not reap, neither gather the grapes of thy vine undressed: for it is a year of rest unto the land.

6 And the sabbath of the land shall be meat for you; for thee, and for thy servant, and for thy maid, and for thy hired servant, and for thy stranger that sojourneth with thee, laws given in ver. 17-22 are substantially a repetition of laws found in the book of the Covenant (Exod. 21 : 12-14, 23-25, 33-36), and are here introduced in order, perhaps, that it may be made clear that, like the law for the blasphemer, they apply to foreigners as well as to the homeborn (see ver. 22).

Chap. 25. THE SABBATICAL YEAR AND THE YEAR OF JUBILEE. 1-7. The sabbatical year. The Lord spake unto Moses in mount Sinai. This is the only place in this book of Leviticus where a section is introduced by the specific note of the wilderness of Sinai as the place where the revelation was given, though the statement repeatedly occurs in final subscriptions to the sections (see 7 : 38; 26 : 46; 27 : 34). The form of introduction not only sets off this section by itself, but gives the writer or final compiler an air of remoteness from the event, as if he lived in another age. There is no sign of any recognition of this law in Israel previous to the exile. It certainly was disregarded or not known during seventy sabbatical cycles, or four hundred and ninety years previous to the exile, which must have covered the whole period of the monarchy. The priestly post-exilic author of the Chronicles considers the captivity a judgment on this neglect (2 Chron. 36 : 20, 21), and this opinion is apparently shared by the author of Leviticus himself, who notes the captivity in the form of a threat (see 26 : 34, 35). This sabbath of the land (ver. 2) seems to have been marked by no special religious ceremonies or obligations, but to have consisted simply in letting the land lie fallow and allowing its spontaneous products to be used by all in common. Only remotely analogous to this sabbatical year was the early regulation (see Exod. 21 : 2, seq.; Deut. 15 : 12, seq.) that the Hebrew servant should be released after six years of labor. It was prescribed in the book of the Covenant (Exod. 23 : 10, 11) that the crop of every seventh year—apparently the self-sown crop—should be left for the poor, and after them for the beasts. This fallow year, however, is not called a sabbath, nor is there any indication that all land was to lie fallow the same year. In this form a law prescribing one year's fallow in seven may have been anciently observed. But so long as the Hebrews were an agricultural people with little trade, in a land often severely

7 And for thy cattle, and for the beast that are in thy land, shall all the increase thereof be meat.

8 And thou shalt number seven sabbaths of years unto thee, seven times seven years; and the space of the seven sabbaths of years shall be unto thee forty and nine years.

9 Then shalt thou cause the trumpet of the jubile to sound on the tenth day of the seventh month, in the day of atonement shall ye make the trumpet sound throughout all your land.

10 And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year, and proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof; it shall be a jubile unto you; and ye shall return every man unto his possession, and ye shall return every man unto his family.

11 A jubile shall that fiftieth year be unto you: ye shall not sow, neither reap that which groweth of itself in it, nor gather the grapes in it of thy vine undressed.

12 For it is the jubile; it shall be holy unto you: ye shall eat the increase thereof out of the field.

13 In the year of this jubile ye shall return every man unto his possession.

14 And if thou sell ought unto thy neighbour, or buyest ought of thy neighbour's hand, ye shall not oppress one another:

15 According to the number of years after the jubile thou shalt buy of thy neighbour, and according unto the number of years of the fruits he shall sell unto thee:

16 According to the multitude of years thou shalt increase the price thereof, and according to the fewness of years thou shalt diminish the price of it: for according to the number of the years of the fruits doth he sell unto thee.

17 Ye shall not therefore oppress one another; but thou shalt fear thy God: for I am the Lord your God.

18 Wherefore ye shall do my statutes, and keep my judgments, and do them; and ye shall dwell in the land in safety.

19 And the land shall yield her fruit, and ye shall eat your fill, and dwell therein in safety.

7 that sojourn with thee; and for thy cattle, and for the beasts that are in thy land, shall all the increase thereof be for food.

8 And thou shalt number seven sabbaths of years unto thee, seven times seven years; and there shall be unto thee the days of seven sabbaths of

9 years, even forty and nine years. Then shalt thou send abroad the loud trumpet on the tenth day of the seventh month; in the day of atonement shall ye send abroad the trumpet through-

10 out all your land. And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year, and proclaim liberty throughout the land unto all the inhabitants thereof: it shall be a jubile unto you; and ye shall return every man unto his possession, and ye shall return

11 every man unto his family. A jubile shall that fiftieth year be unto you: ye shall not sow, neither reap that which groweth of itself in it, nor gather the grapes in it of the undressed vines.

12 For it is a jubile; it shall be holy unto you: ye shall eat the increase thereof out of the field.

13 In this year of jubile ye shall return every man

14 unto his possession. And if thou sell ought unto thy neighbour, or buy of thy neighbour's hand,

15 ye shall not wrong one another: according to the number of years after the jubile thou shalt buy of thy neighbour, and according unto the number of years of the crops he shall sell unto

16 thee. According to the multitude of the years thou shalt increase the price thereof, and according to the fewness of the years thou shalt diminish the price of it; for the number of the 17 crops doth he sell unto thee. And ye shall not wrong one another; but thou shalt fear thy God:

18 for I am the Lord your God. Wherefore ye shall do my statutes, and keep my judgements and do them; and ye shall dwell in the land in safety.

19 And the land shall yield her fruit, and ye shall ravaged by famines, a uniform and simultaneous "sabbath of the land" every seventh year would probably have been impossible. After the exile it seems to have been a recognized observance (see Josephus, Ant., XI., 8 : 6; XIV., 10 : 6), being agreed upon, indeed by the returning exiles in a formal covenant (Neh. 10 : 31); but even then it was often productive of great hardships (1 Macc. 6 : 49, 53; Josephus, Ant., XIV., 16 : 2).

Ver. 19-22 constitute a sequel to this section on the sabbatic year and interrupt the connection in their present position. "The verses were probably placed where they now stand by the redactor, who desired their contents to be referred to the Jubilee year as well as to the sabbatical year" (DRIVER).

8-24. The year of Jubilee with its feature of release. This year of Jubilee is again referred to in 27 : 17-25 and Num. 36 : 4. These are the only mentions of it in the Pentateuch. In Ezek. 46 : 16, 17 there is indication of a law by which "the prince" could give to one of his subjects a gift of real property belonging to his heritable estate only until "the year of liberty," that the people might not be scattered "every man from his possession." Aside from these passages the Jubilee is not referred to except in this chapter. The name is the Hebrew יובל, Jobhel, the name applied to the sound of the trumpet in Exod. 19 : 13; Josh. 6 : 5, and originally meaning, according to Jewish tradition, a ram or ram's horn. The year began with the blowing of the trumpet after the completion of the solemn services of the Day of Atonement (ver. 9) and was to be a "hallowed" year, its great feature being liberty for all the land and its inhabitants, so that every man should return to his possession and to his family. In other respects it was to resemble the sabbatical year; there was to be no sowing or reaping of that which grew of itself, nor gathering of grapes. According to ver. 10 this was to be the fiftieth year, and the difficulty of having two idle years for the land—the seventh sabbatical year or forty-ninth, and the fiftieth—immediately succeeding each other has led some to conjecture that it may have been so reckoned as to make it coincide with the seventh sabbatical year.

The price of all land sold was to be regulated according to the number of years yet to elapse before the Jubilee, as the property sold was strictly only the crops (ver. 16), the theory being

20 And if ye shall say, What shall we eat the seventh year? behold, we shall not sow, nor gather in our increase:

21 Then I will command my blessing upon you in the sixth year, and it shall bring forth fruit for three years.

22 And ye shall sow the eighth year, and eat yet of old fruit until the ninth year; until her fruits come in ye shall eat of the old store.

23 The land shall not be sold for ever; for the land is mine; for ye are strangers and sojourners with me.

24 And in all the land of your possession ye shall grant a redemption for the land.

25 If thy brother be waxen poor, and hath sold away some of his possession, and if any of his kin come to redeem it, then shall he redeem that which his brother sold.

26 And if the man have none to redeem it, and himself be able to redeem it;

27 Then let him count the years of the sale thereof, and restore the overplus unto the man to whom he sold it; that he may return unto his possession.

28 But if he be not able to restore it to him, then that which is sold shall remain in the hand of him that hath bought it until the year of jubile: and in the jubile it shall go out, and he shall return unto his possession.

29 And if a man sell a dwelling house in a walled city, then he may redeem it within a whole year after it is sold; within a full year may he redeem it.

30 And if it be not redeemed within the space of a full year, then the house that is in the walled city shall be established for ever to him that bought it throughout his generations: it shall not go out in the jubile.

20 eat your fill, and dwell therein in safety. And if ye shall say, What shall we eat the seventh year? behold, we shall not sow, nor gather in our increase: then I will command my blessing upon you in the sixth year, and it shall bring forth fruit for the three years. And ye shall sow the eighth year, and eat of the fruits, the old store; until the ninth year, until her fruits come in, ye shall eat the old store. And the land shall not be sold in perpetuity: for the land is mine: for ye are strangers and sojourners with me. And in all the land of your possession ye shall grant a redemption for the land.

24 And in all the land of your possession ye shall grant a redemption for the land.

25 If thy brother be waxen poor, and sell some of his possession, then shall his kinsman that is next unto him come, and shall redeem that which his brother hath sold. And if a man have no one to redeem it, and he be waxen rich and find sufficient to redeem it; then let him count the years of the sale thereof, and restore the overplus unto the man to whom he sold it; and he shall return unto his possession.

26 And if a man have no one to redeem it, and he be waxen rich and find sufficient to redeem it; then let him count the years of the sale thereof, and restore the overplus unto the man to whom he sold it; and he shall return unto his possession.

27 But if he be not able to get it back for himself, then that which he hath sold shall remain in the hand of him that hath bought it until the year of jubile: and in the jubile it shall go out, and he shall return unto his possession.

28 But if he be not able to get it back for himself, then that which he hath sold shall remain in the hand of him that hath bought it until the year of jubile: and in the jubile it shall go out, and he shall return unto his possession.

29 And if a man sell a dwelling house in a walled city, then he may redeem it within a whole year after it is sold; for a full year shall he have the right of redemption. And if it be not redeemed within the space of a full year, then the house that is in the walled city shall be made sure in perpetuity to him that bought it, throughout his generations: it shall not go out in the jubile.

that the tenure of land was only a life tenancy with Jehovah as owner (ver. 23) and therefore the land could not be sold in perpetuity. At the end of every Jubilee period the land was to revert to the families among whom it was originally divided by lot (Num. 26 : 52-56 ; 33 : 54).

“The comparative study of institutions shows what very different systems of land tenure exist in different ages and in different countries. Rights of individual ownership are sometimes not recognized at all, sometimes recognized only with limitations. Often the periodical redistribution of the land of a community is an immemorial custom. . . Aristotle mentions a law among the Loerians restraining the sale of land and tending to keep the lots of land of equal size (Pol., 2 : 7 ; cf. 2 : 9 for Philolaus and the Thebans). According to Strabo, among the Dalmatians a fresh distribution of land took place every eight years. We may compare also the early system of land tenure known as the shifting severalty, of which traces are found in many Aryan nations (Maine, ‘Village Communities,’ p. 81, seq.). Under this system the communal land was periodically redistributed in equal portions among the heads of families of a tribe or a township” (DRIVER).

25-28. The privilege of redemption. It is noticeable that no one appears to have been expected to part with his land except under the pressure of poverty. It was no doubt a matter of sentiment to keep the inheritance intact if possible (cf. 1 Kings 21 : 3). All land seems to have been bought subject to the right of redemption; the buyer was apparently obliged to sell, however much he might wish to retain the land till the Jubilee, if the price of redemption was tendered him. This is probably the meaning of ver. 24. The phrase any of his kin (ver. 25) is only a derived meaning of the Hebrew word. The primary meaning is גֹּאֵל, go'el, or redeemer. The go'el was the one to whom pertained the right of delivering, or ransoming, the person, or perpetuating his family by marrying the widow. In the case of homicide the murdered person's go'el was called the גֹּאֵל הַדָּם, go'el haddam, or avenger of blood, and it was his duty to demand back the blood of the person, or vindicate him. It is this term that Job uses when he says, “I know that my Redeemer liveth” (Job 19 : 25). Of course, as this right primarily inhered in the next of kin, the term came to have the derived signification of the nearest relative.

29-34. Its application to cities and villages. Houses that were sold in walled cities remained subject to the right of redemption for a full year; after that not even the Jubilee could restore them to their original possessor. This is the only case of perpetual possession that is possible under the terms of this chapter. 30. The word translated for ever, or inperpetuity, 31 But the houses of the villages which have no wall round about them shall be counted as the fields of the country: they may be redeemed, and they shall go out in the jubile.

32 Notwithstanding the cities of the Levites, and the houses of the cities of their possession, may the Levites redeem at any time.

33 And if a man purchase of the Levites, then the house that was sold, and the city of his possession, shall go out in the year of jubile: for the houses of the cities of the Levites are their possession among the children of Israel.

34 But the field of the suburbs of their cities may not be sold; for it is their perpetual possession.

35 And if thy brother be waxen poor, and fallen in decay with thee; then thou shalt relieve him: yea, though he be a stranger, or a sojourner; that he may live with thee.

36 Take thou no usury of him, or increase: but fear thy God; that thy brother may live with thee.

37 Thou shalt not give him thy money upon usury, nor lend him thy victuals for increase.

38 I am the Lord your God, which brought you forth out of the land of Egypt, to give you the land of Canaan, and to be your God.

39 And if thy brother that dwelleth by thee be waxen poor, and be sold unto thee; thou shalt not compel him to serve as a bondservant:

40 But as a hired servant, and as a sojourner, he shall be with thee, and shall serve thee unto the year of jubile:

41 And then shall he depart from thee, both he and his children with him, and shall return unto his own family, and unto the possession of his fathers shall he return.

31 But the houses of the villages which have no wall round about them shall be reckoned with the fields of the country: they may be redeemed,

32 and they shall go out in the jubile. Nevertheless the cities of the Levites, the houses of the cities of their possession, may the Levites re-

33 deem at any time. And if one of the Levites redeem, then the house that was sold, and the city of his possession, shall go out in the jubile: for the houses of the cities of the Levites are their possession among the children of Israel.

34 But the field of the suburbs of their cities may not be sold; for it is their perpetual possession.

35 And if thy brother be waxen poor, and his hand fail with thee; then thou shalt uphold him: as a stranger and a sojourner shall he live

36 with thee. Take thou no usury of him or increase; but fear thy God: that thy brother may

37 live with thee. Thou shalt not give him thy money upon usury, nor give him thy victuals for 38 increase. I am the Lord your God, which brought you forth out of the land of Egypt, to give you the land of Canaan, to be your God.

39 And if thy brother be waxen poor with thee, and sell himself unto thee; thou shalt not make

40 him to serve as a bondservant: as an hired servant, and as a sojourner, he shall be with thee; he shall serve with thee until the year of jubile:

41 then shall he go out from thee, he and his children with him, and shall return unto his own family, and unto the possession of his fathers occurs only in that verse and in ver. 23, where the right is denied. The villages were aggregations of farm buildings and cottages attached to contiguous estates and grouped together for greater security. These were, therefore, under the same conditions of redemption as the farms themselves. The Levitical cities enjoyed a perpetual right of redemption (see ver. 32) like the allotted estates of the tribes. 33. And if a man purchase of the Levites, rather, if one of the Levites redeem, as in R. V. Even this rendering represents an imperfect text; probably a not ought to be inserted after the word "redeem," as is done in the Vulgate (see Margin, R. V.). The house . . . and the city of his possession appears to be a hendiadys for the house in the city of his possession, the meaning being that if the house sold belonged to one of the Levitical cities, and was not a house that the Levite possessed in some other place, it should return to him without compensation at the Jubilee. As to the pastures about the Levitical cities and belonging to them (ver. 34), these could not be alienated at all. For the legislation regarding the institution of Levitical cities, see Num. 35. It is to be observed that the term Levites used in this section (ver. 32, 33) has not before been used or defined in the book, a fact which some critics take as evidence of a later insertion.

35-38. Warning against oppression. The construction of the latter part of ver. 35 in the Hebrew is somewhat awkward. It literally reads, Thou shalt lay hold of him a stranger and a sojourner, and he shall live with thee. The Revised version probably comes as near as practicable to the sense. The purport of the regulation appears to be, that the Israelite who had become so poor as to sell his land was not to be treated as an outcast; he was rather to be considered as having the same standing and consideration as a resident foreigner, who was also debarred from holding land. The practice of taking advantage of the brother's necessity to exact usury or increase is strongly condemned. Deuteronomy also forbids the lending upon usury to one of the Israelitish nation, but permits it in dealing with foreigners (Deut. 23: 19, 20). It was the well-nigh universal habit in ancient times to look upon a loan as an act of help or relief, rather than as a commercial transaction, and hence usury or interest appeared as oppression or illegitimate gain (cf. Ps. 15: 5; Ezek. 18: 8).

39-46. Of the holding of bondmen by Hebrews. This law with reference to the holding of slaves differs very materially from that given in the earlier book of the Covenant (Exod. 21: 2, seq.) and also from the legislation in Deuteronomy (Deut. 15: 12, seq.). According to those passages the Hebrew bondman (Exod.) or bondwoman (Deut.) was to be released after seven years of service unless he or she expressed a preference for a perpetual servitude, for which a special legal form was provided. By the law in this place an Israelite who is so impoverished 42 For they are my servants, which I brought forth out of the land of Egypt: they shall not be sold as bondmen.

43 Thou shalt not rule over him with rigour; but shalt fear thy God.

44 Both thy bondmen, and thy bondmaids, which thou shalt have, shall be of the heathen that are round about you; of them shall ye buy bondmen and bondmaids.

45 Moreover of the children of the strangers that do sojourn among you, of them shall ye buy, and of their families that are with you, which they begat in your land: and they shall be your possession.

46 And ye shall take them as an inheritance for your children after you, to inherit them for a possession; they shall be your bondmen for ever: but over your brethren the children of Israel, ye shall not rule one over another with rigour.

42 shall he return. For they are my servants, which I brought forth out of the land of Egypt: 43 they shall not be sold as bondmen. Thou shalt not rule over him with rigour; but shalt fear 44 thy God. And as for thy bondmen, and thy bondmaids, which thou shalt have; of the nations that are round about you, of them shall ye 45 buy bondmen and bondmaids. Moreover of the children of the strangers that do sojourn among you, of them shall ye buy, and of their families that are with you, which they have begotten in your land: and they shall be your possession. 46 And ye shall make them an inheritance for your children after you, to hold for a possession: of them shall ye take your bondmen for ever: but over your brethren the children of Israel ye shall not rule, one over another, with rigour.

as to sell himself into slavery is to be treated humanely as a hired servant, and is to be released at the Jubilee; while perpetual bondmen or bondwomen may be had only of foreigners. The mitigation here prescribed of the harshness attending bond-service consists therefore only in humane treatment rather than in the brevity of the term, while the period of servitude may extend to fifty years. The method of harmonizing this law with the earlier ones has been to make this Jubilee law presuppose the system of release every seven years, and mean that the Hebrew slave could claim his freedom at the year of Jubilee even though it happened to fall in an uncompleted septennial term of service. But the legislation neither in Exodus nor in Deuteronomy betrays any knowledge on the lawgiver's part of the existence of this Jubilee, and it is difficult to see how the divergent laws could all have been in operation at the same time. Experience at the time of Zedekiah (Jer. 34: 8-16) showed that the Deuteronomic law could not easily be enforced, and modern critics have reasoned that this system of manumission of slaves at the Jubilee, now appearing in Leviticus, was instituted after that difficulty had become apparent. While the Jubilee, so far as concerned the ownership of land, may not have been a mere paper law or theoretical completion of the system of seven, as some have maintained, yet its extension to the manumission of slaves may have dated from a time subsequent to the discovery that, as Hebrew society advanced, the law enjoining only a short term of enslavement was found impracticable.

To say that the institution of slavery was recognized and used by the ancient people of Israel is but to say that the nation was not wholly detached from the universal ideals and social canons of their time. They found the practice of holding slaves as a part of the universal industrial system, coming down unquestioned from the remotest antiquity, and their institutions were so framed as to afford the wisest mitigation of the practice. To have put a stop to the immemorial custom at a given signal, and without preparation and education, would have been contrary to all the methods by which successful changes have been produced in society. As it was, it seems that legislation outstripped the possible pace of the people, so that a modification was found necessary by the time the priestly legislation was codified. The two great motives which were found workable for mitigating the harshness of slavery were brotherhood in an exalted nationality and memory of past bondage as a personal experience. The Hebrew was not remanded to slavery except as a resource to which he was willing to resort in order to fulfill his obligations. No doubt in the imperfect state of Jewish society the poor were often forced into this condition by harsh creditors (see 2 Kings 4: 1; Neh. 5: 3-5), but this was far different from systematically constituting a market of Hebrew slaves and drawing on it for the labor supply. This was forbidden, and no doubt the prohibition was measurably successful. At the same time the term of bondage was limited, so that a hereditary slave class became impossible. Then underlying all the prescribed treatment of the Hebrew servant, as a motive for forbearance from unduly degrading or abusing him, and for extending to him the benefit of the sabbath rest, was the consideration, "He is thy brother," and "Thou wast a slave in the land of Egypt." There was thus a constant appeal to the higher nature, and a bringing to bear of the most humanizing motives possible under the circumstances. All this tended to make slavery in Israel far different from the helpless and hopeless condition which it was in Roman society, or even in more modern times among the Negroes of North America.

While these humanizing motives in ancient 47 And if a sojourner or stranger wax rich by thee, and thy brother that dwelleth by him wax poor, and sell himself unto the stranger or sojourner by thee, or to the stock of the stranger's family:

48 After that he is sold he may be redeemed again; one of his brethren may redeem him:

49 Either his uncle, or his uncle's son, may redeem him, or any that is nigh of kin unto him of his family may redeem him; or if he be able, he may redeem himself.

50 And he shall reckon with him that bought him from the year that he was sold to him unto the year of jubile: and the price of his sale shall be according unto the number of years, according to the time of an hired servant shall it be with him.

51 If there be yet many years behind, according unto them he shall give again the price of his redemption out of the money that he was bought for.

52 And if there remain but few years unto the year of jubile, then he shall count with him, and according unto his years shall he give him again the price of his redemption.

53 And as a yearly hired servant shall he be with him: and the other shall not rule with rigour over him in thy sight.

54 And if he be not redeemed in these years, then he shall go out in the year of jubile, both he, and his children with him.

55 For unto me the children of Israel are servants; they are my servants whom I brought forth out of the land of Egypt: I am the Lord your God.

47 And if a stranger or sojourner with thee be waxen rich, and thy brother be waxen poor beside him, and sell himself unto the stranger or sojourner with thee, or to the stock of the stranger's family: after that he is sold he may be redeemed; one of his brethren may redeem him:

49 or his uncle, or his uncle's son, may redeem him, or any that is nigh of kin unto him of his family may redeem him; or if he be waxen rich, he may redeem himself.

50 And he shall reckon with him that bought him from the year that he sold himself to him unto the year of jubile: and the price of his sale shall be according unto the number of years; according to the time of an

51 hired servant shall he be with him. If there be yet many years, according unto them he shall give back the price of his redemption out of the

52 money that he was bought for. And if there remain but few years unto the year of jubile, then he shall reckon with him; according unto his years shall he give back the price of his

53 redemption. As a servant hired year by year shall he be with him; he shall not rule with rigour

54 over him in thy sight. And if he be not redeemed by these means, then he shall go out in the year of jubile, he, and his children with him.

55 For unto me the children of Israel are servants; they are my servants whom I brought forth out of the land of Egypt: I am the Lord your God.

times were operative only in the Hebrew's dealings with his brethren, and did not inure to the benefit of foreign slaves, they are nevertheless the same motives which, extended and spiritualized, have after long ages of silent working finally prevailed to banish slavery as an institution from Christian society. They must first become strong enough to affect human selfishness on the limited stage of a chosen nation before they could attack the entrenched wrong on the wider field of humanity. The old Hebrew brotherhood in a common nationality has under the working of the spirit of Christ broadened into the brotherhood of humanity; and the emancipation from bitter bondage which now serves even more efficiently as a humanizing inspiration than did the memory of the deliverance from Egypt is the common salvation in Jesus Christ which is the hope of the world. No man in whom the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ has had its legitimate effect can any longer find it in his heart to oppress his brother, of whatever race, or deprive him of that gift which a common consciousness of a divine sonship has caused to be preeminently valued in modern times—the gift of liberty.

47-55. On the holding of bondmen by foreigners. In the case of bondage to a resident foreigner emphasis is placed on the principle that through all the period of servitude the right of redemption is in existence, and must be allowed if the slave finds a kinsman who will redeem him or comes into the possession of property for his own redemption. The price is to be regulated according to the time, reckoned at the current wages of hired labor, still to elapse before the Jubilee. The Hebrew must not allow his kinsman to be harshly enslaved and cruelly worked in his sight. If none of the prescribed means of redemption are found, the bondman becomes free without compensation in the Jubilee. The general basis for all these laws of freedom is the inspiring truth that, as the land is Jehovah's (ver. 23), so also the children of Israel are Jehovah's own servants and therefore cannot pass into the absolute control of any other owner. The influence of this feeling on the Jewish Christian consciousness is seen in Rom. 14:4.

"So much for the Levitical law; as regards its observance the evidence of history is not voluminous, but Jer. 34:14 seems to show conclusively that in his time at least the law acknowledged by the prophets was that described in Deut. 15, according to which the rights of Hebrew slaveholders over their compatriots were invariably to cease seven years after they had been acquired. After the exile the law of Lev. 25 was also certainly disregarded; the Talmudists and rabbins are unanimous that although the Jubilee years were 'reckoned' they were not observed" ("Encyc. Brit.," XIII., 759).

Chap. 26. HORTATORY CONCLUSION. 1, 2. Prohibition of idolatry and injunction to keep the Sabbath. These verses are connected with the preceding chapter in the Hebrew Bible,

CHAPTER XXVI.

1 YE shall make you no idols nor graven image, neither rear you up a standing image, neither shall ye set up any image of stone in your land, to bow down unto it: for I am the Lord your God.

2 Ye shall keep my sabbaths, and reverence my sanctuary: I am the Lord.

3 If ye walk in my statutes, and keep my commandments, and do them;

4 Then I will give you rain in due season, and the land shall yield her increase, and the trees of the field shall yield their fruit.

5 And your threshing shall reach unto the vintage, and the vintage shall reach unto the sowing time: and ye shall eat your bread to the full, and dwell in your land safely.

6 And I will give peace in the land, and ye shall lie down, and none shall make you afraid: and I will rid evil beasts out of the land, neither shall the sword go through your land.

7 And ye shall chase your enemies, and they shall fall before you by the sword.

8 And five of you shall chase an hundred, and an hundred of you shall put ten thousand to flight: and your enemies shall fall before you by the sword.

9 For I will have respect unto you, and make you fruitful, and multiply you, and establish my covenant with you.

10 And ye shall eat old store, and bring forth the old because of the new.

11 And I will set my tabernacle among you: and my soul shall not abhor you.

12 And I will walk among you, and will be your God, and ye shall be my people.

13 I am the Lord your God, which brought you forth out of the land of Egypt, that ye should not be their bondmen; and I have broken the bands of your yoke, and made you go upright.

14 But if ye will not hearken unto me, and will not do all these commandments;

15 And if ye shall despise my statutes, or if your soul abhor my judgments, so that ye will not do all my commandments, but that ye break my covenant:

1 YE shall make you no idols, neither shall ye rear you up a graven image, or a pillar, neither shall ye place any figured stone in your land, to bow down unto it: for I am the Lord your God.

2 Ye shall keep my sabbaths, and reverence my sanctuary: I am the Lord.

17 Egypt, that ye should not be their bondmen; and I have broken the bars of your yoke, and 18 made you go upright.

but they do not form a very close connection either with that or with the present chapter. They form a section by themselves.

1. Idols, lit., things of nought (cf. 1 Cor. 8 : 4). Standing image, rather, pillar, as in R. V., and image of stone, or rather, figured stone (R. V.), refer to obelisks or symbolical monuments which might in any way minister to the ever-besetting temptation in Palestine to the worship of idols. The latter term is found only here. To bow down unto it restricts the prohibition. Do not erect these memorials for idolatrous purposes. Ver. 2 is repeated from 19 : 30.

3-13. Hortatory conclusion to the Law of Holiness: Blessings promised for obedience. These promises and threatenings are to be compared with those at the conclusion of the book of the Covenant (Exod. 23 : 20-33) and of the Deuteronomic code (Deut. 28). As is characteristic of the Law of Holiness, the blessings upon the land and agriculture are made emphatic as a religious incentive. For faithfulness in keeping Jehovah's statutes and commandments there are promised abundant seasons with continuous ingathering (ver. 4, 5), peace and security (ver. 5, 6), prowess in war (ver. 7, 8), populousness, and abundance of provision (ver. 9, 10), God's sanctuary among them and the continuance of his favor (ver. 11, 12). The whole concludes with the expression characteristic of the Law of Holiness, "I am Jehovah your God," and with a reference to the deliverance from Egypt and its bondage.

There are many striking resemblances in this passage to Ezekiel—too striking to be altogether accidental (comp. ver. 4 with Ezek. 34 : 26, 27; ver. 6 with Ezek. 34 : 25; ver. 11 with Ezek. 37 : 26, 27), but which in the superior in point of originality it is impossible to determine. Somewhat striking similarities between Joel 2 : 22-27 and this section have also been noted. My tabernacle (ver. 11) should rather be, my sanctuary, or dwelling-place, whether a tent or a temple.

14-33. The five warnings for disobedience. The first warning (ver. 14-18) threatens a physical debility that shall break their spirit and bring them under the fear and oppression of 16 I also will do this unto you ; I will even appoint over you terror, consumption, and the burning ague, that shall consume the eyes, and cause sorrow of heart : and ye shall sow your seed in vain, for your enemies shall eat it.

17 And I will set my face against you, and ye shall be slain before your enemies : they that hate you shall reign over you ; and ye shall flee when none pursueth you.

18 And if ye will not yet for all this hearken unto me, then I will punish you seven times more for your sins.

19 And I will break the pride of your power ; and I will make your heaven as iron, and your earth as brass :

20 And your strength shall be spent in vain : for your land shall not yield her increase, neither shall the trees of the land yield their fruits.

21 And if ye walk contrary unto me, and will not hearken unto me ; I will bring seven times more plagues upon you according to your sins.

22 I will also send wild beasts among you, which shall rob you of your children, and destroy your cattle, and make you few in number ; and your high ways shall be desolate.

23 And if ye will not be reformed by me by these things, but will walk contrary unto me ;

24 Then will I also walk contrary unto you, and will punish you yet seven times for your sins.

25 And I will bring a sword upon you, that shall avenge the quarrel of my covenant : and when ye are gathered together within your cities, I will send the pestilence among you ; and ye shall be delivered into the hand of the enemy.

26 And when I have broken the staff of your bread, ten women shall bake your bread in one oven, and they shall deliver you your bread again by weight : and ye shall eat, and not be satisfied.

27 And if ye will not for all this hearken unto me, but walk contrary unto me ;

28 Then I will walk contrary unto you also in fury ; and I, even I, will chastise you seven times for your sins.

29 And ye shall eat the flesh of your sons, and the flesh of your daughters shall ye eat.

30 And I will destroy your high places, and cut down your images, and cast your carcases upon the carcases of your idols, and my soul shall abhor you.

31 And I will make your cities waste, and bring your sanctuaries unto desolation, and I will not smell the savour of your sweet odours.

16 mandments, but break my covenant ; I also will do this unto you ; I will appoint terror over you, even consumption and fever, that shall consume the eyes, and make the soul to pine away : and ye shall sow your seed in vain, for your enemies

17 shall eat it. And I will set my face against you, and ye shall be smitten before your enemies ; they that hate you shall rule over you ; and ye

18 shall flee when none pursueth you. And if ye will not yet for these things hearken unto me, then I will chastise you seven times more for

19 your sins. And I will break the pride of your power ; and I will make your heaven as iron,

20 and your earth as brass ; and your strength shall be spent in vain : for your land shall not yield her increase, neither shall the trees of the land

21 yield their fruit. And if ye walk contrary unto me, and will not hearken unto me ; I will bring seven times more plagues upon you according

22 to your sins. And I will send the beast of the field among you, which shall rob you of your children, and destroy your cattle, and make you few in number ; and your ways shall become

23 desolate. And if by these things ye will not be reformed unto me, but will walk contrary unto

24 me ; then will I also walk contrary unto you ; and I will smite you, even I, seven times for

25 your sins. And I will bring a sword upon you, that shall execute the vengeance of the covenant ; and ye shall be gathered together within your cities : and I will send the pestilence among 26 you ; and ye shall be delivered into the hand of the enemy. When I break your staff of bread, ten women shall bake your bread in one oven, and they shall deliver your bread again by weight : and ye shall eat, and not be satisfied.

27 And if ye will not for all this hearken unto me, but walk contrary unto me ; then I will walk contrary unto you in fury ; and I also will chastise you seven times for your sins. And ye shall eat the flesh of your sons, and the flesh of your daughters shall ye eat. And I will destroy your high places, and cut down your sun-images, and cast your carcases upon the carcases of your

30 idols ; and my soul shall abhor you. And I will make your cities a waste, and will bring your sanctuaries unto desolation, and I will not smell their enemies. 16. Consumption and the burning ague, or rather, consumption and fever, are perhaps general terms for wasting disease and inflammatory disease. To consume the eyes and to make the life waste away is a form of speech that often recurs in prophetic threatenings (cf. 1 Sam. 2 : 33 ; Deut. 28 : 65).

In the second warning (ver. 18-20) an aggravated or "seven-fold" punishment is threatened through drought. 19. The peculiar expression, to break the pride of your power occurs elsewhere only in Ezekiel where it is characteristic (see Ezek. 24 : 21 ; 30 : 6 ; 33 : 28).

The third warning (ver. 21, 22) sets forth as a "seven-fold" visitation the reducing of the population by wild beasts until the roads become desolate.

According to the fourth warning (ver. 23-26) the rebellious people shall be crowded by war into their cities where pestilence shall break out and scarcity of food shall reduce them to the scantiest rations. 26. To break the staff of your bread is another Ezekiel expression (Ezek. 4 : 16 ; 5 : 16 ; 14 : 13), though something like it is also used by Isaiah (3 : 1).

The fifth warning (ver. 27-33) is the most severe. It threatens the most dreadful destitution for the people, the destruction of their idolatrous symbols, the laying waste of their cities, the rejection of their sacrifices, an astonishing desolation of the land, and captivity among the nations. The eating of the flesh of their offspring (ver. 29) actually occurred at the siege of Samaria by the Syrians (2 Kings 6 : 28, 29) and in Jerusalem at the time of Nebuchadnezzar's siege (Lam. 4 : 10), and also at its final destruction under Titus (see Jos., Bell. Jud., V., 10 : 3).

30. The images are pillars or images dedicated to the sun, as indicated in R. V. Idols, lit., clods, or what can be rolled about, is probably a contemptuous designation. The Poly-

33 And I will scatter you among the heathen, and will draw out a sword after you : and your land shall be desolate, and your cities waste.

34 Then shall the land enjoy her sabbaths, as long as it lieth desolate, and ye be in your enemies' land ; even then shall the land rest, and enjoy her sabbaths.

35 As long as it lieth desolate it shall rest ; because it did not rest in your sabbaths, when ye dwelt upon it.

36 And upon them that are left alive of you I will send a faintness into their hearts in the lands of their enemies ; and the sound of a shaken leaf shall chase them ; and they shall flee, as fleeing from a sword ; and they shall fall when none pursueth.

37 And they shall fall one upon another, as it were before a sword, when none pursueth : and ye shall have no power to stand before your enemies.

38 And ye shall perish among the heathen, and the land of your enemies shall eat you up.

39 And they that are left of you shall pine away in their iniquity in your enemies' lands ; and also in the iniquities of their fathers shall they pine away with them.

40 If they shall confess their iniquity, and the iniquity of their fathers, with their trespass which they trespassed against me, and that also they have walked contrary unto me ;

41 And that I also have walked contrary unto them, and have brought them into the land of their enemies ; if then their uncircumcised hearts be humbled, and they then accept of the punishment of their iniquity :

42 Then will I remember my covenant with Jacob, and also my covenant with Isaac, and also my covenant with Abraham will I remember ; and I will remember the land.

43 The land also shall be left of them, and shall enjoy her sabbaths, while she lieth desolate without them : and they shall accept of the punishment of their iniquity ; because, even because they despised my judgments, and because their soul abhorred my statutes.

44 And yet for all that, when they be in the land of their enemies, I will not cast them away, neither will I abhor them, to destroy them utterly, and to break my covenant with them : for I am the Lord their God.

34 be a waste. Then shall the land enjoy her sabbaths, as long as it lieth desolate, and ye be in your enemies' land ; even then shall the land

35 rest, and enjoy her sabbaths. As long as it lieth desolate it shall have rest ; even the rest which it had not in your sabbaths, when ye dwelt upon

36 it. And as for them that are left of you, I will send a faintness into their heart in the lands of their enemies : and the sound of a driven leaf shall chase them ; and they shall flee, as one fleeth

37 from the sword ; and they shall fall when none pursueth. And they shall stumble one upon another, as it were before the sword, when none

38 pursueth : and ye shall have no power to stand before your enemies. And ye shall perish among

39 the nations, and the land of your enemies shall eat you up. And they that are left of you shall 40 pine away in their iniquity in your enemies' lands ; and also in the iniquities of their fathers shall they pine away with them. And they

41 shall confess their iniquity, and the iniquity of their fathers, in their trespass which they trespassed against me, and also that because they

42 have walked contrary unto me, I also walked contrary unto them, and brought them into the land of their enemies : if then their uncircum-

43 cised heart be humbled, and they then accept of the punishment of their iniquity ; then will

44 I remember my covenant with Jacob ; and also my covenant with Isaac, and also my covenant with Abraham will I remember ; and I will remember the land. The land also shall be left of them, and shall enjoy her sabbath, while she 45 lieth desolate without them ; and they shall accept of the punishment of their iniquity : because, even because they rejected my judgments, and their soul abhorred my statutes.

46 And yet for all that, when they be in the land of their enemies, I will not reject them, neither will I abhor them, to destroy them utterly, and to break my covenant with them : for I am the chrome Bible preserves the contemptuous implication by the rendering fetishes. 33. To draw out a sword after any one is another of Ezekiel's characteristic expressions (cf. Ezek. 5 : 2, 12 ; 12 : 14).

31-45. Results of the visitation upon the land and upon the people. A prominent result of which the author makes great account is that the land shall enjoy a rest as a satisfaction for the long neglect of the sabbatic year. This was the interpretation put upon the captivity by the author of Chronicles (see 2 Chron. 36 : 21). The land shall literally accept her sabbaths (ver. 34), i. e., perhaps be paid them as her due. The term appears to be the technical term for being satisfied by the settlement of an account. With the same signification the children of Israel are said in ver. 41 to accept or be paid the punishment of their iniquity. This important rest of the land, as the triumphant result of the divine visitations, is again recurred to in ver. 43. The writer evidently had strong feelings regarding the sabbatic year, and talks like one who knew that it had not been observed.

The results upon the nation are, first, an extraordinary nervelessness and timidity, so that they pine or consume away and perish in their enemies' land. It is said (ver. 38) that the land of their enemies shall eat them up, a peculiar expression used also by the timid spies regarding the Promised Land (see Num. 13 : 32), though possibly with not exactly the same meaning. Here it probably means that they shall so lose their national identity in the strange land that they shall never come forth as a distinct body, and it shall be as if the land had devoured them. Another result will be that the nation will confess their iniquities and those of their fathers ; and the gracious assurance is given that if their uncircumcised, i. e., stupid, heart (cf. Jer. 4 : 4 ;

CHAPTER XXVII.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When a man shall make a singular vow, the persons shall be for the Lord by thy estimation.

3 And thy estimation shall be of the male from twenty years old even unto sixty years old, even thy estimation shall be fifty shekels of silver, after the shekel of the sanctuary.

4 And if it be a female, then thy estimation shall be thirty shekels.

5 And if it be from five years old even unto twenty years old, then thy estimation shall be of the male twenty shekels, and for the female ten shekels.

6 And if it be from a month old even unto five years old, then thy estimation shall be of the male five shekels of silver, and for the female thy estimation shall be three shekels of silver.

In the land of their enemies the covenant will be in abeyance, not destroyed utterly, and therefore their punishment shall be the salutary chastening of one who is still their God.

46. Subscription to the Law of Holiness. A subscription is appended here as if this marked the end of the Sinai legislation. This may be because the following chapter is of the nature of an appendix, and therefore the law is regarded as strictly completed here ; but more probably the subscription here marks the end of that distinct stratum of the documentary material which has been denominated the Law of Holiness.

Chap. 27. ON THE COMMUTATION OF VOWS AND DUES. After the distinct section, chaps. 17-26, this supplementary chapter reverts to the characteristics of P. We note at once an instance in the form, "a man if" (ver. 2), noticed as a characteristic of P, in the note on 1 : 2. In its reference to the year of Jubilee, however, and in some of its literary marks, this chapter shows affinities with chap. 25, and probably owes its present position to the redactor who brought the whole together into one book.

1-25. The commutation of vows. The vow was a voluntary dedicating of persons or property to Jehovah. In fixing the scale of estimations, vows of persons (ver. 2-8), of animals, clean or unclean (ver. 9-13), of houses (ver. 14, 15), and of fields, belonging to one's hereditary possession or acquired by purchase (ver. 16-25), are mentioned. No one was obliged to make a vow, but once made the vow became an obligation which must be performed (see Deut. 23 : 21-23 ; cf. Num. 30 : 2 ; Ps. 15 : 4 ; Prov. 20 : 25 ; Eccl. 5 : 4, 5). It is the substance of this legislation to which Jesus refers in his teaching regarding the oath (Matt. 5 : 33-37). Perhaps in the earlier times the vow was regarded as so literally obligatory as to know no possibility of commutation or mitigation, as in the case of Jephthah (Judg. 11 : 30, seq.), while by the time the priestly legislation had assumed its final shape the custom of vowing was becoming conventionalized, so that the act of dedicating a person implied that he was to be redeemed according to a fixed tariff. It had become the act of giving money under the form of a dedication of persons or property in kind. The dedicating of a person to the sanctuary was not improbably regarded as a more solemn act than the simple promising of so much money. This custom is alluded to in 2 Kings 12 : 4.

When a man shall make a singular vow, etc. (ver. 2), rather, as more literally rendered, If a man shall set apart a vow, in thy valuation, of persons. The case contemplated is that of a man's setting apart a person by vow, either himself, or some of his family or dependents. A fixed tariff of valuations follows, according to which the person's dedication to the sanctuary might be commuted for money. The valuation was perhaps based on the average value of one's services as a laborer for the period mentioned, or the excess of that value over the cost of his maintenance. Thus the age from twenty to 7 And if it be from sixty years old and above; if it be a male, then thy estimation shall be fifteen shekels, and for the female ten shekels.

8 But if he be poorer than thy estimation, then he shall present himself before the priest, and the priest shall value him; according to his ability that vowed shall the priest value him.

9 And if it be a beast, whereof men bring an offering unto the Lord, all that any man giveth of such unto the Lord shall be holy.

10 He shall not alter it, nor change it, a good for a bad, or a bad for a good: and if he shall at all change beast for beast, then it and the exchange thereof shall be holy.

11 And if it be any unclean beast, of which they do not offer a sacrifice unto the Lord, then he shall present the beast before the priest:

12 And the priest shall value it, whether it be good or bad: as thou valuest it, who art the priest, so shall it be.

13 But if he will at all redeem it, then he shall add a fifth part thereof unto thy estimation.

14 And when a man shall sanctify his house to be holy unto the Lord, then the priest shall estimate it, whether it be good or bad: as the priest shall estimate it, so shall it stand.

15 And if he that sanctified it will redeem his house, then he shall add the fifth part of the money of thy estimation unto it, and it shall be his.

16 And if a man shall sanctify unto the Lord some part of a field of his possession, then thy estimation shall be according to the seed thereof: an homer of barley seed shall be valued at fifty shekels of silver.

17 If he sanctify his field from the year of jubile, according to thy estimation it shall stand.

18 But if he sanctify his field after the jubile, then the priest shall reckon unto him the money according to the years that remain, even unto the year of the jubile, and it shall be abated from thy estimation.

sixty commands the highest valuation, and that from five to twenty next, while the tender age from infancy to childhood is valued low, and the period of old age is, for the male at least, rated at a price a little below that of the period of youth. The shekel of the sanctuary is probably the official shekel (see on 5 : 15). This valuation of Moses was not a rigid rule; in case the person making the vow was too poor to meet it, the fixing of the sum was left to the discretion of the priest (ver. 8).

In the case of beasts of such kinds as are offered in sacrifice being vowed (ver. 9) there seems to be no provision made for commuting the vow in money. It is taken for granted that the beast will be offered, the only provision that is insisted on being that there shall be no changing of good for bad, or bad for good. If this is attempted, both the animal on which the lot fell and its chosen substitute are to be taken to satisfy the vow. If the vow was of an unclean beast (ver. 11), unadapted to the uses of the sanctuary, then the priest on inspection was to value it "between good and bad," i. e., as to how good or bad it was, and then it was to be sold at that valuation (cf. ver. 27); or if the owner wished to retain it he might do so by adding a fifth to the price.

7 shekels of silver. And if it be from sixty years old and upward; if it be a male, then thy estimation shall be fifteen shekels, and for 8 the female ten shekels. But if he be poorer than thy estimation, then he shall be set before the priest, and the priest shall value him; according to the ability of him that vowed shall the priest value him.

9 And if it be a beast, whereof men offer an oblation unto the Lord, all that any man giveth of 10 such unto the Lord shall be holy. He shall not alter it, nor change it, a good for a bad, or a bad for a good: and if he shall at all change beast for beast, then both it and that for which 11 it is changed shall be holy. And if it be any unclean beast, of which they do not offer an oblation unto the Lord, then he shall set the beast 12 before the priest: and the priest shall value it, whether it be good or bad: as thou the priest 13 valuest it, so shall it be. But if he will indeed redeem it, then he shall add the fifth part thereof 14 unto thy estimation.

15 And when a man shall sanctify his house to be holy unto the Lord, then the priest shall estimate it, whether it be good or bad: as the priest 16 shall estimate it, so shall it stand. And if he that sanctified it will redeem his house, then he shall add the fifth part of the money of thy estimation 17 unto it, and it shall be his.

18 And if a man shall sanctify unto the Lord part of the field of his possession, then thy estimation shall be according to the sowing thereof: the sowing of a homer of barley shall be valued at fifty 19 shekels of silver. If he sanctify his field from the year of jubile, according to thy estimation it shall 20 stand. But if he sanctify his field after the jubile, then the priest shall reckon unto him the money according to the years that remain unto the year of jubile, and an abatement shall be made from

Houses (ver. 14, 15) when vowed were subject to the same rule as unclean beasts, i. e., sold at the priest's valuation and the money turned into the sacred treasury, or redeemed by the addition of one-fifth to the price. It is to be remembered that if houses were in the country they were subject to the same right of redemption at the Jubilee as the fields (25 : 31), while in walled towns that right lapsed at the end of one year (25 : 29). This was no doubt taken into the account by the priest in his fixing of the valuation.

The value of a field belonging to the vower's hereditary possession (ver. 16, seq.) was reckoned according to the amount of seed required to sow it properly. A field requiring a homer of barley, i. e., ten ephahs (Ezek. 45 : 11) containing a little over five and a half bushels (see on Lev. 19 : 36), was valued at fifty shekels. This was evidently the estimated worth of the crops of such a field for the whole Jubilee period. If the Jubilee period had partly elapsed at the time the vow was made, the priest allowed an abatement according to the time still remaining (see ver. 18). Apparently the owner after paying his valuation continued to hold the field, but without the right of selling it. If he wished to redeem it outright he could do so by adding a fifth to the 19 And if he that sanctified the field will in any wise redeem it, then he shall add the fifth part of the money of thy estimation unto it, and it shall be assured to him.

20 And if he will not redeem the field, or if he have sold the field to another man, it shall not be redeemed any more.

21 But the field, when it goeth out in the jubile, shall be holy unto the Lord, as a field devoted; the possession thereof shall be the priest's.

22 And if a man sanctify unto the Lord a field which he hath bought, which is not of the fields of his possession;

23 Then the priest shall reckon unto him the worth of thy estimation, even unto the year of the jubile: and he shall give thine estimation in that day, as a holy thing unto the Lord.

24 In the year of the jubile the field shall return unto him of whom it was bought, even to him to whom the possession of the land did belong.

25 And all thy estimations shall be according to the shekel of the sanctuary: twenty gerahs shall be the shekel.

26 Only the firstling of the beasts, which should be the Lord's firstling, no man shall sanctify it; whether it be ox, or sheep: it is the Lord's.

27 And if it be of an unclean beast, then he shall redeem it according to thine estimation, and shall add a fifth part of it thereto: or if it be not redeemed, then it shall be sold according to thy estimation.

28 Notwithstanding no devoted thing, that a man shall devote unto the Lord of all that he hath, both of man and beast, and of the field of his possession, shall be sold or redeemed: every devoted thing is most holy unto the Lord.

29 None devoted, which shall be devoted of men, shall be redeemed; but shall surely be put to death.

19 thy estimation. And if he that sanctified the field will indeed redeem it, then he shall add the fifth part of the money of thy estimation

20 unto it, and it shall be assured to him. And if he will not redeem the field, or if he have sold the field to another man, it shall not be redeemed

21 any more: but the field, when it goeth out in the jubile, shall be holy unto the Lord, as a field devoted; the possession thereof shall be the

22 priest's. And if he sanctify unto the Lord a field which he hath bought, which is not of the field of

23 his possession; then the priest shall reckon unto him the worth of thy estimation unto the year of jubile: and he shall give thine estimation in

24 that day, as a holy thing unto the Lord. In the year of jubile the field shall return unto him of whom it was bought, even to him to whom the 25 possession of the land belongeth. And all thy estimations shall be according to the shekel of the sanctuary: twenty gerahs shall be the shekel.

26 Only the firstling among beasts, which is made a firstling to the Lord, no man shall sanctify it; whether it be ox or sheep, it is the Lord's.

27 And if it be of an unclean beast, then he shall ransom it according to thine estimation, and shall add unto it the fifth part thereof: or if it be not redeemed, then it shall be sold according to thy estimation.

28 Notwithstanding, no devoted thing, that a man shall devote unto the Lord of all that he hath, whether of man or beast, or of the field of his possession, shall be sold or redeemed: every valuation. Indeed, if he did not pay this additional fifth, and so bring the field back into his absolute possession before the Jubilee, he lost all right of redemption at the Jubilee and the field became a priestly possession like a devoted field (ver. 21). Or if, again, he sold his interest to another man during the time of his occupancy as tenant of a vowed field, he forfeited the right of redemption at the Jubilee in the same way.

In the case of vowing a field which the person had bought (ver. 22) the estimating must be completed and the whole price must be paid at once (in that day, ver. 23), so as not to impair the original owner's right to redeem his hereditary possession at any time. At the Jubilee the field would revert to the original owner as in 25 : 28.

All these estimations were to be in the official or sanctuary shekel, which was probably worth about sixty cents.

26, 27. Of firstlings. The firstlings of cattle could not be vowed, as these already belonged to Jehovah (Exod. 13 : 2 ; 22 : 30). An unclean beast might be redeemed, if so desired, at the priest's valuation with the addition of a fifth to the price. Thy estimation (ver. 27)—second person singular—is no doubt subject to the same explanation as is given it in ver. 12. If not redeemed it was to be sold. This, so far as related to the firstborn of an ass, was a modification of the earlier law (Exod. 13 : 13 ; 34 : 20) according to which the animal was to be redeemed with a lamb, or if not redeemed, to have its neck broken.

28, 29. Of things devoted under a ban. Things devoted under a ban were originally to be destroyed utterly (Num. 21 : 1-3 ; Josh. 6 : 17-24 ; 1 Sam. 15 : 1-21). The cherem, or ban, was a sentence of utter devotion to God; and to make the thing banned subject to a privilege of redemption would be to frustrate the object of the ban. From the word חָרַם, cherem, was derived the proper name חַרְמָה, Charmah (see Num. 21 : 3), a memorial of the circumstance that that place, and the whole region, on being taken by the Israelites, was "utterly devoted." According to Num. 18 : 14 (cf. Ezek. 44 : 29) everything banned in Israel was to be the perquisite of the priest. Here evidently to "devote" or ban meant to dedicate to the sanctuary in an especially strict way. As to the case of persons placed under the ban, ver. 29 is not to be taken as meaning that any one could arbitrarily devote one of his children or slaves to death, and in that case must at whatever cost perform his vow. Note the passive construction shall be devoted (ver. 29), as if by some higher authority, and also the absence of the phrase "to Jehovah." The verse rather means that the older law devoting idolaters to death (Exod. 22 :

30 And all the tithe of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's: it is holy unto the Lord.

31 And if a man will at all redeem ought of his tithes, he shall add thereto the fifth part thereof.

32 And concerning the tithe of the herd, or of the flock, even of whatsoever passeth under the rod, the tenth shall be holy unto the Lord.

33 He shall not search whether it be good or bad, neither shall he change it: and if he change it at all, then both it and the change thereof shall be holy; it shall not be redeemed.

34 These are the commandments, which the Lord commanded Moses for the children of Israel in mount Sinai.

30 And all the tithe of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is

31 the Lord's: it is holy unto the Lord. And if a man will redeem aught of his tithe, he shall add

32 unto it the fifth part thereof. And all the tithe of the herd or the flock, whatsoever passeth under 33 the rod, the tenth shall be holy unto the Lord. He shall not search whether it be good or bad, neither shall he change it: and if he change it at all, then both it and that for which it is changed shall be holy; it shall not be redeemed.

34 These are the commandments, which the Lord commanded Moses for the children of Israel in mount Sinai.

20; Deut. 13 : 12, seq.) was to be interpreted strictly and literally.

30-33. The redemption of tithes. The tithes belonged to Jehovah, and were subject to the same rule as regards redemption as the clean beasts that had been vowed. The tithe of cattle, with the exception of the secular tithe apprehended as one of the burdens of the monarchy (1 Sam. 8 : 17), is only mentioned in a late passage (2 Chron. 31 : 5, 6), though there is no antecedent reason for supposing that it was not an early institution. The expression passeth under the rod (ver. 32) refers to the manner of counting animals, which was by causing them to pass one by one out of an enclosure while a rod dipped in some pigment was held over them and made to touch and mark each tenth one.

34. Subscription. This verse is added as a conclusion to this supplementary chapter (comp. 26 : 46).

THE name Numbers, by which this fourth book of the Pentateuch is generally known, is the title given to it in the Septuagint and Vulgate versions. This name was no doubt applied to the book on account of the two numberings of the people narrated in the first and twenty-sixth chapters, and on account of the matter of a statistical nature with which the book abounds. In the Hebrew Bibles it generally goes by its first distinctive word, בְּמִדְבָּר, B'midhbar, "in the wilderness." The book is the history of the children of Israel from just before their departure from Sinai, through the period covered by their forty years' wandering in the desert, and to the time when, encamped in the plains of Moab opposite Jericho, with the country to the east of the Jordan subdued, they were ready to cross the river and undertake the conquest of Western Palestine.

According to its subject-matter the book naturally divides itself into three parts. The first part, extending from the beginning to the tenth verse of the tenth chapter, might be entitled, Preparations for the Departure from Sinai; the second part, from 10 : 11 to 22 : 1, relates various incidents of the journey from Sinai to the Steppes of Moab; while part third is taken up with the occurrences and divine instructions during the sojourn in the Steppes of Moab.

Part first is largely of a statistical and Levitical character. The first chapter gives an account of the census of the twelve tribes exclusive of the tribe of Levi; while the second goes on to regulate their order in the camp and on the march. In chapter three, after a brief genealogy of Aaron, is registered the divine direction to take the tribe of Levi for the service of the sanctuary in lieu of the first-born whom Jehovah claims for himself; while chapter four presents the duties of the Levites in detail and gives the number of those qualified for service. Chapter five contains laws on various subjects: a regulation excluding the leprous and unclean from the camp; a pendant to the legislation in Lev. 5 : 14, seq., defining the law of compensation for fraud in case the injured person is dead and has no go'el; and finally an interesting ordinance prescribing the ordeal for the woman suspected by her husband of unfaithfulness. The sixth chapter gives the regulations for assuming and completing the Nazarite vow, and ends with the formula for the priestly benediction. In the seventh chapter the exactly similar offerings of the twelve princes of the tribes at the consecration of the tent of meeting and of the altar are marshaled at length in twelve identical descriptions, and at the end an isolated verse is inserted describing Moses' habitual communication with Jehovah in the tent of meeting. Chapter eight opens with an item of directions regarding the golden candlestick, and then narrates the consecration of the Levites, with the divine regulation as to their term of service. In the ninth chapter is given an account of the observance of the Passover at Sinai, with the provision, growing out of an actual case, for a supplemental ordinance a month later for the benefit of those ceremonially incapacitated to observe the festival at the proper time, and finally an account of the behavior of the cloud which rested over the sanctuary and the signals which it gave for encamping or breaking camp. The first ten verses of the tenth chapter bring the history and legislation at Sinai to a close by an ordinance regarding the construction and use of the silver trumpets employed by the priests for the sacred calls and alarms.

The second part, covering a period of nearly forty years, begins at 10 : 11 with an account of the departure of the people from Mount Sinai, the securing of Hobab as a guide, and the habit of the ark and of Moses, who recognized it as the seat of Jehovah, in directing the movements of the host. In the interesting eleventh chapter is narrated the murmuring of the people at Taberah and Kibroth-Hattaawah, the appointment of seventy elders to assist Moses, accompanied by the outbreak of prophecy as a symptom of awakening religious life in Israel, and finally the miraculous sending of quails to satisfy the people. Chapter twelve gives an account of the rebellion of Miriam and Aaron against Moses as Jehovah's prophet, with Miriam's punishment of leprosy. In the thirteenth chapter is given the history of the despatch of the spies from Kadesh and their report, while the fourteenth records the rebellion of the people and their sentence to forty years of wandering in the wilderness. Chapter fifteen inserts from the priestly source a series of laws regarding various offerings, the account of the Sabbath-breaker and his sentence, and the regulation regarding memorial fringes to be worn on the garments. In the sixteenth chapter is narrated the formidable rebellion of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram; and in chapter seventeen the subject-matter of the dispute is set at rest by the miraculous confirmation of the priestly prerogatives in the tribe of Levi. Another insertion of priestly laws in chapter eighteen gives the duties, relative position, and revenues of the priests and Levites, while the nineteenth chapter describes the preparation and use of a water of purification for those defiled by contact with the dead. The twentieth chapter finds the new generation reassembled at Kadesh and relates the death of Miriam, the sentence of Moses and Aaron at the Waters of Strife, the refusal of a passage through Edom, and the death of Aaron at Mount Hor. Chapter 21 to 22 : 1, with various embellishments from ancient song, narrates the campaigns and journeyings from Mount Hor to the Steppes of Moab.

Part third begins with the three chapters devoted to the interesting episode of Balaam; the first of these, chapter twenty-two, narrating Balaam's summons to curse Israel and his journey to Moab, the twenty-third giving the soothsayer's first two discourses from the top of the rocks, and the twenty-fourth reproducing what might be distinctively called his prophecies under the influence of the Spirit of God. In the twenty-fifth chapter is narrated the idolatry and immorality of the people at Shittim under the enticements of the women of Moab and Midian, and Jehovah's promise to Phinehas, who executed his vengeance. Chapter twenty-six is occupied with the second census of Israel, while in the twenty-seventh the daughters of Zelophehad secure an inheritance among their father's brethren, and Moses is warned of his death and directed to appoint Joshua as his successor. The twenty-eighth and twenty-ninth chapters are taken up with a list and rubric of the public sacrifices for the sacred year, while the thirtieth gives the law regarding the validity of vows. In chapter thirty-one is an account of the war of vengeance against Midian with the regulation in regard to the dividing of the spoil. The thirty-second chapter contains an account of the allotment to the two tribes and a half of the territory to the east of the Jordan. In chapter thirty-three is inserted from a very ancient source a list of the camping-places of Israel from Rameses to the plains of Moab, with directions respecting the occupation of Canaan. The boundaries of the territory west of the Jordan are delimited in the thirty-fourth chapter, and the names of the men who are to divide the land are given. Chapter thirty-five registers the appointment of cities for the Levites and cities of refuge; and finally, the short thirty-sixth chapter closes the book with an ordinance, growing out of the case of the daughters of Zelophehad, in regard to the marriage of heiresses.

The problems regarding the date and authorship of the book of Numbers are problems that belong to it in common with the books of Exodus and Leviticus, and their discussion is simply that of the distinctive strata or aspects of legislation and narrative appearing in the texture of the middle books of the Pentateuch. As a separate book, Numbers does not stand out critically from the mass of legislation and narrative of which these middle books are composed. It simply goes on from Leviticus with little change of subject, as Leviticus goes on from Exodus. Like Leviticus, or for that matter all the historical books of the Old Testament, it appears anonymously in the Hebrew, the only part of it which makes any profession of coming from documents written by Moses being the itinerary in chapter thirty-three. It lends itself to consideration simply as so much priestly legislation and so much historical narrative placed side by side in a connection which is not always logically obvious, and bounded on the one side by the first numbering of Israel and on the other by the legislative readiness to cross the Jordan and enter on the conquest of Western Palestine.

Perhaps nothing needs to be said regarding the improbability that Moses produced these books of the Pentateuch in substantially their present form that has not already been said in the introduction to the book of Leviticus, excepting that various features and peculiarities might be pointed out in the book of Numbers which seem to enhance that improbability still more. Apart from tradition, the natural and unforced impression which the reader derives from an attentive survey of the phenomena of statement and style is that the book is a compilation of laws and statistical records and ceremonial enactments very much of a piece with those in the latter part of Exodus and Leviticus, accompanied by a history of some outstanding crises and events in the wilderness life of Israel woven together from material derived from somewhat variant sources and wrought into its final shape long after the period of which it treats. How exactly these variant sources may be regained and mapped out by criticism may well be a matter of dispute; but that there is a slow and apparently solid coming together into something like unanimity regarding the great general outlines of a documentary hypothesis of the origin of the Hexateuch is a fact which cannot be ignored.

The most distinctive legislation of the book of Numbers, whose effect we should expect to see apparent in subsequent history, is the systematic provision for the Levites and the rigid fixing of their status in relation to that of the priests. In this book we find the Levites organized as a temple-militia, "wholly given," or “joined” to the priests, claimed by Jehovah and “waved” as the offering of the children of Israel in lieu of their firstborn, and maintained by the tithes of the people from which in turn they pay a tithe for the maintenance of Aaron the priest. Their three families of Gershon, Kohath, and Merari are systematically designated to the duty of caring for and transporting the various parts of the tabernacle; and this duty is rigidly differentiated from the function of the priest, which is that of atoning and blessing in the name of Jehovah. The heart-burnings and jealousies in connection with this differentiation are reflected in the history; and in consequence of the Levite Korah’s attempt to assert priestly prerogatives for his order a wholesale act of judgment is performed, and memorial plates for the altar are made out of the stricken rebels’ censers to remind the children of Israel that no stranger not of the seed of Aaron may approach to burn incense before Jehovah.

Now if all these definite ecclesiastical arrangements had been enforced by Moses and made the model to which the organized religious life of the nation conformed from their earliest history in Canaan, we should expect to see some indications of a history developing on that basis. But when we turn to the earlier historical books of the Bible we see no signs of such a religious establishment. There is only such rudimentary organization of worship as would naturally grow up in a new land without any such previous legislation as that of the Pentateuch. The Levites, while recognized in a way as a sacred caste, are nevertheless not systematically provided for, but find their home and support as they may. They do not seem to be distinguished from the priests, nor is there any such developed establishment and ritual as calls for the specialization of functions prescribed in Numbers. The priests are the body of men who “bear the ark”; and this is the typical function which is taken generically to characterize the priestly office (1 Kings 2 : 26). This lack of differentiation between priests and Levites also characterizes the book of Deuteronomy, where throughout the sacred tribe is designated as “the priests, the Levites”; Aaron is never called a priest; the priests have the function of bearing the ark; and on the other hand the Levites have the supreme sacerdotal privilege of blessing in the name of Jehovah. Such a radical difference in the point of view regarding the hierarchy between the history and Deuteronomy on the one hand, and the priestly legislation on the other, indicates not only that Numbers and Deuteronomy could hardly have originated at practically the same time and from the same author, as the traditional view holds, but that all the earlier history of Israel developed in the ignorance or entire absence of any organic law embodying these arrangements of the Priest Code.

This noticeable feature in Israelitish history needed to be taken account of here because it has had a large share in provoking the discussions and conjectures on which the belief in a late compilation of the Pentateuch is founded. In seeking for indications of the time when these Levitical regulations began to be enforced in the nation’s life, criticism has fixed upon the last nine mysterious chapters of the book of Ezekiel as very significant in the pedigree of the Priest Code. Among the innovations introduced by that prophet, who is regarded as the spiritual father of the Levitical tendency in Judaism, is the important enactment in 44 : 6, seq. According to this the priests of the high places and their descendants are henceforth to do the menial work of the sanctuary which has hitherto been done by uncircumcised strangers. They lose their priestly privileges, these henceforth being reserved for the sons of Zadok, that is, the offspring of the priestly families of Jerusalem. This demand of Ezekiel's is thought to be the root of the distinction, which appears in full bloom in the Priest Code, between the priests and the Levites. While this exilic enactment makes the Levite genetically a degraded priest—and the non-Zadokites were so little inclined to take up the rôle assigned them by Ezekiel that only by special measures were any Levites at all induced to return with Ezra (Ezra 8 : 15, seq.)—the subsequent legislation, completely formulated in Numbers, finds other grounds for their position as temple-servants, and introduces them to their duties as to an honorable position to which they rise from private life.

The probability emerging from the comparison of details which present themselves from various parts of the Old Testament appears to be : that the completed temple organization and ritual, including the relegation of the Levites to the position of subordinate helpers in the temple, did not come into force until after the exile ; and that in the books of Leviticus and Numbers which, availing themselves of ancient materials, were put into shape after that period, these priestly arrangements were ascribed to Moses through a use of legal formulas or fictions which was a common literary procedure among the nations of antiquity.

The really interesting part of the book of Numbers is its narrative portion ; and of this it may be said, that while criticism finds it more or less composite in its structure, criticism can scarcely presume, in the absence of contradictory data, to deny its historical credibility. On the other hand the value of those stories for inspiration and admonition and the higher knowledge of God and truth—which is really history's most worthy motive for getting itself written—is a value which is evinced in terms of usefulness for the common man, and which is not impaired by a neglect to raise the question whether all these statements exactly correspond to happenings in an otherwise unknown past. And this introduces us to the consideration of the worth of the book of Numbers to the readers of a completed Bible. Whatever critics may make of Jewish history through the careful analysis and piecing together of the elements of the old literature, for the common reader of later times the book of Numbers always remains a single whole, which produces its impression in its setting in the Bible. Not for these readers is the task of reconstructing Israel's history on the lines demanded by scientific analysis. They will ever take the book as it comes, and use it for its value in the common life of to-day. The chemist may laboriously analyze the most beneficent of heaven's gifts and label it  $H_2O$ , but to the thirsty it always remains plain water. In the far past the streams of literary tendency now learnedly designated as J and E and P may have produced their results as separate currents of thought and expression, but in the providence of God these streams came together and were united into a whole which only the acutest scholarship can separate into its parts ; and together they will remain, and will produce their unified impression, not as fragments from the post-exilic period or from the period of the later monarchy, but as the accepted history of God's dealings with the children of Israel while they were on their way from Egypt to the Promised Land. If the book as we have it is composite, and if the mission which God has ordained for it is the de facto indication of his eternal purpose, then the divine inspiration by which it, with all Scripture, is given must be taken as applying to the authors and redactors who have fitted it in its completed form to inspire and teach the world.

While the great outstanding event of Exodus, after the deliverance from Egypt and the Red Sea, is the giving of the Law, and the local center of Israel's history is Sinai, here in Numbers the local center is Kadesh, and the pivotal event of the history is the refusal to enter the Promised Land, with the sentence to forty years' wandering in the wilderness. In Exodus the perversity of the nation was especially manifested by their lapse into idolatry in making the golden calf, while in Numbers it is their unbelief in turning back from the borders of Canaan. Full of the impressions derived from the book of Exodus, Stephen sums up the sin and reprobation of Israel in that they "made a calf in those days" and were given over to serve the host of heaven; the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews, on the other hand, deriving spiritual admonition from the book of Numbers, reminds the Christian church of that whole generation who hardened their hearts in the day of provocation so that God swore in his wrath that they should not enter into his rest. That act of unbelief and its punishment bulks large in the memory of Israel's teachers. The one predominant spiritual lesson for which the history in the book of Numbers stands in the consciousness of psalmist and apostle is that a nation may be undone through unbelief, even though it has been ushered on a career of promise with the most miraculous tokens of special divine favor.

This critical event in Israel's history, with its spiritual lesson, may be taken as the great outstanding feature by which the book of Numbers is individualized. But merely to individualize the book and assign it to its place in the catalogue of lessons which we credit God with having taught mankind, is but the beginning of that knowledge and profit which a reverent following of its utterances with a sympathetic attention and a quickened imagination may be expected to yield. If we accord to the book the simple treatment of reading it, in the true sense of that word, that is, committing ourselves to its current and sharing its point of view, as every author seeks to make his readers do—we shall find in the book of Numbers, after we have passed the rather forbidding statistical vestibule of its opening chapters, a wealth of instruction and a glow of human interest such as belongs to genuine biography.

We have the story of a people wandering through a desert, thrown daily upon immediate divine guidance given in the pillar of cloud and of fire, and daily introduced to a widening knowledge of Jehovah their infinite Saviour. Their manifold benefits and glimpses of truth and perversities will catch the attention of readers with varying emphasis according to that phase of human life in which those readers are interested. To the prophet, deep in his controversy with the idolatry of his time, that history was a secret apostasy from Jehovah and a cherishing of images (Amos 5 : 25, seq.). To the psalmist it was a life-long tempting of God as at Massah and Meribah, so that the divine estimate of them was of a people that do err in their heart and have not known Jehovah's ways (Ps. 95 : 8-11). The attention of Paul was held by their overthrow in the wilderness, by their greed at Kibroth-Hattaawah, by their idolatry at Sinai, by their impurity at Abel-Shittim, and by their experience with the fiery serpents (see 1 Cor. 10 : 5-9). To Jude, sorely vexed by ignorant railers, the venality of Balaam and the ambition of Korah furnish types of the evils of his time (Jude 11); while the Judaizing author of the Apocalypse finds in the liberal teachings of his region a resemblance to that counsel of Balaam by which the children of Israel were beguiled into eating things sacrificed to idols (Rev. 2 : 14). Our Lord, full of generous enthusiasm for the salvation of the lost, draws the most wonderful and effective of illustrations from the serpent lifted up in the wilderness (John 3 : 14, 15). So the long line of biblical teachers, casting their eye over Israel's past, find in this book of Numbers a veritable storehouse of suggestion and admonition as the interests of their respective circles fall to be considered in the light of history. And we in our turn may learn still other lessons of intense interest to the student of human nature as we follow attentively the glowing anticipations, the misunderstandings and perversities of that people in those days of their discipline and spiritual awakening.

We may take the course of the story, and even of the priest-legislation to some degree, as following the unfolding of the religious spirit in the nation as that responded to the influences brought to bear upon it. While the children of Israel were in the camp, mainly subjected to regulations looking toward order and purity imposed upon them by superior authority, there was not naturally so much forthputting of spontaneous religious enthusiasm on the part of the lay multitude. They were having everything thought out and planned for them. Such acts of religious devotion and love as emanated from their own initiative were acts of loyalty evinced in offerings for the tabernacle and the altar, or vows expressive of the impulse for an extra sanctity such as might distinguish the devoted from the common life. The law of the Nazarite, while perhaps belonging to a later time, no doubt took cognizance of a practice that grew up with that impulse for purity and separateness which was the heart of the earlier Levitical religion. So even in the priest-legislation of the book of Numbers there is a certain congruity with the development of religion in the nation. While the people are lying at Sinai the regulations recorded are for the organization and policing of the camp, or for the fixing of the priest's share in unsatisfied claims, or defining his function as the censor of unfaithfulness in the family. Yet as the time grows riper the legislation and feeling grow more and more forward-looking; the nation's anticipations are becoming more adjusted to the breaking up of the camp and the living on the road. Levites are organized principally to carry the tabernacle. By the Passover and its supplemental ordinance the congregation renews its consciousness as a sacramental host. The silver trumpets are fashioned, and their signals for raising the camp, section by section, to its feet are defined. The movements of the cloud become associated with Jehovah's will in regard to the people's advance, and anticipation is eagerly fixed on the majestic lifting of that symbol of the divine presence which has so long overshadowed the tabernacle.

Finally the glad sign of God's command to move was seen in the heavens; the cloud was lifted up from over the sanctuary. Amid all the bustle of taking down the tabernacle and striking camp—men, women, and children falling into place in the line and catching wondering glimpses of the mysterious ark which seemed to be their palladium and guide—there are the signs running through the narrative of the gladdest, most expansive anticipations and the intensest feeling. Moses no doubt expressed the universal fervor and assurance when he said in recommending Israel's companionship to Hobab, "We will do thee good; for Jehovah hath spoken good concerning Israel." It was a high pitch of religious elevation, a deep sense of communion with Jehovah, from which could come forth that majestic invocation in the presence of the ark, "Rise up, O Jehovah, and let thine enemies be scattered; and let them that hate thee flee before thee"; "Return, O Jehovah, unto the ten thousands of the thousands of Israel."

The revulsion from the most joyous elation is the intensest disappointment and depression. The mixed multitude, unthrilled by the larger joys of the promised rest, soon found intolerable hardship in the deprivations of a roving life, and their blatant dissatisfaction ran like a contagion through the camp. It must have been a tense feeling, just ready to break, which at the first touch of disappointment shattered itself into a perfect tempest of hysterical grief, with every man weeping at the door of his tent. In close association with that high emotional tension came the appointment of the seventy elders to share Moses' spirit, and their ecstatic prophesying as the greatness and glory of God came before their clarified vision. Out of that fervency of widespread faith came the prophetic impulse that penetrated to the camp and inspired Eldad and Medad with a power of utterance which Moses could wish universal. The being on the move—the being penetrated with the joys of the future—was bearing its fruit. It was a kind of pentecostal outpouring in the Jewish church. In contrast to the life of law, which is yielding its legitimate fruit of restraint and loyalty and the passion for separateness, we begin to see something of the life of faith, which is already showing itself strong to awaken the spirit and call forth conquering enthusiasm.

But the new life of the Spirit has its characteristic problems and set-backs; and these are the same in kind as those which attend all outbreaking of spontaneous spiritual power in the midst of a constituency too worldly to give it an intelligent reception. Prophetic power, which to the true insight of Moses was ideally an endowment for all, was apprehended by Joshua in his zeal for the official and mechanical as a thing to be repressed or confined in tactical bounds; just as the free apostolic Christianity, which at first blossomed out in gifts of the Spirit, was eventually tamed down under the dogmatic regulation of the Catholic Church. To Miriam and Aaron that gift of rapturous speaking, valued for its distinction rather than for its realization of a higher life, presented itself as a thing which it was possible to make general through ambition and successful striving. To their imperfectly reverent contention Jehovah vouchsafes an answer, describing prophecy as a divine revelation, but implying that its highest manifestations, at present monopolized by Moses, are those which have most of the regulative and prosaically useful, and least of the ecstatic and uncontrollable and visionary. Thus from this early indication of attention given to the nature of Israel's distinctive talent of prophecy we observe embedded deep in Hebrew thought the germ of that principle, so well fitted to curb extravagancies and keep inspired instruction sane and useful, that the spirit of the prophets is subject to the prophets.

But not only is this fairest blossom of the religion of faith, this marvelous endowment of prophecy, made the object of attention and the subject of divine instruction, but there are evidences that thought has been expended and conclusions reached as to the ideal nature of the priesthood. We have already seen that Levitism did not succeed in confining the higher prerogatives of the priesthood, the privilege of drawing nigh to the immediate presence of God, to a narrow class without a considerable convulsion in the nation of Israel. But the principle which Korah found so widely accepted that he could make it a war-cry in his demagogic strike for his own advancement was that "all the congregation are holy, every one of them, and Jehovah is among them." Here we have the beginning of that consciousness in Israel, so uplifting for the spiritual, that they are a kingdom of priests and a holy nation (Exod. 19 : 6); but, like the gift of prophecy, we see this ideal priestly privilege taken in hand by unspiritual leaders and debased to a thing for the play of ambition and contention. It was not the principle of a universal access to God which was condemned in the divine judgment on Korah and his company, but the impious employment of it as a pretext in that powerful leader's contention for his own selfish ends. As an ideal principle indeed, it was not yet ready to come forth and establish itself by a concrete and tangible molding of human institutions. This would be to sweep away all the barriers of the holy place and degrade the reverend sacredness of the temple to the common level. Korah himself did not seriously contemplate any such outcome of his high assertions. Levitism, the narrow restriction of the priestly privilege, gained a momentous victory; and no doubt it was better so, for God had his use for it in the safeguarding and development of religion in Israel. The distinction between the sacred and the secular cannot safely be obliterated until men are heavenly minded enough to level up into the sacred instead of leveling down into the secular. But the principle of a universal priesthood lay embedded in the religious consciousness as an ideal, now and then finding expression in the rapt utterance of psalmist or prophet, but awaiting its time to come to the birth in the working life of the church, when our Lord Jesus Christ, by his offering of himself once for all, and his eternal rending of the veil, pronounced the divine sentence on all human schemes for barring the common approach to the Infinite, and proclaimed immediate access to the holiest place for every one who will draw nigh to God.

Now criticism will no doubt assert that these ideas regarding the nature of prophecy and priesthood belong to a far later and maturer epoch than the period of the journey through the wilderness, and will insist on stirring up the materials anew and concocting a religious history of Israel which shall be far other in its sequence than what it appears upon its face. With this assertion and demand we have no contention; when our quest is for the same kind of knowledge for which these scholars are delving we shall no doubt consider and appraise their conclusions. But meanwhile we are pointing out what a lifelikeness and dramatic sequence the plain book of Numbers in its setting in a completed Bible exhibits. We are introducing the book to the common reader, and inviting him to see those things of eternal interest and value which that book has from time immemorial been placing within his reach. Let him insist on his right to read and enjoy and profit, undisturbed by the question whether he is reading contemporaneously written history or not. He is at least reading a marvelous narration of a divine guidance of Israel through their forty years' wandering in the desert; and no recasting of the history or resetting as to its age can make the book any more inspiring or spiritually helpful. These things happened unto them as types, and they were written for our admonition upon whom the ends of the ages are come.

The Bible is a live book. That which is alive moves. To get the benefit of companionship with that which is alive and moving we must accompany it and move along with it. This is what true reading is—the entering into and moving with the mind of the author, who would transfer us to his point of view and place truth before us. We may dissect and learn the anatomy of the book also; and this knowledge is interesting in its sphere. The commentary here placed before the reader is not without its exhibitions of the results of critical dissection. But we dissect only the dead body; and we must not think that dissection of the dead can give the same results as communion with the living. May the day be far distant when the Bible shall become for Western Christendom only a cadaver, the prey of dissection and analysis and criticism, a thing to be endlessly studied about, but never to be studied or communed with in its own living body and spirit. It will do the full good which its divine Inspirer intended only as it is a live book, a speaking companion, approached and appreciated through that naïve power to merge the willing mind in its current of thought and imagery which the coldly critical habit can only do us infinite harm by taking away. Thus read and appreciated, not the least inspiring and vitally helpful of the sixty-six books in our canon will be found to be the divinely given book of Numbers.

PART FIRST. PREPARATIONS FOR THE DEPARTURE FROM SINAI, CHAPTERS 1 TO 10 : 10.

The book of Numbers is more composite in its structure than the book of Leviticus, which appears to be almost solely derived from the priest-legislation, including the distinct stratum known as the Law of Holiness. The structure of Numbers more nearly resembles that of Exodus, having passages woven in from the JE document. The latter part of the book shows signs here and there of a still more composite structure. Some brief passages are quoted from what is probably the very oldest Hebrew literature extant, as, for instance, the obscure fragment from the "Book of the Wars of Jehovah," in 21 : 14, and perhaps also the "Well Song" and the taunting Proverb song in the same chapter (ver. 17, 18, 27-30). The Balaam discourses, on the other hand (23 : 7-10, 18-24 ; 24 : 3-9, 15-24), are quite generally regarded by critics as reflecting a national enthusiasm and sense of victorious greatness such as came to the nation later, say after the victories of David. All this first part, however, with the additional verses to 10 : 28, appears to be derived from P, and to have for its main topic the disposition of the camp and the duties of the Levites. The preparation for the journey from Sinai is represented as occupying twenty days (comp. 1 : 1 with 10 : 11).

Chap. 1. THE CENSUS OF THE TWELVE TRIBES EXCLUSIVE OF THE TRIBE OF LEVI.

1-19. The command to take the census is given in the tent of meeting. In like manner the commands of the book of Leviticus purport to have been spoken out of the tent of meeting (see Lev. 1 : 1). 1. The first day of the second month. It is now one month since the tabernacle was set up (see Exod. 40 : 2, 17), and the revelation of the book of Leviticus is represented as having been given in that time, that is, after the tent of meeting was completed and while the children of Israel were still at Sinai (see Lev. 1 : 1 ; 26 : 46 ; 27 : 34).

This census appears to have been for civil and military purposes and to be little more than a registering according to tribes and families of results already obtained in connection with the levying of the half-shekel sanctuary tax nine months before (Exod. 30 : 11 seq. ; 38 : 25-28). No change in the total number is noted (cf. ver. 46 with Exod. 38 : 26), though considerable changes, by death and by coming of age, could not fail to have occurred in three-quarters of a year in a population of over six hundred thousand adult males. If no new enumeration was made but only the making out of a muster roll by tribes

10 Of the children of Joseph : of Ephraim ; Elishama the son of Ammihud : of Manasseh ; Gamaliel the son of Pedahzur.

11 Of Benjamin ; Abidan the son of Gideoni.

12 Of Dan ; Abiezer the son of Ammishaddai.

13 Of Asher ; Pagiel the son of Ocran.

14 Of Gad ; Eliasaph the son of Deuel.

15 Of Naphtali ; Ahira the son of Enan.

16 These were the renowned of the congregation, princes of the tribes of their fathers, heads of thousands in Israel.

17 And Moses and Aaron took these men which are expressed by their names :

18 And they assembled all the congregation together on the first day of the second month, and they declared their pedigrees after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, by their polls.

19 As the Lord commanded Moses, so he numbered them in the wilderness of Sinai.

20 And the children of Reuben, Israel's eldest son, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, by their polls, every male from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war ;

21 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Reuben, were forty and six thousand and five hundred.

22 Of the children of Simeon, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, those that were numbered of them, according to the number of the names, by their polls, every male from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war ;

23 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Simeon, were fifty and nine thousand and three hundred.

24 Of the children of Gad, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war ;

25 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Gad, were forty and five thousand six hundred and fifty.

26 Of the children of Judah, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war ;

27 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Judah, were threescore and fourteen thousand and six hundred.

28 Of the children of Issachar, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war ;

10 Zebulun ; Eliab the son of Helon. Of the children of Joseph : of Ephraim ; Elishama the son of Ammihud : of Manasseh ; Gamaliel the son of Pedahzur.

11 Of Benjamin ; Abidan the son of 12 Gideoni. Of Dan ; Abiezer the son of Ammi-

13 shaddai. Of Asher ; Pagiel the son of Ocran.

14, 15 Of Gad ; Eliasaph the son of Deuel. Of 16 Naphtali ; Ahira the son of Enan. These are they that were called of the congregation, the princes of the tribes of their fathers ; they were 17 the heads of the thousands of Israel. And Moses and Aaron took these men which are expressed

18 by name : and they assembled all the congregation together on the first day of the second month, and they declared their pedigrees after their families, by their fathers' houses, according to the number of the names, from twenty

19 years old and upward, by their polls. As the Lord commanded Moses, so he numbered them in the wilderness of Sinai.

20 And the children of Reuben, Israel's firstborn, their generations, by their families, by their fathers' houses, according to the number of the names, by their polls, every male from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go

21 forth to war ; those that were numbered of them, of the tribe of Reuben, were forty and six thousand and five hundred.

22 Of the children of Simeon, their generations, by their families, by their fathers' houses, those that were numbered thereof, according to the number of the names, by their polls, every male from twenty years old and upward, all that were

23 able to go forth to war ; those that were numbered of them, of the tribe of Simeon, were fifty and nine thousand and three hundred.

24 Of the children of Gad, their generations, by their families, by their fathers' houses, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war ; those that were numbered of them, of the tribe of Gad, were forty and five thousand six 25 hundred and fifty.

26 Of the children of Judah, their generations, by their families, by their fathers' houses, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go

27 forth to war ; those that were numbered of them, of the tribe of Judah, were threescore and fourteen thousand and six hundred.

28 Of the children of Issachar, their generations, by their families, by their fathers' houses, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go and families, it may easily have been a matter of only a day's work, as seems to be implied in ver. 18, as the public part of this day's work would be only the "declaring" or reporting of data already made up in the tribal organizations. The matter is placed in the hands of tribal heads instead of in those of the Levites, under whom the half-shekel assessment was made.

16. The men who were employed by Moses and Aaron to assist in the census are designated as called men of the congregation—i. e. men who were called to congregational assemblies as representatives of their tribes—princes of the tribes of their fathers, heads of the thousands in Israel. They may have been the rulers of thousands suggested by Jethro as associated judges with Moses in settling disputes (see Exod. 18 : 21). It is to be noted that the Deuteronomist represents the appointment of judges as taking place at this time, in connection with the divine command to mobilize the nation, instead of at the previous time apparently indicated in Exodus (see Deut. 1 : 9-14).

One of these men, Nahshon (ver. 7), was a brother-in-law of Aaron (Exod. 6 : 23) and ancestor of David, and one, Elishama (ver. 10), was grandfather of Joshua (1 Chron. 7 : 26, 27).

20-46. The numbering. In connection with the peculiar identity of numerical results, already noted, with those of the half-shekel

29 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Issachar, were fifty and four thousand and four hundred.

30 Of the children of Zebulun, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

31 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Zebulun, were fifty and seven thousand and four hundred.

32 Of the children of Joseph, namely, of the children of Ephraim, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

33 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Ephraim, were forty thousand and five hundred.

34 Of the children of Manasseh, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

35 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Manasseh, were thirty and two thousand and two hundred.

36 Of the children of Benjamin, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

37 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Benjamin, were thirty and five thousand and four hundred.

38 Of the children of Dan, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

39 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Dan, were threescore and two thousand and seven hundred.

40 Of the children of Asher, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

41 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Asher, were forty and one thousand and five hundred.

42 Of the children of Naphtali, throughout their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

43 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Naphtali, were fifty and three thousand and four hundred.

44 These are those that were numbered, which Moses and Aaron numbered, and the princes of Israel, being twelve men: each one was for the house of his fathers.

45 So were all those that were numbered of the children of Israel, by the house of their fathers, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war in Israel;

46 Even all they that were numbered were six hundred thousand and three thousand and five hundred and fifty.

29 forth to war; those that were numbered of them, of the tribe of Issachar, were fifty and four thousand and four hundred.

30 Of the children of Zebulun, their generations, by their families, by their fathers' houses, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go

31 forth to war; those that were numbered of them, of the tribe of Zebulun, were fifty and seven thousand and four hundred.

32 Of the children of Joseph, namely, of the children of Ephraim, their generations, by their families, by their fathers' houses, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to 33 war; those that were numbered of them, of the tribe of Ephraim, were forty thousand and five hundred.

34 Of the children of Manasseh, their generations, by their families, by their fathers' houses, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able

36 Of the children of Benjamin, their generations, by their families, by their fathers' houses, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go

38 Of the children of Dan, their generations, by their families, by their fathers' houses, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go

39 forth to war; those that were numbered of them, of the tribe of Dan, were threescore and two thousand and seven hundred.

40 Of the children of Asher, their generations, by their families, by their fathers' houses, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go

41 forth to war; those that were numbered of them, of the tribe of Asher, were forty and one thousand and five hundred.

42 Of the children of Naphtali, their generations, by their families, by their fathers' houses, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go

43 forth to war; those that were numbered of them, of the tribe of Naphtali, were fifty and three thousand and four hundred.

44 These are they that were numbered, which Moses and Aaron numbered, and the princes of Israel, being twelve men: they were each one for his fathers' house. So all they that were numbered assessment, it is to be observed that minute exactness does not appear to be aimed at. The footing of each of the tribal enumerations is made up according to some system of round numbers which gives even hundreds for each of the tribes except the tribe of Gad (ver. 25), and this tribe sums up even half-hundreds. Attempts to account for this reckoning by round numbers as the result of the classification of the nation for the administration of justice into thousands, hundreds, fifties, and tens (Exod. 18 : 25), or as a military enumeration by fifties, or as a neglecting of supernumerary units by way of allowing for shrinkage in the number of effectives for war through physical disability, are purely conjectural.

47 But the Levites after the tribe of their fathers were not numbered among them.

48 For the Lord had spoken unto Moses, saying,

49 Only thou shalt not number the tribe of Levi, neither take the sum of them among the children of Israel:

50 But thou shalt appoint the Levites over the tabernacle of testimony, and over all the vessels thereof, and over all things that belong to it: they shall bear the tabernacle, and all the vessels thereof; and they shall minister unto it, and shall encamp round about the tabernacle.

51 And when the tabernacle setteth forward, the Levites shall take it down: and when the tabernacle is to be pitched, the Levites shall set it up: and the stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death.

52 And the children of Israel shall pitch their tents, every man by his own camp, and every man by his own standard, throughout their hosts.

53 But the Levites shall pitch round about the tabernacle of testimony, that there be no wrath upon the congregation of the children of Israel: and the Levites shall keep the charge of the tabernacle of testimony.

54 And the children of Israel did according to all that the Lord commanded Moses, so did they.

47 But the Levites after the tribe of their fathers 48 were not numbered among them. For the Lord

49 spake unto Moses, saying, Only the tribe of Levi thou shalt not number, neither shalt thou take the sum of them among the children of Israel:

50 but appoint thou the Levites over the tabernacle of the testimony, and over all the furniture thereof, and over all that belongeth to it: they shall bear the tabernacle, and all the furniture thereof; and they shall minister unto it, and

51 shall encamp round about the tabernacle. And when the tabernacle setteth forward, the Levites shall take it down: and when the tabernacle is to be pitched, the Levites shall set it up: and the stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to

52 death. And the children of Israel shall pitch their tents, every man by his own camp, and every man by his own standard, according to

53 their hosts. But the Levites shall pitch round about the tabernacle of the testimony, that there be no wrath upon the congregation of the children of Israel: and the Levites shall keep the 54 charge of the tabernacle of the testimony. Thus did the children of Israel; according to all that the Lord commanded Moses, so did they.

According to the usual proportion of adult males to the whole population, the total number of the children of Israel in the wilderness was something over two millions.

47-54. The Levites. The Levites here means the whole tribe, including the priests. The setting apart of the tribe of Levi for the care of the tabernacle and the specific duties of each of the three subdivisions of the tribe in connection with its taking down, its setting up, and its transportation, are related in chap. 3 and 4. It is usually the way of P to use the term "Levites" in the sense of these subordinate helpers in the sanctuary alone, exclusive of the priests, and this differentiation of Levites from priests is thought to mark a later arrangement than that of the times of Deuteronomy. Here, however, the whole tribe is obviously meant. The Levites are not mustered among those liable to military duty because they are devoted to the tabernacle, and their place in the camp is in its immediate vicinity. They are not only to have the exclusive right of handling the sacred things (ver. 51) but by their proximity to the sanctuary they also act as a guard to prevent such careless profanations as might bring down the wrath of God on the congregation (ver. 53).

Chap. 2. ORDER OF THE TRIBES IN THE CAMP AND ON THE MARCH. 1. The word

standard, גִּזְרֵי, degel, designates the conspicuous object, probably waving flag, to which each of the four camps was to rally, while the ensign, or sign, אִשׁוֹת 'oth, was the distinguishing mark or badge of the tribe or family. The four standards, while each constituting the rallying sign for the three tribes composing its camp, were probably identical with the standards of the leading or naming tribes in their respective groups. Thus the camp of Judah would rally around the standard of the tribe of Judah; and so also for the camps of Reuben, Ephraim, and Dan. Rabbinic tradition has associated these standards with the four cherubic forms of Ezekiel's vision (Ezek. 1: 10), making the emblem of Judah the lion in accordance with Gen. 49: 9, that of Reuben the head of a man, because he was the firstborn or head, that of Ephraim the bull, as suggested by Deut. 33: 17, and that of Dan the eagle as the greatest enemy of the serpent (cf. Gen. 49: 17). 2. Far off, rather, over against, i. e., fronting the tabernacle, though at a sufficient interval to allow of the camp of the Levites between it and the tent of meeting. In Joshua's line of march the interval between the nearest tribe and the ark was two thousand cubits (see Josh. 3: 4).

3-34. The style of these first chapters is very diffuse. This second chapter repeats all the numbers given in chap. 1, and all the names of the tribal princes, these being first mentioned as the men chosen for each of the tribes to assist in the census. The only thing which this chapter adds to the information given in chap. 1 is the order in the camp and on the march.

Judah, the largest tribe, with the other tribes forming his camp, takes the post of honor on the east or front of the tent of meeting, and the van on the march. The second and third, or south and west camps, headed respectively by Reuben and Ephraim, are the smallest in number; while the rear is guarded on the march by the strong camp of Dan. In the order of the march the tabernacle with the priests and the attendant tribe of non-combatant Levites comes between the second and third camps. In the first camp Judah associates with himself

25 The standard of the camp of Dan shall be on the north side by their armies: and the captain of the children of Dan shall be Ahiezer the son of Ammishaddai.

26 And his host, and those that were numbered of them, were threescore and two thousand and seven hundred.

27 And those that encamp by him shall be the tribe of Asher: and the captain of the children of Asher shall be Pagiel the son of Ocran.

28 And his host, and those that were numbered of them, were forty and one thousand and five hundred.

29 Then the tribe of Naphtali: and the captain of the children of Naphtali shall be Ahira the son of Enan.

30 And his host, and those that were numbered of them, were fifty and three thousand and four hundred.

31 All they that were numbered in the camp of Dan were an hundred thousand and fifty and seven thousand and six hundred. They shall go hindmost with their standards.

32 These are those which were numbered of the children of Israel by the house of their fathers: all those that were numbered of the camps throughout their hosts were six hundred thousand and three thousand and five hundred and fifty.

33 But the Levites were not numbered among the children of Israel; as the Lord commanded Moses.

34 And the children of Israel did according to all that the Lord commanded Moses: so they pitched by their standards, and so they set forward, every one after their families, according to the house of their fathers.

25 On the north side shall be the standard of the camp of Dan according to their hosts: and the prince of the children of Dan shall be Ahiezer

26 the son of Ammishaddai. And his host, and those that were numbered of them, were threescore and two thousand and seven hundred.

27 And those that pitch next unto him shall be the tribe of Asher: and the prince of the children

34 These are they that were numbered of the children of Israel by their fathers' houses: all

35 that were numbered of the camps according to their hosts were six hundred thousand and three

37 of Israel; as the Lord commanded Moses. Thus did the children of Israel; according to all that

CHAPTER III.

1 THESE also are the generations of Aaron and Moses in the day that the Lord spake with Moses in mount Sinai.

2 And these are the names of the sons of Aaron; Nadab the firstborn, and Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar.

3 These are the names of the sons of Aaron, the priests which were anointed, whom he consecrated to minister in the priest's office.

1 NOW these are the generations of Aaron and Moses in the day that the Lord spake with Moses

2 in mount Sinai. And these are the names of the sons of Aaron; Nadab the firstborn, and Abihu,

3 Eleazar, and Ithamar. These are the names of the sons of Aaron, the priests which were

4 anointed, whom he consecrated to minister in two other tribes which were descendants of Leah; in the second Reuben the firstborn has with him the second son of Leah and Gad son of Zilpah, which tribe with Reuben chose its inheritance on the east of the Jordan. In the third camp the children of Rachel are all associated together; while the fourth comprises the remaining three sons of the handmaids, headed by the eldest, Dan.

The order in which the Levites encamped and marched is described in the next chapter.

The form of the camp, while ideally square, a favorite shape in Israelitish prophecy, expressive of ideal completeness (see Ezek. 48 : 20; Rev. 21 : 16), was necessarily often varied to adapt itself to the configuration of the wadies or plains where the tents were pitched.

Chap. 3. THE LEVITES TAKEN FOR THE SERVICE OF THE SANCTUARY IN LIEU OF THE FIRSTBORN. 1-4. The word generations, תּוֹלְדוֹת, tol'dhoth, is used throughout the book of Genesis as a heading of the historical sections, and is taken by critics as a mark of the priestly document. It does not always signify genealogy, but is often used in the sense of history, or account, as in Gen. 2 : 4. In the Hebrew mind the whole conception of development formed or constituted itself from the idea of begetting; so that genealogy and history scarcely needed different words to designate them. The title seems to be used in this first verse as if the writer had started out with the intention of giving a fuller account of the families of Moses and Aaron at the epoch of Jehovah's revelation to Moses in Sinai. The title is superseded in the second verse by another restricting the genealogical list to the sons of Aaron, and leaving Moses with the bare mention of his name. The names given here are the names of the priests, and they are introduced in order to distinguish them as a more sacred class from the Levites with whom the remainder of the chapter is concerned. Their superior sanctity is expressed by the form, whom he consecrated, lit., whose hand he filled, to act the

4 And Nadab and Abihu died before the Lord, when they offered strange fire before the Lord, in the wilderness of Sinai, and they had no children: and Eleazar and Ithamar ministered in the priest's office in the sight of Aaron their father.

5 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

6 Bring the tribe of Levi near, and present them before Aaron the priest, that they may minister unto him.

7 And they shall keep his charge, and the charge of the whole congregation before the tabernacle of the congregation, to do the service of the tabernacle.

8 And they shall keep all the instruments of the tabernacle of the congregation, and the charge of the children of Israel, to do the service of the tabernacle.

9 And thou shalt give the Levites unto Aaron and to his sons: they are wholly given unto him out of the children of Israel.

10 And thou shalt appoint Aaron and his sons, and they shall wait on their priest's office: and the stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death.

11 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

12 And I, behold, I have taken the Levites from among the children of Israel instead of all the firstborn that openeth the matrix among the children of Israel: therefore the Levites shall be mine;

13 Because all the firstborn are mine; for on the day that I smote all the firstborn in the land of Egypt I hallowed unto me all the firstborn in Israel, both man and beast: mine shall they be: I am the Lord.

4 the priest's office. And Nadab and Abihu died before the Lord, when they offered strange fire before the Lord, in the wilderness of Sinai, and they had no children: and Eleazar and Ithamar ministered in the priest's office in the presence of Aaron their father.

5 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

6 Bring the tribe of Levi near, and set them before Aaron the priest, that they may minister

7 unto him. And they shall keep his charge, and the charge of the whole congregation before the tent of the meeting, to do the service of the

8 tabernacle. And they shall keep all the furniture of the tent of meeting, and the charge of the children of Israel, to do the service of the

9 tabernacle. And thou shalt give the Levites unto Aaron and to his sons: they are wholly given unto him on the behalf of the children of 10 Israel. And thou shalt appoint Aaron and his sons, and they shall keep their priesthood: and the stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death.

11 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

12 And I, behold, I have taken the Levites from among the children of Israel instead of all the firstborn that openeth the womb among the children of Israel; and the Levites shall be mine:

13 for all the firstborn are mine; on the day that I smote all the firstborn in the land of Egypt I hallowed unto me all the firstborn in Israel, both man and beast: mine they shall be; I am the Lord.

priest. The story of their consecration or "filling the hand" is given in Lev. 8. The children of Moses were reckoned among the common Levites (1 Chron. 23 : 14). One branch of his descendants appears to have held a rival priesthood, with a ritual embodying image-worship, in the northern city of Dan from the occupation of that city by the Danites until the captivity (Judg. 18 : 30).

5-10. The Levites were to be brought near and caused to stand (ver. 6) before Aaron as his servants. The expression to stand before is often used of the position and attitude of a servant (see e. g., 1 Kings 18 : 15). According to 8 : 13 they were offered to the Lord as a wave offering, i. e., a gift that was solemnly given to Jehovah to be received back again for the uses of the sanctuary. On the wave offering see on Lev. 7 : 28-34. The Levites appear to have been regarded as fulfilling the people's responsibility for the adequate and orderly guardianship and administration of the service—they kept the charge of the whole congregation before the tabernacle, tent of meeting. Hence they were counted as substitutes for the firstborn whom Jehovah claimed as his own; and their office, as being virtually that of the people, was a sort of lay priesthood. The priests, as appointed to a service to which no "stranger" or layman was to come nigh, are therefore strongly contrasted with the Levites (see ver. 10). These latter are "given given," i. e., wholly given (ver. 9) to Aaron on behalf of the children of Israel. These devoted, מִנְחִימ, n'thumim, Israelites are to be distinguished from the מִנְחִימ, n'thumim (Ezra 7 : 24; 8 : 20; Neh. 11 : 21) who were of non-Israelitish descent and who were in their turn given to the Levites to do the most menial service (Josh. 9 : 27).

In Deuteronomy this sharp distinction between the priests and the Levites seems to be unknown. The functions of the Levites appear to be more distinctly priestly; they stand before the Lord to minister unto him and to bless in his name (Deut. 10 : 8), and indeed seem to be spoken of simply as the priestly tribe. In that book Aaron is not called a priest, and the priests are everywhere the sons of Levi, instead of more specifically the sons of Aaron. This difference of standpoint with regard to the priest's office seems to reflect different degrees of ecclesiastical development in the nation, and the more exact differentiation characteristic of the priest-legislation is thought to be later than that reflected in Deuteronomy.

11-13. These verses set forth the theory of the separation of the sons of Levi to the service of the sanctuary and their absolute ownership by Jehovah. These people are taken in lieu of the firstborn whom Jehovah consecrated to himself when he smote the firstborn of the Egyptians (see Exod. 13 : 1, 2; 12 : 13). This redemption of the firstborn by the substitution of the Levites seems to be foreshadowed and provided for in the expression (Exod. 13 : 13) "all the firstborn of man among thy sons shalt thou redeem."

14 And the Lord spake unto Moses in the wilderness of Sinai, saying, 15 Number the children of Levi after the house of their fathers, by their families: every male from a month old and upward shalt thou number them.

16 And Moses numbered them according to the word of the Lord, as he was commanded.

17 And these were the sons of Levi by their names: Gershon, and Kohath, and Merari.

18 And these are the names of the sons of Gershon by their families: Libni, and Shimei.

19 And the sons of Kohath by their families; Amram, and Izhar, Hebron, and Uzziel.

20 And the sons of Merari by their families; Mahli, and Mushi. These are the families of the Levites according to the house of their fathers.

21 Of Gershon was the family of the Libnites, and the family of the Shimeites: these are the families of the Gershonites.

22 Those that were numbered of them according to the number of all the males, from a month old and upward, even those that were numbered of them were seven thousand and five hundred.

23 The families of the Gershonites shall pitch behind the tabernacle westward.

24 And the chief of the house of the father of the Gershonites shall be Eliasaph the son of Lael.

25 And the charge of the sons of Gershon in the tabernacle of the congregation shall be the tabernacle, and the tent, the covering thereof, and the hanging for the door of the tabernacle of the congregation,

26 And the hangings of the court, and the curtain for the door of the court, which is by the tabernacle, and by the altar round about, and the cords of it for all the service thereof.

27 And of Kohath was the family of the Amramites, and the family of the Izeharites, and the family of the Hebronites, and the family of the Uzzielites: these are the families of the Kohathites.

28 In the number of all the males, from a month old and upward, were eight thousand and six hundred, keeping the charge of the sanctuary.

29 The families of the sons of Kohath shall pitch on the side of the tabernacle southward.

30 And the chief of the house of the father of the families of the Kohathites shall be Elizaphan the son of Uzziel.

14 And the Lord spake unto Moses in the wilderness of Sinai, saying, Number the children of 15 Levi by their fathers' houses, by their families: every male from a month old and upward shalt

16 thou number them. And Moses numbered them according to the word of the Lord, as he was 17 commanded. And these were the sons of Levi by their names; Gershon, and Kohath, and Merari.

18 And these are the names of the sons of Gershon by their families; Libni and Shimei.

19 And the sons of Kohath by their families; Amram, and Izhar, Hebron, and Uzziel. And the 20 sons of Merari by their families; Mahli and Mushi. These are the families of the Levites according to their fathers' houses.

21 Of Gershon was the family of the Libnites, and the family of the Shimeites: these are the

22 families of the Gershonites. Those that were numbered of them, according to the number of

23 all the males, from a month old and upward, even those that were numbered of them were

24 seven thousand and five hundred. The families of the Gershonites shall pitch behind the taber-

25 nacle westward. And the prince of the fathers' house of the Gershonites shall be Eliasaph the 26 son of Lael. And the charge of the sons of Gershon in the tent of meeting shall be the taber-

27 nacle, and the Tent, the covering thereof, and the screen for the door of the tent of meeting,

28 and the hangings of the court, and the screen for the door of the court, which is by the taber-

29 nacle, and by the altar round about, and the cords of it for all the service thereof.

27 And of Kohath was the family of the Amramites, and the family of the Izharites, and the

28 family of the Hebronites, and the family of the Uzzielites: these are the families of the Kohath-

29 ites. According to the number of all the males, from a month old and upward, there were eight

30 thousand and six hundred, keeping the charge of the sanctuary. The families of the sons of 31 Kohath shall pitch on the side of the tabernacle southward. And the prince of the father's

32 house of the families of the Kohathites shall be

14-20. In the wilderness of Sinai.

The pains taken to specify the place of the revelation (cf. Lev. 25 : 1) seems to indicate the introduction of a more broadly separated topic in the author's mind. The Levites are numbered from a month old and upward, as that was the age at which the firstborn were to be presented for redemption (see 18 : 16). Of these Levites there are three branches: Gershon, Kohath, and Merari, the first and third being subdivided into two families each, and the second into four (comp. Exod. 6 : 16-19).

21-39. The Gershonites were to pitch their tents in the immediate vicinity of the tabernacle and on the west side. Their charge in general was the whole of the cloth work and tapestry of the sanctuary or tent of meeting and of the court which surrounded it, with the exception of the veil shutting off the most holy place. This they were not only to pack up and transport when the tabernacle moved, and to place in position when the tabernacle was set up, but to care for and regulate so far as it was employed in religious service. The cords of it (ver. 26), probably means the cords of the sanctuary rather than of the court, which latter appear to have been in charge of the sons of Merari (ver. 37).

The Kohathites were the most numerous of the families of Levi and the branch from which, through Amram, came Moses and the priests. They were to pitch on the south side of the tabernacle, and their service was the most honorable and also hazardous, on account of the self-avenging sanctity of the sacred objects which they were to handle. They had to do with the ark and the table and the altars and all the most sacred vessels, and the great veil which separated the holy place from the most holy—objects which were too sacred to be transported in any way except on men's shoulders, or to be seen by any but the priests. These men, as well as the other two Levitical families with their princes, were to be under the command and oversight of Eleazar the son of Aaron.

The Merarites were upon the north and had in general the charge of the heavy and solid 31 And their charge shall be the ark, and the table, and the candlestick, and the altars, and the vessels of the sanctuary wherewith they minister, and the hanging, and all the service thereof.

32 And Eleazar the son of Aaron the priest shall be chief over the chief of the Levites, and have the oversight of them that keep the charge of the sanctuary.

33 Of Merari was the family of the Mahlites, and the family of the Mushites: these are the families of Merari.

34 And those that were numbered of them, according to the number of all the males, from a month old and upward, were six thousand and two hundred.

35 And the chief of the house of the father of the families of Merari was Zuriel the son of Abihail: these shall pitch on the side of the tabernacle northward.

36 And under the custody and charge of the sons of Merari shall be the boards of the tabernacle, and the bars thereof, and the pillars thereof, and the sockets thereof, and all the vessels thereof, and all that serveth thereto, 37 And the pillars of the court round about, and their sockets, and their pins, and their cords.

38 But those that encamp before the tabernacle toward the east, even before the tabernacle of the congregation eastward, shall be Moses, and Aaron and his sons, keeping the charge of the sanctuary for the charge of the children of Israel; and the stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death.

39 All that were numbered of the Levites, which Moses and Aaron numbered at the commandment of the Lord, throughout their families, all the males from a month old and upward, were twenty and two thousand.

40 And the Lord said unto Moses, Number all the firstborn of the males of the children of Israel from a month old and upward, and take the number of their names.

31 Elizaphan the son of Uzziel. And their charge shall be the ark, and the table, and the candlestick, and the altars, and the vessels of the sanctuary wherewith they minister, and the screen, and all the service thereof. And Eleazar the son of Aaron the priest shall be prince of the princes of the Levites, and have the oversight of them that keep the charge of the sanctuary.

33 Of Merari was the family of the Mahlites, and the family of the Mushites: these are the families of Merari. And those that were numbered of them, according to the number of all the males, from a month old and upward, were six

34 thousand and two hundred. And the prince of the fathers' house of the families of Merari was Zuriel the son of Abihail: they shall pitch on

35 the side of the tabernacle northward. And the appointed charge of the sons of Merari shall be the boards of the tabernacle, and the bars thereof, and the pillars thereof, and the sockets thereof, and all the instruments thereof, and all the service thereof; and the pillars of the court round about, and their sockets, and their pins, and their

36 cords. And those that pitch before the tabernacle eastward, before the tent of meeting toward the sunrise, shall be Moses, and Aaron and his

37 sons, keeping the charge of the sanctuary for the charge of the children of Israel; and the stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death.

38 All that were numbered of the Levites, which Moses and Aaron numbered at the commandment of the Lord, by their families, all the males from a month old and upward, were twenty and 39 two thousand.

40 And the Lord said unto Moses, Number all the firstborn males of the children of Israel from a month old and upward, and take the number work of the tabernacle and the court—the boards and bars and pillars and sockets. On the east or front side of the tabernacle were located Moses and Aaron and the priests, and their part of the camp was rigidly secluded from lay intrusion.

The total number of the Levites is given (ver. 39) as twenty-two thousand, while the sum of the numbers of the three families, seven thousand five hundred, eight thousand six hundred, and six thousand two hundred, is twenty-two thousand three hundred. This erroneous footing is adopted without comment as the basis of the redemption of the overplus of the firstborn (ver. 46), an overplus which would not exist if the numbers were used as in the text and correctly added. We can account for this arithmetical error only conjecturally. It is possible that an error in copying has crept into the text. The addition of a single letter in the word indicating the hundreds in the family of Kohath (ver. 28) would make it read eight thousand and three hundred, which would correct the error. It is to be noted that the tribe of Levi is very small in comparison with the other tribes, being ten thousand less than Manasseh the smallest of them, even though reckoned from a month old upward, while the other tribes are reckoned from twenty years up. Dillmann seems to have the suspicion, not that the tribe of Levi is reckoned too small, but that the numbers of the other tribes have been placed too high for the time of Moses. It is thought that many of alien or mixed birth who were adopted into the other tribes may have served to swell their numbers, while only those of pure descent would be counted qualified to serve the sanctuary in the tribe of Levi.

40-43. As the Levites are to be taken instead of the firstborn of the children of Israel it becomes necessary to take a census of the firstborn in order to verify the fairness of the exchange. The number, twenty-two thousand two hundred and seventy-three, bears a very small proportion to the six hundred and three thousand five hundred and fifty (1:46) males of twenty years old and upward. It is therefore believed that by the firstborn of the males of the children of Israel, here taken are meant simply those firstborn males who had come into the world since the command "Sanctify unto me all the firstborn, whatsoever openeth the womb" (Exod. 13:2) had been given, thirteen months before. This is the most natural interpretation of a command which apparently for the first time takes account of the first-

41 And thou shalt take the Levites for me (I am the Lord) instead of all the firstborn among the children of Israel; and the cattle of the Levites instead of all the firstlings among the cattle of the children of Israel.

42 And Moses numbered, as the Lord commanded him, all the firstborn among the children of Israel.

43 And all the firstborn males by the number of names, from a month old and upward, of those that were numbered of them, were twenty and two thousand two hundred and threescore and thirteen.

44 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

45 Take the Levites instead of all the firstborn among the children of Israel, and the cattle of the Levites instead of their cattle; and the Levites shall be mine: I am the Lord.

46 And for those that are to be redeemed of the two hundred and threescore and thirteen of the firstborn of the children of Israel, which are more than the Levites;

47 Thou shalt even take five shekels apiece by the poll, after the shekel of the sanctuary shalt thou take them: (the shekel is twenty gerahs:)

48 And thou shalt give the money, wherewith the odd number of them is to be redeemed, unto Aaron and to his sons.

49 And Moses took the redemption money of them that were over and above them that were redeemed by the Levites:

50 Of the firstborn of the children of Israel took he the money; a thousand three hundred and threescore and five shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary:

51 And Moses gave the money of them that were redeemed unto Aaron and to his sons, according to the word of the Lord, as the Lord commanded Moses.

41 of their names. And thou shalt take the Levites for me (I am the Lord) instead of all the firstborn among the children of Israel; and the cattle of the Levites instead of all the firstlings 42 among the cattle of the children of Israel. And Moses numbered, as the Lord commanded him, all the firstborn among the children of Israel.

43 And all the firstborn males according to the number of names, from a month old and upward, of those that were numbered of them, were twenty and two thousand two hundred and threescore and thirteen.

44 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

45 Take the Levites instead of all the firstborn among the children of Israel, and the cattle of the Levites instead of their cattle; and the Levites shall be mine; I am the Lord. And for the redemption of the two hundred and threescore and thirteen of the firstborn of the children of Israel, which are over and above the

47 number of the Levites, thou shalt take five shekels apiece by the poll; after the shekel of the sanctuary shalt thou take them (the shekel is 48 twenty gerahs): and thou shalt give the money wherewith the odd number of them is redeemed

49 unto Aaron and to his sons. And Moses took the redemption-money from them that were over and above them that were redeemed by the

50 Levites: from the firstborn of the children of Israel took he the money; a thousand three hundred and threescore and five shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary: and Moses gave the redemption-money unto Aaron and to his

51 sons, according to the word of the Lord, as the Lord commanded Moses.

CHAPTER IV.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying,

2 Take the sum of the sons of Kohath from among the sons of Levi, after their families, by the house of their fathers,

3 From thirty years old and upward even until fifty years old, all that enter into the host, to do the work in the tabernacle of the congregation.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses and unto

2 Aaron, saying, Take the sum of the sons of Kohath from among the sons of Levi, by their families, by their fathers' houses, from thirty

3 years old and upward even until fifty years old, all that enter upon the service, to do born in reference to their uses for a sanctuary yet to be built. With this understanding, restricting the account to the firstborn males less than thirteen months old, the proportion to the total population is large as compared with the proportion prevailing among the less prolific races of modern times. It is very natural to suppose, however, that, after the cruel restrictions and hardships of the bondage, the reaction and the immediate consummation of deferred marriages during the year of wilderness-freedom and hope would bring the number of births up to an exceptional proportion. It is certainly true that among all peoples the average of births varies considerably according to the hardness or prosperity of the times. Added to this is the consideration that the proportion of male to female children is large among the Jews.

41-51. The cattle of the Levites (ver. 41) are taken in the lump for this time in order to obviate the well-nigh impracticable search for firstlings among the numerous herds of the children of Israel; while all firstlings born in the future are to be presented by their owners to Jehovah (Exod. 13 : 12 ; Num. 18 : 17).

Five shekels came to be the established sum required for the redemption of the firstborn (see 18 : 16). This was also the sum required for the commutation of a vow in the case of a male child from a month to five years old (see Lev. 27 : 6). This money was paid to the priests, as the firstborn were reckoned theirs (18 : 15); and the Levites, also wholly given to them (3 : 9), did not satisfy all the claims of Aaron's family upon the children of Israel.

Chap. 4. DUTIES OF THE LEVITES IN DETAIL AND NUMBER OF THOSE QUALIFIED FOR SERVICE. 1-20. The Levites are thought of as a kind of sacred militia and therefore their service is often designated by the word warfare, or military service (ver. 3, 35, 39, 43). The service of the Levites for the sanctuary expressly corresponds to the service of the other tribes for war. It is with special reference to the mobilization of the tabernacle and its furniture

4 This shall be the service of the sons of Kohath in the tabernacle of the congregation, about the most holy things :

5 And when the camp setteth forward, Aaron shall come, and his sons, and they shall take down the covering veil, and cover the ark of testimony with it :

6 And shall put thereon the covering of badgers' skins, and shall spread over it a cloth wholly of blue, and shall put in the staves thereof.

7 And upon the table of shewbread they shall spread a cloth of blue, and put thereon the dishes, and the spoons, and the bowls, and covers to cover withal : and the continual bread shall be thereon :

8 And they shall spread upon them a cloth of scarlet, and cover the same with a covering of badgers' skins, and shall put in the staves thereof.

9 And they shall take a cloth of blue, and cover the candlestick of the light, and his lamps, and his tongs, and his snuffdishes, and all the oil vessels thereof, wherewith they minister unto it :

10 And they shall put it and all the vessels thereof within a covering of badgers' skins, and shall put it upon a bar.

11 And upon the golden altar they shall spread a cloth of blue, and cover it with a covering of badgers' skins, and shall put to the staves thereof :

12 And they shall take all the instruments of ministry, wherewith they minister in the sanctuary, and put them in a cloth of blue, and cover them with a covering of badgers' skins, and shall put them on a bar :

13 And they shall take away the ashes from the altar, and spread a purple cloth thereon :

14 And they shall put upon it all the vessels thereof, wherewith they minister about it, even the censers, the fleshhooks, and the shovels, and the basons, all the vessels of the altar ; and they shall spread upon it a covering of badgers' skins, and put to the staves of it.

15 And when Aaron and his sons have made an end of covering the sanctuary, and all the vessels of the sanctuary, as the camp is to set forward ; after that, the sons of Kohath shall come to bear it : but they shall not touch any holy thing, lest they die. These things are the burden of the sons of Kohath in the tabernacle of the congregation.

4 the work in the tent of meeting. This is the service of the sons of Kohath in the tent of meeting, about the most holy things : when the camp setteth forward, Aaron shall go in, and his sons, and they shall take down the veil of the screen, and cover the ark of the testimony with it : and shall put thereon a covering of sealskin, and shall spread over it a cloth all of blue, and shall put in the staves thereof. And upon the table of shewbread they shall spread a cloth of blue, and put thereon the dishes, and the spoons, and the bowls and the cups to pour out withal : and the continual bread shall be thereon : and they shall spread upon them a cloth of scarlet, and cover the same with a covering of sealskin, and shall put in the staves thereof. And they shall take a cloth of blue, and cover the candlestick of the light, and its lamps, and its tongs, and its snuffdishes, and all the oil vessels thereof, wherewith they minister unto it : and they shall put it and all the vessels thereof within a covering of sealskin, and shall put it upon the 11 frame. And upon the golden altar they shall spread a cloth of blue, and cover it with a covering of sealskin, and shall put in the staves 12 thereof : and they shall take all the vessels of ministry, wherewith they minister in the sanctuary, and put them in a cloth of blue, and cover them with a covering of sealskin, and shall put them on the frame. And they shall take away the ashes from the altar, and spread 14 a purple cloth thereon : and they shall put upon it all the vessels thereof, wherewith they minister about it, the firepans, the fleshhooks, and the shovels, and the basons, all the vessels of the altar ; and they shall spread upon it a covering 15 of sealskin, and put in the staves thereof. And when Aaron and his sons have made an end of covering the sanctuary, and all the furniture of the sanctuary, as the camp is to set forward ; after that, the sons of Kohath shall come to bear it : but they shall not touch the sanctuary, lest they die. These things are the burden of that their duties are described, because it was when the holy things were being handled and transported that these were in special danger of profanation. The service of the Kohathites was the holiest, lit., "holy of holies" (ver. 4) ; they were to carry the ark and the table of shewbread and the candlestick and the golden and brazen altars. These were first to be carefully covered and packed for transportation by the priests before the Levites came near to touch or even to see them. We may well suppose that the holiest things were the first to be packed before the removal of the curtains of the tent, which were in the charge of the Gershonites, and while the priests could work unseen in the sanctuary. The taking down of the great veil of partition (ver. 5) would open the most holy place, but its one ineffably sacred object of furniture, the ark, was immediately covered with that veil, so that no eye except that of the authorized priest ever beheld it. One of the wrappings of the ark, as also of each of the sacred articles in charge of the Kohathites, was a covering of sealskin ; then for an outer covering the ark was to have a cloth wholly of dark blue or purple (ver. 6), and its poles which, though always kept in position (Exod. 25 : 14, 15), would need to be disarranged in the process of packing, were to be adjusted.

The table of shew-bread was to be spread with a cloth of blue on which were to be placed its utensils and the bread which was continually to be kept in position (ver. 7), and its distinctive covering was a cloth of "worm crimson" (ver. 8). The candlestick, which was without carrying poles, and also the small utensils pertaining to the care of it and to the service of the altar of incense were, carried on a frame or cradle (ver. 10, 12). The great altar of burnt offering was to be cleansed of its greasy ashes (ver. 13) and covered, along with its dishes and forks and shovels, with a cloth of purple. After ver. 14 the Septuagint and the Samaritan text insert directions for covering the brazen laver and putting it on a frame, but this is probably an unauthorized interpolation.

It was not until the priests had completed the wrapping of the holy things that the sons of 16 And to the office of Eleazar the son of Aaron the priest pertaineth the oil for the light, and the sweet incense, and the daily meat offering, and the anointing oil, and the oversight of all the tabernacle, and of all that therein is, in the sanctuary, and in the vessels thereof.

17 And the Lord spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying,

18 Cut ye not off the tribe of the families of the Kohathites from among the Levites:

19 But thus do unto them, that they may live, and not die, when they approach unto the most holy things: Aaron and his sons shall go in, and appoint them every one to his service and to his burden:

20 But they shall not go in to see when the holy things are covered, lest they die.

21 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

22 Take also the sum of the sons of Gershon, throughout the houses of their fathers, by their families;

23 From thirty years old and upward until fifty years old shalt thou number them; all that enter in to perform the service, to do the work in the tabernacle of the congregation.

24 This is the service of the families of the Gershonites, to serve, and for burdens:

25 And they shall bear the curtains of the tabernacle, and the tabernacle of the congregation, his covering, and the covering of the badgers' skins that is above upon it, and the hanging for the door of the tabernacle of the congregation,

26 And the hangings of the court, and the hanging for the door of the gate of the court, which is by the tabernacle and by the altar round about, and their cords, and all the instruments of their service, and all that is made for them; so shall they serve.

27 At the appointment of Aaron and his sons shall be all the service of the sons of the Gershonites, in all their burdens, and in all their service: and ye shall appoint unto them in charge all their burdens.

16 the sons of Kohath in the tent of meeting. And the charge of Eleazar the son of Aaron the priest shall be the oil for the light, and the sweet incense, and the continual meal offering, and the anointing oil, the charge of all the tabernacle, and of all that therein is, the sanctuary, and the furniture thereof.

17 And the Lord spake unto Moses and unto

18 Aaron, saying, Cut ye not off the tribe of the families of the Kohathites from among the

19 Levites: but thus do unto them, that they may live, and not die, when they approach unto the most holy things: Aaron and his sons shall go in, and appoint them every one to his service

20 and to his burden: but they shall not go in to see the sanctuary even for a moment, lest they die.

21 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Take

22 the sum of the sons of Gershon also, by their fathers' houses, by their families; from thirty

23 years old and upward until fifty years old shalt thou number them; all that enter in to wait

24 upon the service, to do the work in the tent of meeting. This is the service of the families of

25 the Gershonites, in serving and in bearing burdens: they shall bear the curtains of the tabernacle, and the tent of meeting, its covering, and the covering of sealskin that is above

26 upon it, and the screen for the door of the tent of meeting; and the hangings of the court, and

27 the screen for the door of the gate of the court, which is by the tabernacle and by the altar round about, and their cords, and all the instruments of their service, and whatsoever shall be done with them, therein shall they serve.

27 At the commandment of Aaron and his sons shall be all the service of the sons of the Gershonites, in all their burden, and in all their service: and ye shall appoint unto them in Kohath were to draw near to perform their service as bearers, lest the profane touch of their lay hands should cause their death. According to the probably older legislation of Deuteronomy, which does not so clearly distinguish the priests from the Levites (see on 3 : 5-10), the chief of the privileges of the whole priestly tribe of Levi is that of bearing the ark (see Deut. 31 : 9, 25), and this corresponds to the evidence of the older historical books, according to which the priests bear the ark (see Josh. 3 : 3; 6 : 6, 12; 8 : 33; 1 Kings 2 : 26; 8 : 3, 6). It appears that, in addition to the total charge of the Levitical service (3 : 32) and the more specific oversight of the Kohathites, Eleazar was to have for his special and personal duty the care of the holy oils and incense and of the constant minchah (see ver. 16).

A peculiar command is given to Aaron and his sons in ver. 18, seq. They are directed not to cut off the families of the Kohathites from among the Levites by neglecting to apprise them or keep them vividly sensible of the momentously solemn nature of their duties. Closely allied to the sense of sacredness is the sense of order, and a service so extra hazardous as that of the Kohathites would be guarded from the danger of falling into a perilous heedlessness by being carefully organized (ver. 19), so that every man had his well-understood share of the task. A very wholesome fear of making holy things common was fostered by warning these lay servants that if they went in to see the "holy" even "according to a swallowing," i. e., for an instant (ver. 20; cf. Job 7 : 19) they should die. The incident related in 1 Sam. 6 : 19 is a historical instance of the stern retribution visited upon such profane staring, and the fate of Uzzah (2 Sam. 6 : 6, 7) was a warning of what might be feared if an unauthorized person, even with the best intention, touched the dreadful symbol of Jehovah's seat.

21-33. The service of the Gershonites, which is introduced, as was that of the Kohathites, by a command to number their effectives for the sanctuary—every one that goeth forth to war warfare, to serve service (ver. 30)—is described substantially as in 3 : 25, 26 and in the same order, only in a little greater detail. 24. Their service, when the tabernacle was in use and their assignment for carrying when it was removed (to serve, and for burdens), was the whole cloth work of the sanctuary and the tent

28 This is the service of the families of the sons of Gershon in the tabernacle of the congregation: and their charge shall be under the hand of Ithamar the son of Aaron the priest.

29 As for the sons of Merari, thou shalt number them after their families, by the house of their fathers;

30 From thirty years old and upward even unto fifty years old shalt thou number them, every one that entereth into the service, to do the work of the tabernacle of the congregation.

31 And this is the charge of their burden, according to all their service in the tabernacle of the congregation; the boards of the tabernacle, and the bars thereof, and the pillars thereof, and sockets thereof,

32 And the pillars of the court round about, and their sockets, and their pins, and their cords, with all their instruments, and with all their service: and by name ye shall reckon the instruments of the charge of their burden.

33 This is the service of the families of the sons of Merari, according to all their service, in the tabernacle of the congregation, under the hand of Ithamar the son of Aaron the priest.

34 And Moses and Aaron and the chief of the congregation numbered the sons of the Kohathites after their families, and after the house of their fathers,

35 From thirty years old and upward even unto fifty years old, every one that entereth into the service, for the work in the tabernacle of the congregation:

36 And those that were numbered of them by their families were two thousand seven hundred and fifty.

37 These were they that were numbered of the families of the Kohathites, all that might do service in the tabernacle of the congregation, which Moses and Aaron did number according to the commandment of the Lord by the hand of Moses.

38 And those that were numbered of the sons of Gershon, throughout their families, and by the house of their fathers,

39 From thirty years old and upward even unto fifty years old, every one that entereth into the service, for the work in the tabernacle of the congregation,

40 Even those that were numbered of them, throughout their families, by the house of their fathers, were two thousand and six hundred and thirty.

41 These are they that were numbered of the families of the sons of Gershon, of all that might do service in the tabernacle of the congregation, whom Moses and Aaron did number according to the commandment of the Lord.

42 And those that were numbered of the families of the sons of Merari, throughout their families, by the house of their fathers, 28 charge all their burden. This is the service of the families of the sons of the Gershonites in the tent of meeting: and their charge shall be under the hand of Ithamar the son of Aaron the priest.

29 As for the sons of Merari, thou shalt number them by their families, by their fathers' houses;

30 from thirty years old and upward even unto fifty years old shalt thou number them, every one that entereth upon the service, to do the

31 work of the tent of meeting. And this is the charge of their burden, according to all their service in the tent of meeting; the boards of the tabernacle, and the bars thereof, and the pillars

32 thereof, and the sockets thereof; and the pillars of the court round about, and their sockets, and their pins, and their cords, with all their instruments, and with all their service: and by name

33 ye shall appoint the instruments of the charge of their burden. This is the service of the families of the sons of Merari, according to all their service, in the tent of meeting, under the hand of Ithamar the son of Aaron the priest.

34 And Moses and Aaron and the princes of the congregation numbered the sons of the Kohathites by their families, and by their fathers'

35 houses, from thirty years old and upward even unto fifty years old, every one that entered upon the service, for work in the tent of meeting:

36 and those that were numbered of them by their families were two thousand seven hundred and 37 fifty. These are they that were numbered of the families of the Kohathites, all that did serve in the tent of meeting, whom Moses and Aaron numbered according to the commandment of the Lord by the hand of Moses.

38 And those that were numbered of the sons of Gershon, by their families, and by their fathers'

39 houses, from thirty years old and upward even unto fifty years old, every one that entered upon the service, for work in the tent of meeting,

40 even those that were numbered of them, by their families, by their fathers' houses, were two 41 thousand and six hundred and thirty. These are they that were numbered of the families of the sons of Gershon, all that did serve in the tent of meeting, whom Moses and Aaron numbered according to the commandment of the Lord.

42 And those that were numbered of the families of the sons of Merari, by their families, by their

of meeting and the court, with their coverings and their door screens, with all the cords and tools necessary for setting them up and keeping them in order. They were subject to the orders of the priests, their special superintendent being Ithamar, the second surviving son of Aaron.

The Merarites, as in chap. 3 and in identical language, are assigned to the charge and service of the heavy and solid structural parts of the tabernacle and court—the boards and bars and pillars, with their bases. All the tools of their work were to be assigned in charge by name and Ithamar was to be their superintendent. It will be noted that for the heavy transportation that fell to the lot of the Gershonites and Mera-rites wagons were provided, the offerings of the princes of the tribes being turned over to that service (see 7 : 1-8).

34-49. The number of the Levites who were between thirty and fifty years of age bears a fair average proportion to that of those from a month old and upward (3 : 39), but the family of Merari, which presented the smallest total from a month old—six thousand two hundred as compared with the seven thousand five hundred and eight thousand six hundred of Gershon and Kohath respectively—has altogether the largest number of effectives from thirty to fifty years, having three thousand two hundred as against two thousand six hundred and thirty and two

43 From thirty years old and upward even unto fifty years old, every one that entereth into the service, for the work in the tabernacle of the congregation,

44 Even those that were numbered of them after their families, were three thousand and two hundred.

45 These be those that were numbered of the families of the sons of Merari, whom Moses and Aaron numbered according to the word of the Lord by the hand of Moses.

46 All those that were numbered of the Levites, whom Moses and Aaron and the chief of Israel numbered, after their families, and after the house of their fathers,

47 From thirty years old and upward even unto fifty years old, every one that came to do the service of the ministry, and the service of the burden in the tabernacle of the congregation,

48 Even those that were numbered of them, were eight thousand and five hundred and fourscore.

49 According to the commandment of the Lord they were numbered by the hand of Moses, every one according to his service, and according to his burden: thus were they numbered of him, as the Lord commanded Moses.

43 fathers' houses, from thirty years old and upward even unto fifty years old, every one that entered upon the service, for work in the tent of meeting, even those that were numbered of them by their families, were three thousand and two hundred. These are they that were numbered of the families of the sons of Merari, whom Moses and Aaron numbered according to the commandment of the Lord by the hand of Moses.

46 All those that were numbered of the Levites, whom Moses and Aaron and the princes of Israel numbered, by their families, and by their fathers' houses, from thirty years old and upward even unto fifty years old, every one that entered in to do the work of service, and the work of bearing burdens in the tent of meeting, even those that were numbered of them, were eight thousand and five hundred and 49 fourscore. According to the commandment of the Lord they were numbered by the hand of Moses, every one according to his service, and according to his burden: thus were they numbered of him, as the Lord commanded Moses.

CHAPTER V.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Command the children of Israel, that they put out of the camp every leper, and every one that hath an issue, and whosoever is defiled by the dead:

3 Both male and female shall ye put out, without the camp shall ye put them; that they defile not their camps, in the midst whereof I dwell.

4 And the children of Israel did so, and put them out without the camp: as the Lord spake unto Moses, so did the children of Israel.

Chap. 5. LAWS ON VARIOUS SUBJECTS.

The laws in this and the following chapter concern themselves with the sanctity of the congregation, and evidently sprang from exigencies which arose from time to time in the life of the nation calling for judicial ruling or legislation. It would perhaps be fanciful to call these chapters an account of the spiritual organization of the congregation of Israel, as chap. 1-4 relate the outward organization of the camp preparatory to its journey.

1-4. 1. Exclusion of the leprous and unclean from the camp. This first regulation is more like a cleansing or preparation of the camp for the journey than the other laws in these chapters. It is legislation for the camp rather than for the individual, and is founded on a vivid sense of the presence of Jehovah in the camp (ver. 3), and the consequent necessity that the camp should be healthful and pure. According to the regulation in Leviticus confirmed lepers were to have their dwelling outside of the camp (Lev. 13:46), and the man or woman with an issue (ibid., chap. 15) was regarded as so potent to contribute defilement by the mere touch that the rigid isolation of such sufferers, especially on the march, was the only safeguard against their causing widespread inconvenience among their fellows. The third case is that of those who are unclean by the dead, or, according to the literal reading, by a soul, as if the animal soul in its escape from the body was regarded as diffusing a mysterious effluvium capable of defiling the whole atmosphere of the house or tent. Some passages like that in 19:13, where a person is spoken of as touching the soul (not dead body) of a man who is dead, or in Ps. 17:9 where in soul is used in the sense of "deadly," seem to indicate that the ancient Hebrew attributed the power of the dead to defile to the escaping soul or ghost.

This passage relates how, in response to the command of God, the children of Israel took the definite step at this time of providing for those who were in constant danger of rendering their fellows unclean, places outside of the camp.

5-10. 2. Law of compensation for fraud in case the injured person is dead and has no next of kin. This passage is a repetition and supplement to the regulation with regard to the guilt offering given in Lev. 5:14 to 6:7. The sin

6 Speak unto the children of Israel, When a man or woman shall commit any sin that men commit, to do a trespass against the Lord, and that person be guilty;

7 Then they shall confess their sin which they have done: and he shall recompense his trespass with the principal thereof, and add unto it the fifth part thereof, and give it unto him against whom he hath trespassed.

8 But if the man have no kinsman to recompense the trespass unto, let the trespass be recompensed unto the Lord, even to the priest; beside the ram of the atonement, whereby an atonement shall be made for him.

9 And every offering of all the holy things of the children of Israel, which they bring unto the priest, shall be his.

10 And every man's hallowed things shall be his: whatsoever any man giveth the priest, it shall be his.

11 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

12 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, If any man's wife go aside, and commit a trespass against him,

13 And a man lie with her carnally, and it be hid from the eyes of her husband, and be kept close, and she be defiled, and there be no witness against her, neither she be taken with the manner;

14 And the spirit of jealousy come upon him, and he be jealous of his wife, and she be defiled: or if the spirit of jealousy come upon him, and he be jealous of his wife, and she be not defiled:

15 Then shall the man bring his wife unto the priest, and he shall bring her offering for her, the tenth part of an ephah of barley meal; he shall pour no oil upon it, nor put frankincense thereon; for it is an offering of jealousy, an offering of memorial, bringing iniquity to remembrance.

6 Speak unto the children of Israel, When a man or woman shall commit any sin that men commit, to do a trespass against the Lord, and that

7 soul be guilty; then they shall confess their sin which they have done: and he shall make restitution for his guilt in full, and add unto it the fifth part thereof, and give it unto him in

8 respect of whom he hath been guilty. But if the man have no kinsman to whom restitution may be made for the guilt, the restitution for guilt which is made unto the Lord shall be the priest's; besides the ram of the atonement, whereby atonement shall be made for him.

9 And every heave offering of all the holy things of the children of Israel, which they present

10 unto the priest, shall be his. And every man's hallowed things shall be his: whatsoever any man giveth the priest, it shall be his.

11 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

12 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, If any man's wife go aside, and commit a

13 trespass against him, and a man lie with her carnally, and it be hid from the eyes of her husband, and be kept close, and she be defiled, and there be no witness against her, neither she be

14 taken in the act; and the spirit of jealousy come upon him, and he be jealous of his wife, and she be defiled: or if the spirit of jealousy come upon him, and he be jealous of his wife,

15 and she be not defiled: then shall the man bring his wife unto the priest, and shall bring her oblation for her, the tenth part of an ephah of barley meal; he shall pour no oil upon it, nor put frankincense thereon; for it is a meal offering of jealousy, a meal offering of memorial, contemplated is a breach of faith with regard to the holy things of Jehovah, or some false dealing with one's neighbor regarding a deposit or pledge, or some matter of robbery or oppression, perhaps in keeping back wages or lost property found—all of which is regarded as primarily a מעל, ma'al, or breach of faith against Jehovah. The original regulation is here repeated, viz., that the person is to restore the value, with the addition of a fifth, to the person wronged. The supplementary regulation is, that in case the wronged person, who is supposed to be dead, has no גא, go'el, or nearest of kin, who may receive the restitution, this shall go to the priest, in addition to the ram, which was the uniformly required victim for the guilt offering. Such a regulation as this was needed to prevent the important disciplinary practice of making restitution from lapsing in case there was no obvious person to make the claim. At the same time it is a regulation which would not very naturally be made along with the original draft of the law, but would be added as a supplement after the rather rare case had arisen of an unsatisfied claimant dying without any go'el. It seems, therefore, to be an instance of case law arising after the main precept had been in actual operation and its defects discovered.

Ver. 9 and 10 also seem to reflect a condition of carelessness or reluctance on the part of the people to maintain a rigid and abundant faithfulness with regard to the תרינות, trumoth, or heave offerings, which were the perquisite of the priests—a condition which the legislation sought to meet by impressing the people that this offering was not a mere gratuity to the priest, but a property right, the withholding of which would be a breach of faith. In ver. 10 the pronoun his means the priest's.

11-31. 3. Ordeal prescribed for the woman suspected by her husband of unfaithfulness. This is the only case of the employment of the ordeal as a means of testing the guilt of an accused person in the Mosaic law. And this, indeed, is not so much an ordeal applied as a test as it is an oath of purgation; it is what an ordeal in its most solemn and dignified conception has been defined to be—an oath in which the curse invoked is expected to follow immediately. As compared with many barbarous tests which were in use in Europe up to comparatively recent times—tests in which escape from false accusation was next to impossible, or which gave to malice opportunities for judicial murder—this simple ordeal is remarkably humane. For the innocent person it is entirely harmless. At the same time, with its solemn oath-taking and its threat of mysterious disease divinely inflicted, it is an ordeal which a guilty person would scarcely have the hardihood to 16 And the priest shall bring her near, and set her before the Lord :

17 And the priest shall take holy water in an earthen vessel ; and of the dust that is in the floor of the tabernacle the priest shall take, and put it into the water :

18 And the priest shall set the woman before the Lord, and uncover the woman's head, and put the offering of memorial in her hands, which is the jealousy offering : and the priest shall have in his hand the bitter water that causeth the curse :

19 And the priest shall charge her by an oath, and say unto the woman, If no man have lain with thee, and if thou hast not gone aside to uncleanness with another instead of thy husband, be thou free from this bitter water that causeth the curse :

20 But if thou hast gone aside to another instead of thy husband, and if thou be defiled, and some man have lain with thee beside thine husband :

21 Then the priest shall charge the woman with an oath of cursing, and the priest shall say unto the woman, The Lord make thee a curse and an oath among thy people, when the Lord doth make thy thigh to rot, and thy belly to swell ;

22 And this water that causeth the curse shall go into thy bowels, to make thy belly to swell, and thy thigh to rot : And the woman shall say, Amen, amen.

23 And the priest shall write these curses in a book, and he shall blot them out with the bitter water :

24 And he shall cause the woman to drink the bitter water that causeth the curse : and the water that causeth the curse shall enter into her, and become bitter.

25 Then the priest shall take the jealousy offering out of the woman's hand, and shall wave the offering before the Lord, and offer it upon the altar :

16 bringing iniquity to remembrance. And the priest shall bring her near, and set her before the Lord : and the priest shall take holy water in an earthen vessel ; and of the dust that is on the floor of the tabernacle the priest shall take, and put it into the water : and the priest shall set the woman before the Lord, and let the hair of the woman's head go loose, and put the meal offering of memorial in her hands, which is the meal offering of jealousy : and the priest shall have in his hand the water of bitterness that causeth the curse : and the priest shall cause her to swear, and shall say unto the woman, If no man have lain with thee, and if thou hast not gone aside to uncleanness, being under thy husband, be thou free from this water of bitterness that causeth the curse : but if thou hast gone aside, being under thy husband, and if thou be defiled, and some man have lain with thee besides thine husband : then the priest shall cause the woman to swear with the oath of cursing, and the priest shall say unto the woman, The Lord make thee a curse and an oath among thy people, when the Lord doth make thy thigh to fall away, and thy belly to swell ; and this water that causeth the curse shall go into thy bowels, and make thy belly to swell, and thy thigh to fall away : and the woman shall say, Amen, Amen. And the priest shall write these curses in a book, and he shall blot them out into the water of bitterness : and he shall make the woman drink the water of bitterness that causeth the curse : and the water that causeth the curse shall enter into her and become bitter. And the priest shall take the meal offering of jealousy out of the woman's hand, and shall wave the meal offering before brave. The suspected woman is brought by her husband to the priest with a מִנְחָה, minchah, or meal offering, consisting of barley meal, a coarse, cheap food, unaccompanied by oil or incense, as it is a minchah not expressing fellowship, but bringing sin to remembrance. The priest solemnly places her before Jehovah and loosens the locks of her head. Then as she holds the minchah of memorial in her hand, the priest holding in his hands a "water of bitterness that causeth a curse," which he has prepared of holy water mingled with dust of the sanctuary floor, solemnly administers to her the "oath of cursing," bidding her be unharmed in case she is innocent, but imprecating the divine curse in case she is guilty, to which she responds, "Amen, amen." The curse is then written in a book and blotted into the water of bitterness ; the "memorial" of the meal offering is burned on the altar, and then the woman is made to drink the water impregnated with the ink of the written curse. The expectation of the law is that if the woman is guilty the consequences will miraculously follow as imprecated in the curse, and thus the truth will be brought to light.

In common with the forms of ordeal appearing in the history of other nations, this test is an appeal to a miraculous interposition for the establishing of the person's guilt or innocence.

But in the application of the test it is to be observed that it is not innocence which is to be established, but guilt which is to be brought to light, by supernatural agency. In other words, instead of a miracle of deliverance it is a miracle of judgment. To require a miracle of an innocent person is to throw the weight of chances overwhelmingly on the side of condemnation, while to require the miracle on the side of guilt is to increase the chance of acquittal.

This law, so far from being a mark of barbarism and the unfeeling degradation of woman, was rather a most beneficent means for establishing the suspected wife's innocence and so preserving the integrity of the family. Among the Jews, especially under rabbinical teaching, divorces were very hasty and arbitrary. As the establishment of cities of refuge tended to mitigate the evils of the practice of private vengeance, so the use of this ordeal, just in proportion as husbands had faith in its verdict, would tend to lessen the frequency and injustice of that custom of divorce which the law was obliged to allow on account of the hardness of men's hearts. The punishment for adultery was death (Lev. 20 : 10) ; but without being able to prove the crime many a jealous husband would be content to put away his wife and so break up his family. Once fallen under her husband's 26 And the priest shall take an handful of the offering, even the memorial thereof, and burn it upon the altar, and afterward shall cause the woman to drink the water.

27 And when he hath made her to drink the water, then it shall come to pass, that, if she be defiled, and have done trespass against her husband, that the water that causeth the curse shall enter into her, and become bitter, and her belly shall swell, and her thigh shall rot: and the woman shall be a curse among her people.

28 And if the woman be not defiled, but be clean; then she shall be free, and shall conceive seed.

29 This is the law of jealousies, when a wife goeth aside to another instead of her husband, and is defiled;

30 Or when the spirit of jealousy cometh upon him, and he be jealous over his wife, and shall set the woman before the Lord, and the priest shall execute upon her all this law.

31 Then shall the man be guiltless from iniquity, and this woman shall bear her iniquity.

26 the Lord, and bring it unto the altar: and the priest shall take an handful of the meal offering, as the memorial thereof, and burn it upon the altar, and afterward shall make the woman

27 drink the water. And when he hath made her drink the water, then it shall come to pass, if she be defiled, and have committed a trespass against her husband, that the water that causeth the curse shall enter into her and become bitter, and her belly shall swell, and her thigh shall fall away: and the woman shall be a curse among

28 her people. And if the woman be not defiled, but be clean; then she shall be free, and shall

29 conceive seed. This is the law of jealousy, when a wife, being under her husband, goeth

30 aside, and is defiled; or when the spirit of jealousy cometh upon a man, and he be jealous over his wife; then shall he set the woman

31 upon her all this law. And the man shall be free from iniquity, and that woman shall bear her iniquity.

CHAPTER VI.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When either man or woman shall separate themselves to vow a vow of a Nazarite, to separate themselves unto the Lord:

3 He shall separate himself from wine and strong suspicion, the woman would find it extremely difficult to prove her innocence. This ordeal simply leaves the fact to the verdict of God. By refusing to undergo the test the woman would virtually confess the crime; while for the sake, if possible, of regaining her husband's confidence how many a faithful and heart-broken wife would welcome the opportunity of establishing her innocence by the oath of purification. In many cases, where the jealousy of the husband was not altogether senseless and wicked, it may be presumed that the peace and happiness of families was restored by this solemn test. In view of this obvious probability the law appears not degrading to womanhood, but humane and tending to the amelioration of the customs of the people.

The consequence of the observance of this law, as given in ver. 31, is that the man shall be guiltless from iniquity, and this woman shall bear her iniquity. The man is certainly kept guiltless from iniquity if he is prevented from unjustly divorcing his wife; and he is freed from doubtful self-accusation if he finds that he had indubitable reason for his jealousy. The woman "bears her iniquity," i. e., she stands vindicated or condemned according to her own divinely revealed desert, and not according to the doubtful suspicions or opinions of others.

Chap. 6. THE LAW OF THE NAZARITE, AND THE FORMULA FOR THE PRIESTLY BENE-DICTION. This is the only place in the law

where the Nazarite is taken notice of. There are several examples mentioned in the Bible of vows more or less resembling the Nazarite vow, these vows being of two kinds, those taken for life and those taken for a temporary period. It is the latter kind alone that is considered here.

1-12. A Nazarite means one separated or consecrated. The form in which the law of the Nazarite is introduced indicates that the law-giver is not creating or inculcating a custom, but recognizing an impulse in the religious mind which is often led to express itself in vows of special consecration, bringing these under the cognizance of the priest, and prescribing their orderly manner of fulfillment and completion. The disposition to make such vows is taken as a matter of course. "The law is simply an attempt at a late stage of Israel's history to regulate an institution that has grown up independently of it" (HASTINGS, "Bib. Dict.").

There has in all ages existed among those of more enthusiastic temperament that species of religious feeling which could satisfy itself only in some voluntary self-dedication to God beyond the requirements of obligation, and beyond the everyday possibilities of secular life. Several instances are given in the Bible of the Nazarite vow, or a vow partaking of some of its features, as a life-vow, assumed indeed on behalf of the child by the parents before his birth, as in the case of Samson, Samuel, and John the Baptist. In this place the vow is described only in its temporary and perhaps stricter form, and its termination is treated, not as its weak abandon-drink, and shall drink no vinegar of wine, or vinegar of strong drink, neither shall he drink any liquor of grapes, nor eat moist grapes, or dried.

4 All the days of his separation shall he eat nothing that is made of the vine tree, from the kernels even to the husk.

5 All the days of the vow of his separation there shall no razor come upon his head: until the days be fulfilled, in the which he separateth himself unto the Lord, he shall be holy, and shall let the locks of the hair of his head grow.

6 All the days that he separateth himself unto the Lord he shall come at no dead body.

7 He shall not make himself unclean for his father, or for his mother, for his brother, or for his sister, when they die: because the consecration of his God is upon his head.

8 All the days of his separation he is holy unto the Lord.

9 And if any man die very suddenly by him, and he hath defiled the head of his consecration; then he shall shave his head in the day of his cleansing, on the seventh day shall he shave it.

10 And on the eighth day he shall bring two turtles, or two young pigeons, to the priest, to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation:

11 And the priest shall offer the one for a sin offering, and the other for a burnt offering, and make an atonement for him, for that he sinned by the dead, and shall hallow his head that same day.

12 And he shall consecrate unto the Lord the days of his separation, and shall bring a lamb of the first year for a trespass offering: but the days that were before shall be lost, because his separation was defiled.

no vinegar of wine, or vinegar of strong drink, neither shall he drink any liquor of grapes, nor eat fresh grapes or dried. All the days of his separation shall he eat nothing that is made of the grape-vine, from the kernels even to the husk. All the days of his vow of separation there shall no razor come upon his head: until the days be fulfilled, in the which he separateth himself unto the Lord, he shall be holy, he shall let the locks of the hair of his head grow long. All the days that he separateth himself unto the Lord he shall not come near to a dead body. He shall not make himself unclean for his father, or for his mother, for his brother, or for his sister, when they die: because his separation unto God is upon his head. All the days of his separation he is holy unto the Lord. And if any man die very suddenly beside him, and he defile the head of his separation; then he shall shave his head in the day of his cleansing, on the seventh day shall he shave it. And on the eighth day he shall bring two turtledoves, or two young pigeons, to the priest, to the door of the tent of meeting: and the priest shall offer one for a sin offering, and the other for a burnt offering, and make atonement for him, for that he sinned by reason of the dead, and shall hallow his head that same day. And he shall separate unto the Lord the days of his separation, and shall bring a he-lamb of the first year for a guilt offering: but the former days shall be void, because his separation was defiled.

ment, but as its natural culmination, or occasion for sacrifices as a part of the vow itself.

Any form of sanctity adopted simply to separate or distinguish the person from other men is from a rational point of view more or less arbitrary and artificial. The professionally holy man is by his very separateness robbed to some degree of his common usefulness and helpful sympathy with ordinary life. His influence as a consecrated person is that of a witness or reminder of the claims of a higher life, rather than of a preeminent helper in the sphere of this life. Such schemes of voluntary holiness generally embody as their distinctive features one or more of three essential elements: some form of abstinence from the pleasures of life, some distinctive mark or visible token of sanctity, and the strict avoidance of what is recognized as defiling. These three elements are embodied in the vow of the Nazarite. He is to abstain from the grape, the accepted symbol of pleasure and luxury—not only from its intoxicating wine but from the fresh or dried fruit, or anything prepared from the grape “from seeds to skin” (ver. 4). This element in the conception of superior sanctity may be a reminiscence of the old nomadic life, thought of as a more “golden” or exemplary age than the later and more luxurious times in Canaan which was characteristically a land of vines. All the days of his separation he is to allow no razor to come upon his head, but is to make great the free growth of the hair of his head (ver. 5). The hair seems to be taken not only as the visible badge, but in a sense as the seat of the person’s consecration; his vow centers, so to speak, in his head. He is to abstain from defilement because “the separation of his God” (ver. 7), or, as some would translate, the “diadem of his God,” is on his head. The employment of the same Hebrew term in this connection as that used to designate the priest’s diadem may possibly indicate that in the mind of the lawgiver there is a sort of identity between the two; as the priest’s diadem was the mark of “holiness to the Lord,” so the Nazarite’s diadem of unshorn locks was the badge of a similar consecration. An accidental death near him defiles the head of his separation (ver. 9), and when he renews his vow he is to “hallow his head” (ver. 11). The symbolism of the uncut locks has received many conjectural explanations. I take it that as simple and obvious an impression as any produced by the Nazarite’s personal appearance would be that he was honoring God and his work by letting himself be as near as possible as God made him. As abstinence from the grape was a witnessing against luxury, so letting the hair grow was a witnessing against artificiality and the modish interference with God’s work.

The third feature of the Nazarite vow was the rigid avoidance of defilement from the dead. The Nazarite was not to approach the “soul of one dead” (ver. 6), and his abstinence from the 13 And this is the law of the Nazarite, when the days of his separation are fulfilled: he shall be brought unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation:

14 And he shall offer his offering unto the Lord, one he-lamb of the first year without blemish for a burnt offering, and one ewe-lamb of the first year without blemish for a sin offering, and one ram without blemish for peace offerings, 15 And a basket of unleavened bread, cakes of fine flour mingled with oil, and wafers of unleavened bread anointed with oil, and their meat offering, and their drink offerings.

16 And the priest shall bring them before the Lord, and shall offer his sin offering, and his burnt offering:

17 And he shall offer the ram for a sacrifice of peace offerings unto the Lord, with the basket of unleavened bread: the priest shall offer also his meat offering, and his drink offering.

18 And the Nazarite shall shave the head of his separation at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and shall take the hair of the head of his separation, and put it in the fire which is under the sacrifice of the peace offerings.

19 And the priest shall take the sodden shoulder of the ram, and one unleavened cake out of the basket, and one unleavened wafer, and shall put them upon the hands of the Nazarite, after the hair of his separation is shaven:

20 And the priest shall wave them for a wave offering before the Lord: this is holy for the priest, with the wave breast and heave shoulder: and after that the Nazarite may drink wine.

13 And this is the law of the Nazirite, when the days of his separation are fulfilled: he shall be brought unto the door of the tent of meeting:

14 and he shall offer his oblation unto the Lord, one he-lamb of the first year without blemish for a burnt offering, and one ewe-lamb of the first year without blemish for a sin offering, and one ram without blemish for peace offerings,

15 and a basket of unleavened bread, cakes of fine flour mingled with oil, and unleavened wafers anointed with oil, and their meal offering, and

16 their drink offerings. And the priest shall present them before the Lord, and shall offer his

17 sin offering, and his burnt offering: and he shall offer the ram for a sacrifice of peace offerings unto the Lord, with the basket of unleavened bread: the priest shall offer also the meal offering thereof, and the drink offering thereof. And

18 the Nazirite shall shave the head of his separation at the door of the tent of meeting, and shall take the hair of the head of his separation, and put it on the fire which is under the sacrifice of 19 peace offerings. And the priest shall take the sodden shoulder of the ram, and one unleavened cake out of the basket, and one unleavened wafer, and shall put them upon the hands of the 20 Nazirite, after he hath shaven the head of his separation: and the priest shall wave them for a wave offering before the Lord; this is holy for the priest, together with the wave breast and

common service of making one's self unclean for members of the family when dead was to be like that of the high priest (Lev. 21 : 11). If a person should die suddenly near him he was to proceed as having broken his vow. On the seventh day, the day of his cleansing, he was to shave his head; and the next day he was to bring to the priest two doves or two young pigeons, the one of which the priest would offer for a sin offering and the other for a burnt offering, and was to reconsecrate his head that day. By a guilt offering of a male lamb he was to indicate that he had trespassed by "defiling his separation," and the time which had already elapsed in the fulfillment of his vow was to count for nothing.

13-21. The Nazarite vow was naturally taken for a given period, and the only mentions of it as a voluntary obligation are in connection with the ceremonies attending its termination. As assumed by parents for their children for the whole life the vow seems not to have embodied its most exacting feature, namely, the strict avoidance of contact with the dead. At least Samson in his free handling of lions' carcasses and jawbones (Judg. 14 : 8, 9 ; 15 : 15) seems to have shown the common indifference to such defilement, and perhaps Samuel also in his treatment of Agag (1 Sam. 15 : 33).

Of the three offerings that are prescribed to be offered when the vow has matured, the sin offering is to be offered first, as paving the way by the removal of guilt for the self-consecration expressed by the burnt offering and the communion with Jehovah expressed by the peace offering. As prescribed in Lev. 4, the sin offering covers for the awakened conscience any possible cases of unintentional transgression. The Nazarite vow as expressing a higher than usual grade of consecration would also indicate a more sensitive state of the conscience; so that the completion and retrospect of the holiest period would be the fullest of the sense of shortcoming. The best men are the readiest to feel and acknowledge sin. Hence the sin offering is a very characteristic feature of the Nazarite vow.

Having stilled the apprehensions of a sensitive conscience, the Nazarite by an offering still more characteristic of this period of completion expresses that happy sense of communion with God and enjoyment of his favor which accompanies the feeling of having accomplished something pleasing to him. The peace offering banquet with the priest is observed in its full elaborateness, not omitting the boiled shoulder consecrated to the use of the priest by waving, not, however, until the Nazarite has marked the termination of his vow by shaving his head and offering the hair on the fire that consumes the "memorial" of the peace offerings. The offerings which were obligatory, besides any free-will offering which the zealous vower, according to his means, might be disposed to give—literally, what his hand attains (ver. 21)—were 21 This is the law of the Nazarite who hath vowed, and of his offering unto the Lord for his separation, beside that his hand shall get: according to the vow which he vowed, so he must do after the law of his separation.

22 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

23 Speak unto Aaron and unto his sons, saying, On this wise ye shall bless the children of Israel, saying unto them,

24 The Lord bless thee, and keep thee:

25 The Lord make his face shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee:

26 The Lord lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace.

27 And they shall put my name upon the children of Israel; and I will bless them.

21 drink wine. This is the law of the Nazirite who voweth, and of his oblation unto the Lord for his separation, beside that which he is able to get: according to his vow which he voweth, so he must do after the law of his separation.

22 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

23 Speak unto Aaron and unto his sons, saying, On this wise ye shall bless the children of Israel; ye shall say unto them,

24 The Lord bless thee, and keep thee:

25 The Lord make his face to shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee:

26 The Lord lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace.

27 So shall they put my name upon the children of Israel; and I will bless them.

CHAPTER VII.

1 AND it came to pass on the day that Moses had fully set up the tabernacle, and had anointed it, and sanctified it, and all the instruments thereof, both the altar and all the vessels thereof, and had anointed them, and sanctified them;

2 That the princes of Israel, heads of the house of their fathers, who were the princes of the tribes, and were over them that were numbered, offered:

somewhat elaborate and expensive, and it was regarded as an act of piety and charity to help some poor man free himself from his vow by sharing his charges (cf. Acts 21 : 23, seq.; Josephus, Ant., XIX., 6 : 1; 1 Macc. 3 : 49).

22-27. The priestly benediction. The function of blessing in the name of Jehovah was the distinctive point which marked the prerogative of the priest. This was the first priestly act which Aaron performed when his consecration was completed (Lev. 9 : 22). In Deuteronomy it is named as the characteristic function of the priestly tribe of Levi (Deut. 10 : 8). Here the formula to be used in this solemn priestly service is prescribed; and so strikingly beautiful and comprehensive is this unique form of blessing that it became for the devout a sort of compendium of all the good which could be desired of the Lord for his people (Ecclus. 36 : 17; Ps. 4 : 6). It consists of three pairs of clauses, in each of which the second verb defines more closely the idea introduced by the first. There is the wish for a divine blessing which more specifically embodies itself in protection; there is the wish for the shining of the divine countenance, or God's radiant smile, which issues in favor or grace; and there is the wish for a lifting up of the face, or divine attention, which gives peace. This is so like the love of God, and the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the communion—the distinctive feeling of the peace offering—of the Holy Spirit, expressed in the apostolic benediction (2 Cor. 13 : 14) that Christian writers have very generally felt that here was a sort of foreshadowing of the distinct offices of the three persons of the Trinity, and so a sort of divine prophecy of that characteristic Christian doc-

1 AND it came to pass on the day that Moses had made an end of setting up the tabernacle, and had anointed it and sanctified it, and all the furniture thereof, and the altar, and all the vessels thereof, and had anointed them 2 and sanctified them; that the princes of Israel, the heads of their fathers' houses, offered; these were the princes of the tribes, these trine. Without exercising our ingenuity unduly in finding curious coincidences between the germinal ideas of the Old Testament and the developed doctrines of the New, we may at least say this much: that when the right and sane religious instinct puts forth its wish it desires of God all the forms of good which we think of as coming from the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit; so that any comprehensive expression for the full prayer of humanity would be capable of analysis into something like a foregleam of the Trinity. The defined doctrine of the Christian church, when rightly understood, is but the crystallization of what exists in solution in all right religious feeling; and prophecy as pointing forward to Christ is but the just disclosure of the eternal heart of humanity made vocal in the presence of God.

The use of the prescribed benediction was the official putting of the name of Jehovah on the children of Israel which, when done according to its true intent, had the promise of his blessing (ver. 27).

Chap. 7. THE OFFERINGS OF THE TWELVE PRINCES OF THE TRIBES AT THE CONSECRATION OF THE TENT OF MEETING AND OF THE ALTAR. 1-11. This section relates to that part of the offering of the princes which was apparently presented together, or at least received collectively and placed at the disposal of the three families that carried the tabernacle. 1. On the day, i. e., at the time, the word "day" being used in its less strict meaning, as in Gen. 2 : 4. The actions of the princes in this chapter seem to presuppose what has been related in the first four chapters of this book—their appoint-

3 And they brought their offering before the Lord, six covered wagons, and twelve oxen; a wagon for two of the princes, and for each one an ox: and they brought them before the tabernacle.

4 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

5 Take it of them, that they may be to do the service of the tabernacle of the congregation; and thou shalt give them unto the Levites, to every man according to his service.

6 And Moses took the wagons and the oxen, and gave them unto the Levites.

7 Two wagons and four oxen he gave unto the sons of Gershon, according to their service:

8 And four wagons and eight oxen he gave unto the sons of Merari, according unto their service, under the hand of Ithamar the son of Aaron the priest.

9 But unto the sons of Kohath he gave none: because the service of the sanctuary belonging unto them was that they should bear upon their shoulders.

10 And the princes offered for dedicating of the altar in the day that it was anointed, even the princes offered their offering before the altar.

11 And the Lord said unto Moses, They shall offer their offering, each prince on his day, for the dedicating of the altar.

12 And he that offered his offering the first day was Nahshon the son of Amminadab, of the tribe of Judah:

13 And his offering was one silver charger, the weight thereof was an hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary; both of them were full of fine flour mingled with oil for a meat offering:

14 One spoon of ten shekels of gold, full of incense:

15 One young bullock, one ram, one lamb of the first year, for a burnt offering:

16 One kid of the goats for a sin offering:

17 And for a sacrifice of peace offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year: this was the offering of Nahshon the son of Amminadab.

18 On the second day Nethanel the son of Zuar, prince of Issachar, did offer:

are they that were over them that were numbered: and they brought their oblation before the Lord, six covered wagons, and twelve oxen; a wagon for every two of the princes, and for each one an ox: and they presented them before the tabernacle. And the Lord spake unto

Moses, saying, Take it of them, that they may be to do the service of the tent of meeting; and thou shalt give them unto the Levites, to every man according to his service. And Moses took the wagons and the oxen, and gave them unto the Levites. Two wagons and four oxen he gave unto the sons of Gershon, according to their service: and four wagons and eight oxen he gave unto the sons of Merari, according unto their service, under the hand of Ithamar the son of Aaron the priest. But unto the sons of Kohath he gave none: because the service of the sanctuary belonged unto them; they bare it upon their shoulders. And the princes offered for the dedication of the altar in the day that it was anointed, even the princes offered their oblation before the altar. And the Lord said unto Moses, They shall offer their oblation, each prince on his day, for the dedication of the altar.

12 And he that offered his oblation the first day was Nahshon the son of Amminadab, of the 13 tribe of Judah: and his oblation was one silver charger, the weight thereof was an hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary; both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil for a 14 meal offering; one golden spoon of ten shekels,

15 full of incense; one young bullock, one ram, one he-lamb of the first year, for a burnt offer-

16 ing; one male of the goats for a sin offering;

17 and for the sacrifice of peace offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five he-lambs of the first year: this was the oblation of Nahshon the son of Amminadab.

18 On the second day Nethanel the son of Zuar, ment as superintendents of the census (ver. 2; cf. 1: 5), the necessities attending the work of transporting the tabernacle (ver. 3, 6; cf. 4: 24-26, 31-33)—and yet their gifts purport to have been presented at the time of the dedication of the tabernacle, one month before the census was ordered, or the duties of the Levites assigned (see Exod. 40: 17; Lev. 8: 10, 11; cf. Num. 1: 1). We can only note this incongruity without explaining its origin.

Each two of the princes jointly gave a wagon, making six wagons in all; and each prince gave an ox, making six yoke of oxen or teams to draw them. Because the word translated covered, in ver. 3, is used in Isa. 66: 20 and rendered litters, it has been supposed by some that the vehicles were wheelless litters borne each by two oxen before and behind, but the more probable inference from the derivation of the word is that they were covered carts. Two of these vehicles with their complement of oxen were assigned to the family of Gershon for transporting the cloth work of the tabernacle, while double the number were given to the Merarites for transporting the heavy pillars and boards constituting its solid framework. The sacred articles of furniture which the Kohathites carried were furnished with rings and poles and were carried on the shoulders of men.

The more solemn and specific gift of each prince for the dedication of the altar (ver. 11) was arranged to be offered each on its day during twelve days. The great number of oxen and sheep and goats constituting the total of their offerings could hardly have been disposed of in the limited area of the tabernacle court and on the one altar, if the attempt had been made to receive and sacrifice the burnt offerings and the "memorial" of the peace offerings all in one day.

12-83. The offerings of the preceding section were such as supplied a perceivable need in connection with the transportation of the sanctuary. These individual offerings, on the other hand, seem to be a purely gratuitous expression of loyalty and praise rather than the subserving of an obvious utility. They seem to be a shining instance of unsolicited liberality, not unacaccompanied with the religious feeling which realized the need of a sin offering and sought expression in the burnt and peace offerings. Such forthputtings of grateful loyalty, like the offering of Mary in the Gospels (Mark 14: 3-9), are among the choicest fruits of religion. Evidently there was some systematic understanding between the princes, or the tribes which they represented, so that all brought precisely similar gifts. The story of the offering is repeated twelve times in detail, in identical words—an unnecessary and yet stately repetition which no doubt was a grateful rhetorical help to the Hebrew's imagination in parading the princely gifts before his thought for the exercise of his admiration, just as the printing, in Hebrew, of the names of Haman's sons in rows (Esther 9: 7-10), as if hanged, in a similar way furnished a sort of graphical satisfaction to his hatred.

Each prince offered a silver charger of one hundred and thirty shekels' weight, worth about eighty-four dollars, and a silver bowl or sprinkling dish of seventy shekels' weight, worth something over forty-five dollars, each of sanctuary; both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil for a meat offering:

72 On the eleventh day Pagiel the son of Ocran, prince of the children of Asher: his oblation was one silver charger, the weight thereof was an hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary; both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil for a meal offering; one golden spoon these being filled with fine flour saturated with oil for a minchah; and a gold spoon (lit., palm) weighing ten shekels, worth nearly ninety-seven dollars, filled with incense. Besides these were the animals for the burnt, sin, and peace offerings as enumerated in the text. The princes appear to have made their offerings in the order assigned to the tribes in the census (chap. 2).

75 One young bullock, one ram, one lamb of the first year, for a burnt offering :

76 One kid of the goats for a sin offering :

77 And for a sacrifice of peace offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year: this was the offering of Pagiel the son of Ocran.

78 On the twelfth day Ahira the son of Enan, prince of the children of Naphtali, offered :

79 His offering was one silver charger, the weight whereof was an hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary; both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil for a meat offering :

80 One golden spoon of ten shekels, full of incense :

81 One young bullock, one ram, one lamb of the first year, for a burnt offering :

82 One kid of the goats for a sin offering :

83 And for a sacrifice of peace offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year: this was the offering of Ahira the son of Enan.

84 This was the dedication of the altar, in the day when it was anointed, by the princes of Israel: twelve chargers of silver, twelve silver bowls, twelve spoons of gold :

85 Each charger of silver weighing an hundred and thirty shekels, each bowl seventy: all the silver vessels weighed two thousand and four hundred shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary :

86 The golden spoons were twelve, full of incense, weighing ten shekels apiece, after the shekel of the sanctuary: all the gold of the spoons was an hundred and twenty shekels.

87 All the oxen for the burnt offering were twelve bullocks, the rams twelve, the lambs of the first year twelve, with their meat offering: and the kids of the goats for sin offering twelve.

88 And all the oxen for the sacrifice of the peace offerings were twenty and four bullocks, the rams sixty, the he-goats sixty, the lambs of the first year sixty. This was the dedication of the altar, after that it was anointed.

89 And when Moses was gone into the tabernacle of the congregation to speak with him, then he heard the voice of one speaking unto him from off the mercy seat that was upon the ark of testimony, from between the two cherubims: and he spake unto him.

75 of ten shekels, full of incense; one young bullock, one ram, one he-lamb of the first year,

76 for a burnt offering; one male of the goats for a

77 sin offering; and for the sacrifice of peace offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five he-lambs of the first year: this was the oblation Pagiel the son of Ocran.

78 On the twelfth day Ahira the son of Enan,

79 prince of the children of Naphtali: his oblation was one silver charger, the weight thereof was an hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary; both of them full of fine flour mingled

80 with oil for a meal offering; one golden spoon

81 of ten shekels, full of incense; one young bullock, one ram, one he-lamb of the first year, for

82 a burnt offering; one male of the goats for a sin

83 offering; and for the sacrifice of peace offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five he-lambs

84 of the first year: this was the oblation of Ahira

the son of Enan.

84 This was the dedication of the altar, in the day when it was anointed, by the princes of Israel:

twelve silver chargers, twelve silver bowls,

85 twelve golden spoons: each silver charger weighing an hundred and thirty shekels, and each bowl seventy: all the silver of the vessels two thousand and four hundred shekels, after the shekel

86 of the sanctuary; the twelve golden spoons, full of incense, weighing ten shekels apiece, after the shekel of the sanctuary: all the gold of the 87 spoons an hundred and twenty shekels: all the oxen for the burnt offering twelve bullocks, the rams twelve, the he-lambs of the first year

twelve, and their meal offering: and the males

88 of the goats for a sin offering twelve: and all the oxen for the sacrifice of peace offerings twenty and four bullocks, the rams sixty, the he-goats sixty, the he-lambs of the first year sixty. This was the dedication of the altar,

89 after that it was anointed. And when Moses went into the tent of meeting to speak with him, then he heard the Voice speaking unto him from above the mercy-seat that was upon the ark of the testimony, from between the two cherubim:

and he spake unto him.

84-88. These verses give the totals of the offerings at the dedication of the altar. The approximate value of the silver, two thousand four hundred shekels, was one thousand five hundred and fifty-two dollars, while that of the gold, one hundred and twenty shekels, was one thousand one hundred and sixty-three dollars and fifty-two cents. The presenting of the gifts and the sacrificing of the victims in the various species of offerings constituted the dedication (lit. the imbuing) of the altar, as distinguished from its anointing or formal setting apart (ver. 88).

89. This verse has almost the appearance of having dropped out of its connection, as is seen in its abrupt change of topic, and the use of the pronoun him (referring to Jehovah) without an antecedent. Dillmann thinks it comes more naturally after Exod. 25 : 22. Speaking. The word thus rendered has in Hebrew the reflexive form, "making itself audible," the form of the word thus illustrating the apparent impersonality of a voice speaking without visible organs.

The verse as a whole seems to imply that from this time forward communication was established between Jehovah and Moses from the mercy seat between the cherubim in the tent of meeting, as promised in Exod. 25 : 22. This fact of Moses' habitual converse with God in the tent of meeting seems to have made a very deep impression on the Hebrew imagination. He was regarded as the unique example of a prophet whom the Lord knew face to face (Deut. 34 : 10); in this method of communication he is pronounced by Jehovah sui generis (Num. 12 : 7, 8); those ineffably elevated and intimate transactions in the tent of appointment were guarded by the pillar of cloud standing as a sentinel at the door, while all the people at the entrance of their tents rose and worshiped as they saw the cloudy guardian which indicated that Moses was holding audience with Jehovah (Exod. 33 : 7-11). The luminous appearance of his face as a consequence of his direct converse with God (Exod. 34 : 30), and his habit of veiling himself

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,
2 Speak unto Aaron, and say unto him, When thou lightest the lamps, the seven lamps shall give light over against the candlestick.

3 And Aaron did so; he lighted the lamps thereof over against the candlestick, as the Lord commanded Moses.

4 And this work of the candlestick was of beaten gold, unto the shaft thereof, unto the flowers thereof, was beaten work: according unto the pattern which the Lord had shewed Moses, so he made the candlestick.

5 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

6 Take the Levites from among the children of Israel, and cleanse them.

7 And thus shalt thou do unto them, to cleanse them: Sprinkle water of purifying upon them, and let them shave all their flesh, and let them wash their clothes, and so make themselves clean.

8 Then let them take a young bullock with his meat offering, even fine flour mingled with oil, and another young bullock shalt thou take for a sin offering.

9 And thou shalt bring the Levites before the tabernacle of the congregation: and thou shalt gather the whole assembly of the children of Israel together:

Chap. 8. AN ITEM OF DIRECTIONS REGARDING THE GOLDEN CANDLESTICK. THE CONSECRATION OF THE LEVITES, AND THEIR PERIOD OF SERVICE. 1-4. Instructions for fixing the lamps upon the golden candlestick. When thou lightest, rather, settest up, as in R. V. Marg. This verse is substantially a repetition of Exod. 25 : 37, last clause. The purport of the direction appears to be that, as the candlestick stood on the south side of the sanctuary with its branches extending lengthwise of the apartment, the lamps, which were movable, should be so placed on the branches that the extension or neck containing the wick should project out into the room, so as to throw the light toward the north side, i. e., over against the candlestick. The candlestick is described in Exod. 25 : 31-40, and that part of the description which dwells upon its workmanship (ibid., 31, 36) is here repeated. The whole was made according to the vision (ver. 4), which Jehovah had shown to Moses. The directions for caring for the lamps and for providing the supply of oil are distributed in various places in the Pentateuch (Exod. 27 : 20 ; 30 : 7 ; Lev. 24 : 1-4), besides this place.

5-22. The consecration of the Levites to their duties. This passage connects with 3 : 5-13, and describes the actual ceremony of presenting the Levites to the Lord for the use of the priests. This ceremony is not called a sanctifying or filling of the hand, as was the corresponding ceremony at the consecration of the priests (Lev. 8 : 12, 33), but a cleansing (ver. 6). The first act of cleansing was to sprinkle them with "sin water," and have them shave their bodies and wash their clothes. The "sin water" in question can hardly have been such a water of purifying as was prepared for the leper when he was cleansed (Lev. 14 : 4-7), nor the water of separation that was prepared from the ashes of the red heifer for the cleansing of those who were defiled by the dead (Num. 19), for these seem to have been prescribed for the special cases mentioned; but perhaps the water from the laver which is apparently called "holy water" in 5 : 17. The ceremony of inauguration for these subordinate priests did not include the act of investiture, as they had no distinctive dress as a badge of office. Their clothing was therefore made ready for their new position by washing (ver. 7).

As the Levites were the gift of the whole nation to the priests, representative of their first-born which were claimed by Jehovah, the whole congregation was assembled to participate in the ceremony of consecration. The congregation, doubtless through their representatives the heads of the tribes, were to lay their hands on the heads of the Levites (ver. 10), and then these temple servants were solemnly offered as a wave offering (ver. 11), the ceremony being performed 11 And Aaron shall offer the Levites before the Lord for an offering of the children of Israel, that they may execute the service of the Lord.

12 And the Levites shall lay their hands upon the heads of the bullocks: and thou shalt offer the one for a sin offering, and the other for a burnt offering, unto the Lord, to make an atonement for the Levites.

13 And thou shalt set the Levites before Aaron, and before his sons, and offer them for an offering unto the Lord.

14 Thus shalt thou separate the Levites from among the children of Israel: and the Levites shall be mine.

15 And after that shall the Levites go in to do the service of the tabernacle of the congregation: and thou shalt cleanse them, and offer them for an offering.

16 For they are wholly given unto me from among the children of Israel; instead of such as open every womb, even instead of the firstborn of all the children of Israel, have I taken them unto me.

17 For all the firstborn of the children of Israel are mine, both man and beast: on the day that I smote every firstborn in the land of Egypt I sanctified them for myself.

18 And I have taken the Levites for all the firstborn of the children of Israel.

19 And I have given the Levites as a gift to Aaron and to his sons from among the children of Israel, to do the service of the children of Israel in the tabernacle of the congregation, and to make an atonement for the children of Israel: that there be no plague among the children of Israel, when the children of Israel come nigh unto the sanctuary.

20 And Moses, and Aaron, and all the congregation of the children of Israel, did to the Levites according unto all that the Lord commanded Moses concerning the Levites, so did the children of Israel unto them.

21 And the Levites were purified, and they washed their clothes; and Aaron offered them as an offering before the Lord; and Aaron made an atonement for them to cleanse them.

22 And after that went the Levites in to do their service in the tabernacle of the congregation before Aaron, and before his sons: as the Lord had commanded Moses concerning the Levites, so did they unto them.

11 hands upon the Levites: and Aaron shall offer the Levites before the Lord for a wave offering, on the behalf of the children of Israel, that they may be to do the service of the Lord. And the Levites shall lay their hands upon the heads of the bullocks: and offer thou the one for a sin offering, and the other for a burnt offering, unto the Lord, to make atonement for the Levites.

13 And thou shalt set the Levites before Aaron, and before his sons, and offer them for a wave offering unto the Lord. Thus shalt thou separate the Levites from among the children of Israel: and

For they are wholly given unto me from among the children of Israel; instead of all that openeth the womb, even the firstborn of all the children of Israel, have 17 I taken them unto me. For all the firstborn among the children of Israel are mine, both man and beast: on the day that I smote all the firstborn in the land of Egypt I sanctified them for myself. And I have taken the Levites instead of all the firstborn among the children of Israel.

19 And I have given the Levites as a gift to Aaron and to his sons from among the children of Israel, to do the service of the children of Israel in the tent of meeting, and to make atonement for the children of Israel: that there be no plague among the children of Israel, when the children of Israel come nigh unto the sanctuary. Thus did Moses, and Aaron, and all the congregation of the children of Israel, unto the Levites: according unto all that the Lord commanded Moses touching the Levites, so did the children of Israel unto them. And the Levites purified themselves from sin, and they washed their clothes; and Aaron offered them for a wave offering before the Lord; and Aaron made atonement for them to cleanse them. And after that went the Levites in to do their service in the tent of meeting before Aaron, and before his sons: as the Lord had commanded Moses concerning the Levites, so did they unto them.

20 Thus did Moses, and Aaron, and all the congregation of the children of Israel, unto the Levites: according unto all that the Lord commanded Moses touching the Levites, so did the children of Israel unto them.

21 And the Levites purified themselves from sin, and they washed their clothes; and Aaron offered them for a wave offering before the Lord; and Aaron made atonement for them to cleanse them. And after that went the Levites in to do their service in the tent of meeting before Aaron, and before his sons: as the Lord had commanded Moses concerning the Levites, so did they unto them.

22 And after that went the Levites in to do their service in the tent of meeting before Aaron, and before his sons: as the Lord had commanded Moses concerning the Levites, so did they unto them.

by Aaron on behalf of the children of Israel. It will be remembered that the rite of waving is that which characterizes the making of such offerings as are presented to Jehovah to revert to the use of the priests or the sanctuary. On the wave offering, see comment on Lev. 7: 28-34. Just how the act of waving a large company of people was performed cannot be stated with certainty. Perhaps they were solemnly conducted up to the altar and back; or the act may have been emblematically performed by Aaron's pointing to them and waving his hands as if they were filled with a gift for Jehovah. The Levites in their turn, having provided themselves with a couple of bullocks with their accompanying minchah, offered the one for a sin offering and the other for a burnt offering, thus entering on their office in a state of ceremonial freedom from all possible inadvertent guilt.

This act of consecration is summed up as consisting essentially of cleansing and waving (ver. 15); the theory of the waving being that they are wholly given (נְתֻנִים, n'thunim, cf. 3: 9) to Aaron and to his sons; while that of their being separated and cleansed in general is that they are taken in lieu of the firstborn of Israel whom Jehovah consecrated to himself when he destroyed the firstborn of Egypt. This service of the Levites in the sanctuary is therefore strictly the function of the nation's firstborn; but as the service of the holy place is hazardous on account of the self-avenging sanctity of the sacred things, a specially consecrated tribe can more safely perform it than for the people to undertake that service promiscuously (ver. 19). In thus taking the specially sacred and hazardous part of the nation's lay duty, the Levites are considered as covering, or acting as an atoning buffer for them—to make an atonement (ver. 19)—in the presence of Jehovah.

All this ceremony of cleansing and waving is given in the form of a command to Moses; and then in ver. 20-22 it is stated that all was carried out according to the divine direction,

23 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,
 24 This is it that belongeth unto the Levites: from twenty and five years old and upward they shall go in to wait upon the service of the tabernacle of the congregation:

25 And from the age of fifty years they shall cease waiting upon the service thereof, and shall serve no more:

26 But shall minister with their brethren in the tabernacle of the congregation, to keep the charge, and shall do no service. Thus shalt thou do unto the Levites touching their charge.

23 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,
 24 This is that which belongeth unto the Levites: from twenty and five years old and upward they shall go in to wait upon the service in the work
 25 of the tent of meeting: and from the age of fifty years they shall cease waiting upon the work, 26 and shall serve no more; but shall minister with their brethren in the tent of meeting, to keep the charge, and shall do no service. Thus shalt thou do unto the Levites touching their charges.

CHAPTER IX.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses in the wilderness of Sinai, in the first month of the second year after they were come out of the land of Egypt, saying,

2 Let the children of Israel also keep the passover at his appointed season.

3 In the fourteenth day of this month, at even, ye shall keep it in his appointed season: according to all the rites of it, and according to all the ceremonies thereof, shall ye keep it.

4 And Moses spake unto the children of Israel, that they should keep the passover.

 2 Egypt, saying, Moreover let the children of Israel keep the passover in its appointed season.
 3 In the fourteenth day of this month, at even, ye shall keep it in its appointed season: according to all the statutes of it, and according to all the 4 ordinances thereof, shall ye keep it. And Moses spake unto the children of Israel, that they

23-26. The period of the Levites' service. The regulation of this section fixing the age of Levitical service at from twenty-five to fifty years appears to be a correction or modification of 4: 47, where the age of entering upon the service is fixed at thirty years. "As a correction representing quite another period when reason had arisen for accepting the service of younger men, this is plain and simple enough. As a regulation coming from the same legislator who made the regulation of chapter four in the same breath, as it were, it would be unintelligible indeed" (HORTON). The wholly unusual and hardly correct form of expression in the Hebrew with which the section is introduced, this is it that belongeth unto the Levites (ver. 24), seems to indicate the work of a supplemental hand; and yet, in any event, the modifier's inadvertence in not explaining his inconsistent insertion is strange. The attempt to explain the difference by supposing that the regulation of chapter four referred to the heavy work of transporting the tabernacle which needed men in their prime, while the service here provided for is the ordinary work of caring for it in its settled abode is wholly arbitrary. It is to be noted that, according to the chronicler (1 Chron. 23: 24, seq.), one of the last acts of David was to change the age of entering on Levitical service, apparently from thirty years (cf. 1 Chron. 23: 3), to twenty, on the ground that the heavy work of carrying the tabernacle no longer needed to be done. The lower limit seems to have been the recognized period of entering on service in the time of Hezekiah (2 Chron. 31: 17) and after the exile (Ezra 3: 8).

This section is more specific than chapter four in defining what is involved in retiring the Levites at the age of fifty years. They shall return from the warfare of the service (ver. 25), i. e., the disciplinary severity which makes it like military duty, but shall assist their brethren in such duties as keeping guard or caring for property, involving no servile work.

Chap. 9. THE PASSOVER AT SINAI WITH ITS SUPPLEMENTAL ORDINANCE. THE SIGNALS GIVEN BY THE CLOUD. The direction here given antedates the command for the numbering recorded in 1: 1, seq. 2-8. This account of the observance of the Passover is evidently a piece of history introduced, like the narrative in Lev. 24: 10-12, in order to exhibit the occasion and origin of an ordinance. The ordinance thus given its historical occasion is the second or "little" Passover prescribed for those who are hindered by uncleanness or absence from observing the feast in the first month. As related in the twelfth chapter of Exodus, the first Passover was observed in Egypt on the night when Jehovah smote the firstborn; and it contained one feature which did not belong to later observances of the feast, namely, the striking of the blood on the door posts by which the house thus marked was rendered immune from the plague. This feature appears to have been replaced by the sprinkling of the blood on the altar. From the twenty-fifth verse of that chapter it might have been inferred that the regular observances of the feast were to begin when the children of Israel were settled in their Promised Land; but this command in Numbers at the opening of the second year of the exodus appears to have forestalled such a misunderstanding.

5 And they kept the passover on the fourteenth day of the first month at even in the wilderness of Sinai: according to all that the Lord commanded Moses, so did the children of Israel.

6 And there were certain men, who were defiled by the dead body of a man, that they could not keep the passover on that day: and they came before Moses and before Aaron on that day:

7 And those men said unto him, We are defiled by the dead body of a man: wherefore are we kept back, that we may not offer an offering of the Lord in his appointed season among the children of Israel?

8 And Moses said unto them, Stand still, and I will hear what the Lord will command concerning you.

9 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

10 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, If any man of you or of your posterity shall be unclean by reason of a dead body, or be in a journey afar off, yet he shall keep the passover unto the Lord.

11 The fourteenth day of the second month at even they shall keep it, and eat it with unleavened bread and bitter herbs.

12 They shall leave none of it unto the morning, nor break any bone of it: according to all the ordinances of the passover they shall keep it.

13 But the man that is clean, and is not in a journey, and forbeareth to keep the passover, even the same soul shall be cut off from among his people: because he brought not the offering of the Lord in his appointed season, that man shall bear his sin.

14 And if a stranger shall sojourn among you, and will keep the passover unto the Lord; according to the ordinance of the passover, and according to the manner thereof, so shall he do: ye shall have one ordinance, both for the stranger, and for him that was born in the land.

5 should keep the passover. And they kept the passover in the first month, on the fourteenth day of the month, at even, in the wilderness of Sinai: according to all that the Lord commanded Moses, so did the children of Israel.

6 And there were certain men, who were unclean by the dead body of a man, so that they could not keep the passover on that day: and they came before Moses and before Aaron on that

7 day: and those men said unto him, We are unclean by the dead body of a man: wherefore are we kept back, that we may not offer the oblation of the Lord in its appointed season among the 8 children of Israel? And Moses said unto them, Stay ye; that I may hear what the Lord will command concerning you.

9 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

10 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, If any man of you or of your generations shall be unclean by reason of a dead body, or be in a journey afar off, yet he shall keep the passover unto

11 the Lord: in the second month on the fourteenth day at even they shall keep it: they shall eat it

12 with unleavened bread and bitter herbs: they shall leave none of it unto the morning, nor

13 break a bone thereof: according to all the statute of the passover they shall keep it. But the man that is clean, and is not in a journey, and forbearth to keep the passover, that soul shall be cut off from his people: because he offered not the oblation of the Lord in its appointed season, 14 that man shall bear his sin. And if a stranger shall sojourn among you, and will keep the passover unto the Lord; according to the statute of the passover, and according to the ordinance thereof, so shall he do: ye shall have one statute, both for the stranger, and for him that is born in the land.

ing. Some of the details connected with this observance of the Passover in the desert, as, for instance, how the thousands of lambs necessary for the feast, or, for that matter, the many victims requisite for maintaining the sacrifices could be provided by a people entirely dependent on manna for their daily food (Exod. 16 : 3; Numb. 11 : 6), or how the blood of so many victims could be sprinkled by Aaron and his two sons "between the two evenings," raise questions which must perhaps remain unsolved for lack of sufficient information.

The men who were unclean by the "soul" of a man have been conjectured to be Mishael and Elzaphan, the two who were employed to carry out the dead bodies of Nadab and Abihu after they were destroyed by fire from the Lord (see Lev. 10 : 4, 5). This act must have occurred within seven days of the time of this Passover, for the two young priests were stricken on the eighth day of their consecration, and that period did not begin until after the setting up of the tabernacle on the first day of the second year of the exodus (Exod. 40 : 17). Whether, therefore, they were the ones who made their petition to Moses on this occasion or not, they at least must in all probability have been included among those incapacitated. And the freedom, as well as the religious and national zeal, displayed in their remonstrance seems to indicate people of more or less prominence, and men who could approach Moses and Aaron with something of the boldness of relatives—men too, who could lay to their account the circumstance which thus deprived them of the privilege, wherefore are we kept back—all of which corresponds to the character and condition of these two cousins of the high priest at this time. Their conception of the Passover as their oblation or "corban of Jehovah," which they counted it a privilege to offer, is an interesting note of the religious feeling at this nascent period of tabernacle or church life in Israel. The decision regarding their case is reserved for inquiry at the mouth of Jehovah, as was done on a similar occasion (Lev. 24 : 12).

9-14. The result of Moses' inquiry is an ordinance of Jehovah, not only for the present case, but for future generations. The person who is unclean by a "soul," or is on a distant journey at the time of the feast, shall keep the Passover one month later, according to the same method as is prescribed for the regular Passover. This Passover was known among the Jews as the "Little Passover," as it did not include the seven days of unleavened bread. The right to observe it did not extend to those who had failed to keep the regular feast through neglect. Such

15 And on the day that the tabernacle was reared up the cloud covered the tabernacle, namely, the tent of the testimony: and at even there was upon the tabernacle as it were the appearance of fire, until the morning.

16 So it was alway: the cloud covered it by day, and the appearance of fire by night.

17 And when the cloud was taken up from the tabernacle, then after that the children of Israel journeyed: and in the place where the cloud abode, there the children of Israel pitched their tents.

18 At the commandment of the Lord the children of Israel journeyed, and at the commandment of the Lord they pitched: as long as the cloud abode upon the tabernacle they rested in their tents.

19 And when the cloud tarried long upon the tabernacle many days, then the children of Israel kept the charge of the Lord, and journeyed not.

20 And so it was, when the cloud was a few days upon the tabernacle; according to the commandment of the Lord they abode in their tents, and according to the commandment of the Lord they journeyed.

21 And so it was, when the cloud abode from even unto the morning, and that the cloud was taken up in the morning, then they journeyed: whether it was by day or by night that the cloud was taken up, they journeyed.

22 Or whether it were two days, or a month, or a year, that the cloud tarried upon the tabernacle, remaining thereon, the children of Israel abode in their tents, and journeyed not: but when it was taken up, they journeyed.

23 At the commandment of the Lord they rested in the tents, and at the commandment of the Lord they journeyed: they kept the charge of the Lord, at the commandment of the Lord by the hand of Moses.

15 And on the day that the tabernacle was reared up the cloud covered the tabernacle, even the tent of the testimony: and at even it was upon the tabernacle as it were the appearance of fire, until morning. So it was alway: the cloud covered it, and the appearance of fire by night.

17 And whenever the cloud was taken up from over the Tent, then after that the children of Israel journeyed: and in the place where the cloud abode, there the children of Israel encamped.

18 At the commandment of the Lord the children of Israel journeyed, and at the commandment of the Lord they encamped: as long as the cloud abode upon the tabernacle they remained encamped.

19 And when the cloud tarried upon the tabernacle many days, then the children of Israel kept the charge of the Lord, and journeyed not.

20 And sometimes the cloud was a few days upon the tabernacle; then according to the commandment of the Lord they remained encamped, and according to the commandment of the Lord they journeyed.

21 And sometimes the cloud was from evening until morning; and when the cloud was taken up in the morning, they journeyed: or if it continued by day and by night, when the cloud was taken up, they journeyed.

22 Whether it were two days, or a month, or a year, that the cloud tarried upon the tabernacle, abiding thereon, the children of Israel remained encamped, and journeyed not: but remissness must be punished by the severest ecclesiastical penalty. Hezekiah seems to have availed himself of this privilege of keeping the Passover in the second month when he celebrated the feast after his reformation, as he was unable to complete the purification of the temple and the priesthood in time for its observance in the first month (see 2 Chron. 29, 30). As for the foreigner dwelling among the children of Israel who keeps the Passover, he shall conform to the same ordinance as the native born—it being understood, however, according to Exod. 12: 48, 49, that he must first submit to circumcision.

15-23. This section is closely connected with the account of the setting up of the tabernacle given in Exod. 40, and is indeed only an expanded and more circumstantial repetition of the subject-matter of ver. 34-38 of that chapter. The phenomenon of the pillar of cloud by day and of fire by night appeared with the first exodus from Egypt (Exod. 13: 21, seq.); that cloud seems from the first to have so closely and intelligently adapted its movements to the exigencies of the host, not only in leading the way, but in warding off the enemy (ibid., 14: 19, 20), that it seemed to the people clearly supernatural, and associated itself in their mind with the angel of God. Immediately on the completion of the tabernacle the cloud descended and filled it for a time with its radiance, making it impossible for Moses to enter (Exod. 40: 34, 35), as did a similar cloud at the consecration of Solomon's temple (1 Kings 8: 10, 11). The account here in Numbers goes on to say that not only did that cloud cover the tabernacle at the time of its first erection, but so it was all through the journeyings of the children of Israel. The tabernacle which it overshadowed is called the tent of the testimony (ver. 15), meaning the tent where the ark of the testimony was kept; but this is not to be taken as meaning that it covered only the holy of holies, though no doubt it stood centrally over that sacred spot where Jehovah dwelt between the cherubim. The behavior of the cloud became the signal for the people's breaking camp or remaining at rest; when it was lifted they journeyed, and where it settled, there they encamped. Thus they formed the habit of journeying at the "mouth" or command of Jehovah, that command being given through the agency of the cloud and interpreted for the children of Israel by the hand (ver. 23) of Moses.

This thought of a life making no plans of its own, having no prospects which can be anticipated and provided for by human judgment, but regulating all its action by specific divine command from day to day, is one that has

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,
 2 Make thee two trumpets of silver; of a whole piece shalt thou make them: that thou mayest use them for the calling of the assembly, and for the journeying of the camps.
 3 And when they shall blow with them, all the assembly shall assemble themselves to thee at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.
 4 And if they blow but with one trumpet, then the princes, which are heads of the thousands of Israel, shall gather themselves unto thee.
 5 When ye blow an alarm, then the camps that lie on the east parts shall go forward.
 6 When ye blow an alarm the second time, then the camps that lie on the south side shall take their journey: they shall blow an alarm for their journeys.
 7 But when the congregation is to be gathered together, ye shall blow, but ye shall not sound an alarm.
 8 And the sons of Aaron, the priests, shall blow with the trumpets; and they shall be to you for an ordinance for ever throughout your generations.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,
 2 Make thee two trumpets of silver; of beaten work shalt thou make them: and thou shalt use them for the calling of the congregation, and for the journeying of the camps. And when they shall blow with them, all the congregation shall gather themselves unto thee at the door of the tent of meeting. And if they blow but with one, then the princes, the heads of the thousands of Israel, shall gather themselves unto thee.
 5 And when ye blow an alarm, the camps that lie on the east side shall take their journey. And when ye blow an alarm the second time, the camps that lie on the south side shall take their journey: they shall blow an alarm for their journeys. always been attractive to those of most fervent piety and nearest walk with God. It is especially inspiring in relation to that aspect of our life which is like the journeying of the children of Israel, its temporariness and its uncertainty. Those are wisest who form the habit of holding their schemes subject to God's permission, and saying, "If the Lord will, we shall both live, and do this or that" (James 4 : 15). Yet such a piecemeal guidance by direct supernatural agency, attractive and infallible as it appears, would contribute only a one-sided development to the godward character. It might emphasize the existence and importance of the spiritual world (Deut. 8 : 3), but it would not, as a permanent discipline, develop spiritual judgment or self-reliance. Those in perpetual tutelage remain perpetually children. And it is to be noted that the daily sight of the supernatural did not, after all, prevent the children of Israel from missing their goal through unbelief. This visible parental conducting of the life has its lesson and stimulus for the Christian, but it presents us only one side of the pattern to which our spiritual growth is to conform. This is what God does for his people when he is carrying them as the eagle carries her young on her wings (Exod. 19 : 4; Deut. 32 : 11). We are not to reckon ourselves necessarily remiss in faith or immediate amenability to the divine command because our own higher life is more predominantly guided by our educated judgment and initiative. This may be the sign of greater maturity rather than of greater remoteness from God. But meanwhile let us also be inspired by this child-like journeying of God's people to wait in unquestioning faith for the direct guidance of God in that aspect of our inner life to which it applies. However wise or far-sighted we may train ourselves to be in following that part of the will of God which reveals itself to sanctified good sense, there ever and anon arise crises which bring home to us our helplessness and short-sightedness as those of higher citizenship journeying through an unknown desert. It is then that our highest wisdom will be found in reverting, with childlike spirit, to the pattern of that guidance vouchsafed to the children of God so long ago, and watching intently for the signs of God's specific mandate given, if not in direct supernatural revelation, at least in the spiritual interpretation of his daily providences, while in self-effacement we pray:

Keep thou my feet; I do not ask to see
 The distant scene, one step enough for me.

Chap. 10. 1-10. THE SILVER TRUMPETS AND THEIR USE. The kind of trumpet here mentioned was probably a straight and somewhat slender tube expanding into a bell shape, as described by Josephus, Ant., III., 12 : 6. It thus differed from the שופר, shophar, or cornet, which was crooked and often made of the horn of a ram or chamois. Representations of the straight trumpet are found on the Arch of Titus. Evidently these silver trumpets were intended as a sacred instrument, to be used only by the priests for the calling of the congregation and on occasions where the orders or reminders given were to be taken as divine; as on the breaking up of the camp, or at the time of set feasts, or on occasions of religious rejoicing. They were thought of, not only as Jehovah's instrument for calling to the nation, but as their instrument for calling to him. When the nation went to war against the oppressor in 9 And if ye go to war in your land against the enemy that oppresseth you, then ye shall blow an alarm with the trumpets; and ye shall be remembered before the Lord your God, and ye shall be saved from your enemies.

10 Also in the day of your gladness, and in your solemn days, and in the beginnings of your months, ye shall blow with the trumpets over your burnt offerings, and over the sacrifices of your peace offerings; that they may be to you for a memorial before your God: I am the Lord your God.

9 throughout your generations. And when ye go to war in your land against the adversary that oppresseth you, then ye shall sound an alarm with the trumpets; and ye shall be remembered before the Lord your God, and ye shall be saved from your enemies. Also in the day of your gladness, and in your set feasts, and in the beginnings of your months, ye shall blow with the trumpets over your burnt offerings, and over the sacrifices of your peace offerings; and they shall be to you for a memorial before your God: I am the Lord your God.

their land, the blast of these trumpets would remind Jehovah of their distress and bring him to the rescue (ver. 9). Whether in war or on occasions of festivity, the trumpets were to serve the general purpose of a reminder, memorial (ver. 10), or symbol of the power to summon a gracious God. In that war of vengeance against the Midianites in which Balaam was slain, the zealous Phinehas carried the silver trumpets, along with other temple utensils, into the battle (31 : 6). Abijah the king of Judah, in his battle for the succession against Jeroboam the usurper, made the presence in the host of the legitimate priests with the trumpets of alarm a great ground of confidence as he made his battle-taunt (2 Chron. 13 : 12); and indeed the timely sounding of these instruments served to remind the army of Judah, even though surprised and surrounded, of the help of God, and to turn panic into victory (ibid., ver. 14, 15). The same sort of straight trumpets to the number of one hundred and twenty was used in the temple band at the dedication of Solomon's temple (2 Chron. 5 : 12); but whether these instruments were regarded as of equal official sacredness with the original and divinely ordained two may be doubted.

When both trumpets were blown with short blasts the congregation was to assemble at the door of the tent of meeting, while a similar signal with one trumpet summoned only the princes or heads of the host. A long, full blast, or תְּרוּעָה, t'ru'ah, was the signal for the camps on the east side, or the van, to take up the line of march. A second long blast brought the camps on the south side to their feet; and the Septuagint adds as the natural conclusion of the command that the third blast was to set in motion the camps on the west, and the fourth the northward camps which brought up the rear. With this account of the trumpets and their uses ends the history of the sojourn at Sinai.

PART SECOND. THE JOURNEY FROM SINAI TO THE STEPPES OF MOAB. CHAPTERS 10 : 11 TO 22 : 1.

This section of the book of Numbers gives us practically all the history we have of the wilderness wandering of nearly forty years. With the exception of a few months at the beginning and end of the period, the whole time is spent in the neighborhood of Kadesh. The children of Israel start on their journey from Sinai and come to the wilderness of Paran; but on their way to that wilderness occurs the incident of the phenomenal flight of quails with its sequel of a more or less protracted period of sickness in the host. At Kadesh in the wilderness of Paran, a place which communicates by the Amorite hill-road with the Negeb or south country of Canaan, spies are sent out to reconnoitre and bring back a description of the Promised Land, but on account of their unfavorable report and the consequent murmuring of the congregation the people are doomed to wander in the wilderness until that whole generation has passed away. The principal incident of this wandering of which we have an account is the rebellion of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, with the divine disclosure of the choice of Aaron which accompanied it. At the end of the long wandering the tribes are again gathered at Kadesh where Miriam dies, and Moses and Aaron, for their conduct at the waters of Meribah, are sentenced to failure in bringing the people into the Promised Land. The journey around the south end of the Dead Sea begun, Aaron dies and is buried at Mount Hor; the people being refused permission to pass through the territory of Edom, take the Elanitic gulf route, and at length, after various vicissitudes, arrive at the country of the Amorite Sihon, east of the Jordan, over whom they gain a decisive victory, and then exultantly take possession of the territory which he has recently wrested from Moab. As their men of war pass northward in the act of completing the conquest of the Amorites, their advance is disputed by Og the king of Bashan, whom they overcome in a similarly decisive manner. The section leaves 11 And it came to pass on the twentieth day of the second month, in the second year, that the cloud was taken up from off the tabernacle of the testimony.

12 And the children of Israel took their journeys out of the wilderness of Sinai; and the cloud rested in the wilderness of Paran.

13 And they first took their journey according to the commandment of the Lord by the hand of Moses.

14 In the first place went the standard of the camp of the children of Judah according to their armies: and over his host was Nahshon the son of Amminadab.

15 And over the host of the tribe of the children of Issachar was Nethaneel the son of Zuar.

16 And over the host of the tribe of the children of Zebulun was Eliab the son of Helon.

17 And the tabernacle was taken down; and the sons of Gershon and the sons of Merari set forward, bearing the tabernacle.

18 And the standard of the camp of Reuben set forward according to their armies: and over his host was Elizur the son of Shedeur.

19 And over the host of the tribe of the children of Simeon was Shelumiel the son of Zurishaddai.

20 And over the host of the tribe of the children of Gad was Eliasaph the son of Deuel.

21 And the Kohathites set forward, bearing the sanctuary: and the other did set up the tabernacle against they came.

22 And the standard of the camp of the children of Ephraim set forward according to their armies: and over his host was Elishama the son of Ammihud.

23 And over the host of the tribe of the children of Manasseh was Gamaliel the son of Pedahzur.

24 And over the host of the tribe of the children of Benjamin was Abidan the son of Gideon.

25 And the standard of the camp of the children of Dan set forward, which was the rearward of all the camps throughout their hosts: and over his host was Ahiezer the son of Ammishaddai.

26 And over the host of the tribe of the children of Asher was Pagiel the son of Ocran.

27 And over the host of the tribe of the children of Naphtali was Ahira the son of Enan.

28 Thus were the journeyings of the children of Israel according to their armies, when they set forward.

11 And it came to pass in the second year, in the second month, on the twentieth day of the month, that the cloud was taken up from over the tabernacle of the testimony.

12 And the children of Israel set forward according to their journeys out of the wilderness of Sinai; and the cloud abode in the wilderness of Paran.

15 according to their hosts: and over his host was Nahshon the son of Amminadab. And over the 16 host of the tribe of the children of Issachar was Nethanel the son of Zuar. And over the host

17 of the tribe of the children of Zebulun was Eliab the son of Helon. And the tabernacle was 18 taken down; and the sons of Gershon and the sons of Merari, who bare the tabernacle, set forward.

19 And the standard of the camp of Reuben set forward according to their hosts: and over his

20 host was Elizur the son of Shedeur. And over the host of the tribe of the children of Simeon

21 was Shelumiel the son of Zurishaddai. And over the host of the tribe of the children of Gad

22 was Eliasaph the son of Deuel. And the Kohathites set forward, bearing the sanctuary:

23 and the other did set up the tabernacle against they came. And the standard of the camp

24 of the children of Ephraim set forward according to their hosts: and over his host was Elishama

25 the son of Ammihud. And over the host of the tribe of the children of Manasseh was Gamaliel

26 the son of Pedahzur. And over the host of the tribe of the children of Benjamin was Abidan the 27 son of Gideon. And the standard of the camp of the children of Dan, which was the rearward of all

28 the camps, set forward according to their hosts: and over his host was Ahiezer the son of Am-

29 mishaddai. And over the host of the tribe of the children of Asher was Pagiel the son of them in the Steppes of Moab over against Jericho, the object of apprehension and dislike to all their neighbors. Several chapters of Levitical regulations are inserted from the priestly sources without obvious connection with the history.

31 Thus were the journeyings of the children of Israel according to their hosts; and they set forward.

11-36. DEPARTURE OF THE CHILDREN OF ISRAEL FROM MOUNT SINAI. HOBAB SECURED AS A GUIDE. FUNCTIONS OF THE ARK IN DIRECTING THE MOVEMENTS OF THE HOST. The children of Israel had now been staying in the wilderness of Sinai nearly a full year (cf. Exod. 19 : 1), during which time the tabernacle had been reared, the Levitical law given, and the numbering and organizing of the camp for marching and for tabernacle service effected. Verse twelve relates in a summary way, and by anticipation, the protracted resting of the cloud in the wilderness of Paran where the people were sentenced to a forty years' wandering; but between Sinai and that place there were at least two encampings, at

Kibroth-hattaawah and at Hazeroth (11 : 34, 35 ; 12 : 16). This wilderness of Paran was the half of the northern portion of the peninsula between Egypt and Canaan, which lies east of the river of Egypt and the desert of Shur, and west of the Arabah or deep valley stretching southward from the Dead Sea to the Gulf of Akabah. It is known to the modern Arabs as Budiet et Tih, or Desert of the Wandering. It is parted from the mountainous region of Sinai by a great sand belt extending across the peninsula from gulf to gulf, in which belt were the two stations, Kibroth-hattaawah and Hazeroth.

After a rather meaningless verse (13) which furnishes an excuse for a description of the order of march, the priestly author repeats the names of the leaders of the tribes and the arrangement of march already given in chap. 2, in something of the spirit of delight in the elaboration of detail which prompted the extraordinary repetitions of the seventh chapter. A variation is introduced in the placing of the 29 And Moses said unto Hobab, the son of Raguel the Midianite, Moses' father in law, We are journeying unto the place of which the Lord said, I will give it you: come thou with us, and we will do thee good: for the Lord hath spoken good concerning Israel.

30 And he said unto him, I will not go; but I will depart to mine own land, and to my kindred.

31 And he said, Leave us not, I pray thee; forasmuch as thou knowest how we are to encamp in the wilderness, and thou mayest be to us instead of eyes.

32 And it shall be, if thou go with us, yea, it shall be, that what goodness the Lord shall do unto us, the same will we do unto thee.

33 And they departed from the mount of the Lord three days' journey: and the ark of the covenant of the Lord went before them in the three days' journey, to search out a resting place for them.

34 And the cloud of the Lord was upon them by day, when they went out of the camp.

35 And it came to pass, when the ark set forward, that Moses said, Rise up, Lord, and let thine enemies be scattered; and let them that hate thee flee before thee.

36 And when it rested, he said, Return, O Lord, unto the many thousands of Israel.

29 And Moses said unto Hobab, the son of Reuel the Midianite, Moses' father in law, We are journeying unto the place of which the Lord said, I will give it you: come thou with us, and we will do thee good: for the Lord hath spoken

30 good concerning Israel. And he said unto him, I will not go; but I will depart to mine own

31 land, and to my kindred. And he said, Leave us not, I pray thee; forasmuch as thou knowest how we are to encamp in the wilderness, and 32 thou shalt be to us instead of eyes. And it shall be, if thou go with us, yea, it shall be, that what good soever the Lord shall do unto us, the same will we do unto thee.

33 And they set forward from the mount of the Lord three days' journey; and the ark of the covenant of the Lord went before them three days' journey, to seek out a resting place for 34 them. And the cloud of the Lord was over them by day, when they set forward from the camp.

35 And it came to pass, when the ark set forward, that Moses said, Rise up, O Lord, and let thine enemies be scattered; and let them that hate tabernacle between the first and second groups of three tribes in the line of march instead of between the second and third, as in chap. 2, and in the bringing of the most holy furniture three tribes behind, or in the original place of the whole tabernacle, that it might find the tent pitched in readiness for it when it arrived at the place of encamping.

29-32. It is not possible to determine with certainty whether Hobab or Reuel was the same as Jethro, and therefore whether Hobab was father-in-law or brother-in-law of Moses. The word חָתָן, chothen, here translated father-in-law, may possibly mean any relation on the wife's side, and in this passage the word may be in apposition either with Hobab or Reuel. If Reuel in Exod. 2 : 18 is the same as Jethro in 3 : 1, it appears more probable that Hobab, Reuel's son, was Moses' brother-in-law, but on the other hand, the narrative in Exod. 2 : 16 seems to preclude the idea that the priest of Midian had sons. It is said in Exod. 18 : 27 that Jethro, after his visit to Moses here at Sinai, was allowed to depart to his home; while from the present passage it seems to be implied that Hobab was prevailed upon to go with the children of Israel and act as their guide. We find from Judg. 1 : 16 and 4 : 11 that the descendants of Hobab, there called Kenites, were settled in Canaan, having thus obtained the fulfillment of the promise in verse thirty-two, and their ancestor's services to the children of Israel while in the wilderness were long held in grateful remembrance (1 Sam. 15 : 6). The narrative in this paragraph, as well as in the remainder of the chapter, is conjectured by critics to be derived from a different original source from the book of Numbers, or indeed of Leviticus, thus far, being the first occurrence in these books of material derived from the so-called JE document.

33-36. From this passage, which is believed to be from the JE source, the ark seems to be differently related to the host and to the tabernacle paraphernalia from what it is in the later and more elaborate temple organization of the priest document. Instead of being carefully wrapped and kept with the other material and furniture of the sanctuary, guarded front and rear by the two halves of the host, it appears to be the leader of the marching congregation, going far in advance in order to seek out a resting place for the camp and carrying the overshadowing cloud with it. This corresponds with the prominence given to it in the crossing of the Jordan (Josh. 3 : 3, 4), and to some extent in the siege of Jericho, where it is borne by priests (Josh. 6 : 4), though there it is accompanied by a vanguard and rearguard of armed men (ibid., 9). It seems to have been regarded as a palladium in the early history of Canaan (1 Sam. 4).

The movement of the ark appears to be taken as the central and official act in the movement of the host, especially in the formula for breaking camp and halting in ver. 35, 36. Here Moses addresses Jehovah as if he were symbolically embodied in the ark, the consciousness of his presence in the cloud, characteristic of the priestly narrative (see 9 : 15-23), being here entirely replaced by a sense of the divine identity with his written testimony. The sublime bit of poetry here given awakens a re-echoing note in the later songs of the people (Ps. 68 : 1; 132 : 8)

CHAPTER XI.

1 AND when the people complained, it displeased the Lord: and the Lord heard it; and his anger was kindled; and the fire of the Lord burnt among them, and consumed them that were in the uttermost parts of the camp.

2 And the people cried unto Moses; and when Moses prayed unto the Lord, the fire was quenched.

3 And he called the name of the place Taberah: because the fire of the Lord burnt among them.

4 And the mixt multitude that was among them fell a lusting: and the children of Israel also wept again, and said, Who shall give us flesh to eat?

5 We remember the fish, which we did eat in Egypt freely; the cucumbers, and the melons, and the leeks, and the onions, and the garlick:

6 But now our soul is dried away: there is nothing at all, beside this manna, before our eyes.

7 And the manna was as coriander seed, and the colour thereof as the colour of bdellium.

8 And the people went about, and gathered it, and ground it in mills, or beat it in a mortar, and baked it in pans, and made cakes of it: and the taste of it was as the taste of fresh oil.

9 And when the dew fell upon the camp in the night, the manna fell upon it.

10 Then Moses heard the people weep throughout their families, every man in the door of his tent: and the anger of the Lord was kindled greatly; Moses also was displeased.

11 And Moses said unto the Lord, Wherefore hast thou afflicted thy servant? and wherefore have I not found favour in thy sight, that thou layest the burden of all this people upon me?

12 Have I conceived all this people? have I begotten them, that thou shouldest say unto me, Carry them in thy bosom, as a nursing father beareth the suckling child, unto the land which thou swarest unto their fathers?

1 AND the people were as murmurers, speaking evil in the ears of the Lord: and when the Lord heard it, his anger was kindled; and the fire of the Lord burnt among them, and devoured in

2 the uttermost part of the camp. And the people cried unto Moses; and Moses prayed unto the

6 and the garlick: but now our soul is dried away; there is nothing at all: we have nought

7 save this manna to look to. And the manna was like coriander seed, and the appearance

8 thereof as the appearance of bdellium. The people went about, and gathered it, and ground it in mills, or beat it in mortars, and seethed it in pots, and made cakes of it: and the taste of

9 it was as the taste of fresh oil. And when the dew fell upon the camp in the night, the manna

10 fell upon it. And Moses heard the people weeping throughout their families, every man at the door of his tent: and the anger of the Lord was kindled greatly; and Moses was displeased.

11 And Moses said unto the Lord, Wherefore hast thou evil entreated thy servant? and wherefore have I not found favour in thy sight, that thou layest the burden of all this people upon me?

12 Have I conceived all this people? have I brought them forth, that thou shouldest say unto me, Carry them in thy bosom, as a nursing-father carrieth the suckling child, unto the land which

Chap. 11. THE MURMURING OF THE PEOPLE AT TABERAH AND KIBROTH-HATAWAH. APPOINTMENT OF SEVENTY ELDERS TO ASSIST MOSES. QUAILS GIVEN TO SATISFY THE PEOPLE. 1-3. And when the people complained, etc. Rather, And the people were as those that complain in the ears of Jehovah of something bad. What was the subject of their complaint is not stated. In Ps. 78 : 20, 21 the occasion is poetically described as a questioning whether God would provide bread and flesh for the people. Evidently a fire which broke out at the extremity of the camp was accounted for as a judgment from Jehovah, and it apparently subsided at the intercession of Moses. The place Taberah is not generally reckoned as one of the stations in the wilderness journey, as the itinerary in chap. 33 places Kibroth-Hataawah immediately after the wilderness of Sinai (ibid., ver. 16) in the order of stations. It is perhaps only the part of the camp at Kibroth-Hataawah where the fire broke out.

4-15. The mixt multitude (ver. 4). The Hebrew word is an onomatopoeic coinage, like "riff-raff." A mixed multitude is mentioned at Exod. 12 : 38 as accompanying the Israelites from Egypt. These people, being less uplifted and sustained by the religious hopes of the nation, would be the first to be discontented. Their dissatisfaction seems to have infected the Israelites themselves, so that they returned and wept, i. e., perhaps repeated the murmurings mentioned in Exod. 16 : 2, 3. A sort of nervous contagion, such as sometimes mysteriously sweeps through crowds, seems to have produced a general hysteria, so that the noise of weeping could be heard from every tent like a universal cry (ver. 10). It was not the fear of starvation this time, as at Exod. 16, leading them to remember the substantial food of Egypt, but a distaste for the monotony of their single divinely sent staple, making them long inordinately for flesh and fish and fresh vegetables. On another occasion they expressed it, "Our soul loatheth this light bread" (21 : 5). The Nile in Egypt is said to abound in fish, and the cucumbers and melons in that country are particularly choice, and the onions mild and appetizing. The writer takes occasion to describe the manna and its method of preparation somewhat more in detail than in Exod. 16 : 31. In both places it is described as like coriander seed; in Exodus it is said to have been white in color, and here to have been in appearance like bdellium, a substance mentioned in Gen. 2 : 12, but not well known. The manna appears to have been a dry 13 Whence should I have flesh to give unto all this people? for they weep unto me, saying, Give us flesh, that we may eat.

14 I am not able to bear all this people alone, because it is too heavy for me.

15 And if thou deal thus with me, kill me, I pray thee, out of hand, if I have found favour in thy sight; and let me not see my wretchedness.

16 And the Lord said unto Moses, Gather unto me seventy men of the elders of Israel, whom thou knowest to be the elders of the people, and officers over them; and bring them unto the tabernacle of the congregation, that they may stand there with thee.

17 And I will come down and talk with thee there: and I will take of the spirit which is upon thee, and will put it upon them; and they shall bear the burden of the people with thee, that thou bear it not thyself alone.

18 And say thou unto the people, Sanctify yourselves against to-morrow, and ye shall eat flesh: for ye have wept in the ears of the Lord, saying, Who shall give us flesh to eat? for it was well with us in Egypt: therefore the Lord will give you flesh, and ye shall eat.

19 Ye shall not eat one day, nor two days, nor five days, neither ten days, nor twenty days;

20 But even a whole month, until it come out at your nostrils, and it be loathsome unto you: because that ye have despised the Lord which is among you, and have wept before him, saying, Why came we forth out of Egypt?

21 And Moses said, The people, among whom I am, are six hundred thousand footmen; and thou hast said, I will give them flesh, that they may eat a whole month.

22 Shall the flocks and the herds be slain for them, to suffice them? or shall all the fish of the sea be gathered together for them, to suffice them?

13 thou swarest unto their fathers? Whence should I have flesh to give unto all this people? for they weep unto me, saying, Give us flesh, that we may eat. I am not able to bear all this people alone, because it is too heavy for me. And if thou deal thus with me, kill me, I pray thee, out of hand, if I have found favour in thy sight; and let me not see my wretchedness.

16 And the Lord said unto Moses, Gather unto me seventy men of the elders of Israel, whom thou knowest to be the elders of the people, and officers over them; and bring them unto the tent of meeting, that they may stand there

17 with thee. And I will come down and talk with thee there: and I will take of the spirit which is upon thee, and will put it upon them; and they shall bear the burden of the people with thee, that thou bear it not thyself alone.

18 And say thou unto the people, Sanctify yourselves against to-morrow, and ye shall eat flesh: for ye have wept in the ears of the Lord, saying, Who shall give us flesh to eat? for it was well with us in Egypt: therefore the Lord will give you

19 flesh, and ye shall eat. Ye shall not eat one day, nor two days, nor five days, neither ten

20 days, nor twenty days; but a whole month, until it come out at your nostrils, and it be loathsome unto you: because that ye have rejected the Lord which is among you, and have wept before him, saying, Why came we forth enough substance so that it could be reduced to meal and baked, tasting, it is said, like a "moist cake of oil." The description is probably introduced to show the unreasonableness of complaint, at least on the ground of its unpleasantness.

The patience of Moses was sorely tried, and he seems to have felt a sort of disgust for his task, as if it were that of taking care of a lot of babies. His complaint takes the form of remonstrance with Jehovah for thus subjecting him to a kind and degree of penance to which death were preferable. It is especially in view of the apparently impossible demand that he should provide the multitude with flesh that he is thrown into perplexity; and the burden of the whole people, which to his overtaxed mind seems to rest upon him alone, impresses him as too heavy for him to bear.

16-22. The appointment of elders to assist Moses seems to have been a fascinating subject to the Hebrew narrators, as it recurs in several places and in connection with various exigencies. Twice the elders are spoken of as appointed for secular judges, and twice they are summoned to be brought into touch with the greater supernatural manifestations of Jehovah's presence. In Exod. 18 the appointment of elders to be subordinate rulers and judges is represented as being suggested by Jethro on the occasion of his visit to Moses to bring him his wife and children, though in Deuteronomy (1 : 9-18) Moses speaks as if he made the request for such a college of assistants of his own accord. On the one other occasion besides this on which the number seventy is specified (Exod. 24) the elders accompanied Moses into Mount Sinai and saw the glory of Jehovah, in some such way as the seventy are impressed to ecstasy with his glory here. Evidently the help which Moses needed, and which was held out to him on this occasion, is not simply a relieving him of detail work, but such a participation in and sympathy with his inner life as should lighten that awful sense of loneliness which was the principal ground of his complaint. Something of his spirit was to be put upon them (ver. 17), so that they could mentally bear his burden with him. Sometimes mental or spiritual sympathy is worth far more than routine help, even though it perform no act of assistance. The precise official functions of these elders are obscure; but it is quite evident that they did not form a permanent body which was continued through the history of the nation and revived in the Sanhedrin after the exile, as the Talmudists and the rabbins imagine.

As for the people, Moses is directed to issue orders that they sanctify or prepare themselves by ceremonial purifications for the morrow, 23 And the Lord said unto Moses, Is the Lord's hand waxed short? thou shalt see now whether my word shall come to pass unto thee or not.

24 And Moses went out, and told the people the words of the Lord, and gathered the seventy men of the elders of the people, and set them round about the tabernacle.

25 And the Lord came down in a cloud, and spake unto him, and took of the spirit that was upon him, and gave it unto the seventy elders: and it came to pass, that, when the spirit rested upon them, they prophesied, and did not cease.

26 But there remained two of the men in the 23 And the Lord said unto Moses, Is the Lord's hand waxed short? now shalt thou see whether my word shall come to pass unto thee or not.

24 And Moses went out, and told the people the words of the Lord: and he gathered seventy men of the elders of the people, and set them

25 round about the Tent. And the Lord came down in the cloud, and spake unto him, and took of the spirit that was upon him, and put it upon the seventy elders: and it came to pass, that, when the spirit rested upon them, they 26 prophesied, but they did so no more. But there with the half-promise, half-threat, that they shall eat flesh for a whole month of days, until it comes out of their nostrils and becomes loathsome to them. How this prediction shall be fulfilled is as mysterious to Moses as to the rest of the people, so that in a bewildered way he casts about in his mind for some conceivable means by which it could possibly be accomplished (ver. 21, 22).

23-35. After being reminded of the power of Jehovah and enjoined to hold himself in readiness for a manifestation of it, Moses goes out of the tent and reports Jehovah's words to the people. Then according to directions he assembles seventy of the elders of the people in the neighborhood of the sanctuary. The glory-cloud begins to descend. Nearer and nearer it comes, overspreading their sky, enveloping them with an impressive obscuration, filling them with awe as it isolates them from all their visible surroundings. Of another company in New Testament times, similarly overshadowed with a cloud of glory, it was written, "They feared as they entered into the cloud" (Luke 9: 34). Presently the cloud, as often before, became communicative to Moses; and now all at once the seventy, through some electrical thrill of sympathy, were penetrated by a marvelous sense of the divine greatness, and in the intensest excitement they began to speak what they felt. Moses' spirit was communicated to them, not by the ordinary means of inculcation, that is, articulate speech and believing assent, but by a transfer of his mental standpoint to their consciousness, so that they perceived spiritual truth directly, as he did. The moment they were raised to Moses' point of view their unaccustomed souls were excited to the point of ecstasy. The account says (ver. 25) that they prophesied, but "did not add," i. e., did not continue to speak ecstatically (see R. V.). This perhaps does not imply that they soon lost their new perception of truth, but rather that after becoming more accustomed to the new and wonderful outlook they took the experience more sanely, having developed into elevated and spiritually minded men who could be a genuine help and reliance for Moses in dealing with the discontented people.

In this early manifestation of a phenomenon destined to become characteristic of Hebrew religion, we have an indication of the essential nature of all prophecy. The prophet is raised above the realm of faith into the realm of sight; but the sight of God, be it observed, is not a sight which tends to picturableness in terms of visible form, but a sight which tends to formulableness in terms of speech. The self-revealed God is a Word. God's formula, symbol, or in Bible language his name, is all the sight of God that is revealable to human perception (cf. Exod. 33: 18, 19; 34: 5, seq.). Hence direct perception of God issues in speech, unstudied, compelled, impulsive, or ecstatic, according to the degree of nervous excitement which the perception induces. A historical note in regard to the prophet as a character (see 1 Sam. 9: 9) chronicles the fact that he was at first described by his mental status and power as a seer, but afterward by his characteristic habit of impulsive speaking as a נָבִי, nabi, or prophet. It hardly needs to be said that prophesying is not necessarily, or even predominantly, a foretelling of future events, but simply a speaking forth of the things of God from direct perception. If it seem a matter of regret that so small a portion of the truth perceived by the Scripture characters who were on various occasions prophetically endowed is preserved for the use of the world, it is worthy of being pointed out that probably only the lowest stratum of such truth is capable of being brought within the realm of ordinary inculcation so as to be laid hold of by assent or faith. Only that part of prophetic truth becomes useful for common guidance which can commend itself to the ordinary sense of value by attaching itself to some practical issue of life. The heavenly words which Paul heard it was not possible or lawful to utter (2 Cor. 12: 4).

Two of the men (ver. 26) included in the written list—which must have comprised seventy-camp, the name of the one was Eldad, and the name of the other Medad: and the spirit rested upon them; and they were of them that were written, but went not out unto the tabernacle: and they prophesied in the camp.

27 And there ran a young man, and told Moses, and said, Eldad and Medad do prophesy in the camp.

28 And Joshua the son of Nun, the servant of Moses, one of his young men, answered and said, My lord Moses, forbid them.

29 And Moses said unto him, Enviest thou for my sake? would God that all the Lord's people were prophets, and that the Lord would put his spirit upon them!

30 And Moses gat him into the camp, he and the elders of Israel.

31 And there went forth a wind from the Lord, and brought quails from the sea, and let them fall by the camp, as it were a day's journey on this side, and as it were a day's journey on the other side, round about the camp, and as it were two cubits high upon the face of the earth.

32 And the people stood up all that day, and all that night, and all the next day, and they gathered the quails: he that gathered least gathered ten homers: and they spread them all abroad for themselves round about the camp.

33 And while the flesh was yet between their teeth, ere it was chewed, the wrath of the Lord remained two men in the camp, the name of the one was Eldad, and the name of the other Medad: and the spirit rested upon them; and they were of them that were written, but had not gone out unto the Tent: and they prophesied 27 in the camp. And there ran a young man, and told Moses, and said, Eldad and Medad do

28 prophesy in the camp. And Joshua the son of Nun, the minister of Moses, one of his chosen men, answered and said, My lord Moses, forbid
29 them. And Moses said unto him, Art thou jealous for my sake? would God that all the Lord's people were prophets, that the Lord 30 would put his spirit upon them! And Moses gat him into the camp, he and the elders of 31 Israel. And there went forth a wind from the Lord, and brought quails from the sea, and let them fall by the camp, about a day's journey on this side, and a day's journey on the other side, round about the camp, and about two cubits
32 above the face of the earth. And the people rose up all that day, and all the night, and all the next day, and gathered the quails: he that gathered least gathered ten homers: and they spread them all abroad for themselves round 33 about the camp. While the flesh was yet between their teeth, ere it was chewed, the anger

two, perhaps six to a tribe—had for some reason not gone to the tent of meeting with the other seventy; and yet these men were infected with the same spirit and began to attract attention by prophesying in the camp. This breaking out of the higher manifestations of religion amid commonplace and secular surroundings was impressively noticeable, and with the idea that something was wrong a young man without loss of time ran to inform Moses. Joshua, the son of Nun, Moses' attendant from his youth (ver. 28, see R. V. Margin), who was with Moses at the tabernacle and had seen the whole spectacle of the seventy, which to the eye of his delighted loyalty so enhanced the glory of his master, could not bear an outbreak so irregular and so independent of constituted authority as this of Eldad and Medad. Joshua's instincts were military (cf. Exod. 32 : 17), and along with the tactician's sense of Moses' prerogative, there was also in his mental make-up a certain deficiency which prevented him from realizing the superiority of the free spirit to tactical commands. He would have had his master suppress the irregular manifestation, even of the divine Spirit. To his mind everything from God must come through Moses. It is the old conflict, always cropping out because there are always opposite sorts of mind, between the sense for order and the sense for freedom. Moses, who was himself sufficiently insistent on orderly methods (cf. com. on Lev. 10 : 16-20), was nevertheless so fully inspired, and withal so meek, as to rejoice in whatever indicated God's presence with his people, even though it was apparently independent of his initiative. He could wish that the spiritual perception and free utterance of Eldad and Medad were universal. As Dillmann remarks: "It is the highest goal of the church of which Moses has here a glimpse (essentially according to John 3), and to attain this goal is the true man's highest wish, not the defending of his personal honor."

The meeting at the tabernacle being broken up, and Moses having returned to the camp, there followed the fulfillment of Jehovah's second promise. A strong wind, called a wind from Jehovah, and in Ps. 78 : 26 designated as a southeast wind, brought a flock of quails from the direction of the Elanitic gulf and spread them over the camp, flying about two cubits above the earth and covering the space of a day's journey in each direction. This seems to be the meaning of ver. 31, rather than that they fell in solid heaps two cubits high, as the Authorized version seems to imply. The quail is said to hang upon the wind in its flying, and when wearied it flies low, so that these birds could easily be grasped. Many of them no doubt also fell to the ground from exhaustion. The people fell to with the utmost eagerness, and gathered and dressed quails all that day and night and the next day, so that ten chomers, or fifty to sixty bushels, was accounted a small portion. No doubt they ate greedily during this time, and yet unable to make use of them all while they were fresh the people spread them out to dry in the sun all about the camp. Their unrestrained greediness, after so long a period of comparative abstinence, brought on its consequences of disgust and deathly sickness, so that in many instances people died with their mouths full (ver. 33). The great pestilence which followed was attributed to the anger of Jehovah; and so many were the graves of those that died that the place was called Kibroth-Hattaawah, or Graves of Greediness.

The next stopping-place after Kibroth-Hattaawah, where they must have stayed at least a month, was a place called Hazeroth, a name meaning, "fenced enclosures." Attempts to identify the place with Haderah, which is apparently too far east, or with El Ain, are conjectures carrying little or no certainty, as the name Hazeroth is one that could be applied to many places.

Chap. 12. REBELLION OF MIRIAM AND AARON AGAINST MOSES, AND MIRIAM'S LEPROSY. 1-9. Miriam is called in Exod. 15: 20 "the prophetess, the sister of Aaron," and she is mentioned in Micah 6: 4 as one of the three leaders of Israel from Egypt. She was no doubt the sister who watched the infant Moses when he was placed in the flags by the river, and procured the mother as his nurse when he was discovered (Exod. 2: 7, 8). The prominence given to Miriam in this chapter, and the emphasis put upon prophecy as a source of honor, have led modern critics quite unanimously to assign this chapter to the source called E. The Cushite or Ethiopian woman cannot have been the same as the Midianite Zipporah (see Exod. 2: 21), styled an Ethiopian by Miriam in contempt and because of her dark skin, for the author takes pains to add the explanation—omitted, however, in the Vulgate—"for he had married a Cushite woman." It is supposed that Zipporah had died and Moses had married a new wife, though there is no other mention of this fact; and the supposition requires that all this bereavement and readjustment of Moses' domestic relations took place with a considerable degree of expedition, for it was but a short while since Zipporah was alive and well (Exod. 18: 2). Josephus and the Targum of Jonathan preserve the tradition that Moses, while still a prince of Egypt and previous to his flight to Midian, married the Ethiopian princess of Meroë (Jos., Ant., II., 10: 2), but it is difficult to see, in the absence of further detail, how that fact should start up an outbreak at this late day. The whole biblical account of the early domestic relations of Moses is so full of omissions and apparent redactional glosses as to render the precise facts very obscure. What relation Moses' marriage had to his preeminence as the medium for the divine revelations is not clear. All we can see is that Miriam's irritation and perhaps outraged national pride at Moses' domestic arrangements issued in an attack on his assumed exclusiveness in exercising the prophetic function.

That attack appears to have been nothing else but an expression of pure envy. Miriam was looking only at the honor of being a recognized prophet—an honor which in Moses' case had received great augmentation by recent events. This honor was the last thing in Moses' thoughts. So noticeably indeed was this the case that the author says Moses was the meekest of men upon the face of the earth. Far from his mind was it to claim that the Lord had spoken only by him. Even Eldad's and Medad's prophesying in the camp, so irregular as to seem to many an irreverent procedure, was welcomed by Moses with the wish that such things might be general. All that Miriam needed in order to get everything she was claiming was to go to work and prophesy; Moses would have been as glad to see the gift in her as in any of the rest of the Lord's people. It looks as if Miriam's prophetic gift which she had once exercised was no longer active, but had sunk into a memory and a claim. She was taking the course which has again and again been taken in the church in all ages: instead of 4 And the Lord spake suddenly unto Moses, and unto Aaron, and unto Miriam, Come out ye three unto the tabernacle of the congregation. And they three came out.

5 And the Lord came down in the pillar of the cloud, and stood in the door of the tabernacle, and called Aaron and Miriam: and they both came forth.

7 My servant Moses is not so, who is faithful in all mine house.

8 With him will I speak mouth to mouth, even apparently, and not in dark speeches; and the similitude of the Lord shall he behold: wherefore then were ye not afraid to speak against my servant Moses?

9 And the anger of the Lord was kindled against them; and he departed.

10 And the cloud departed from off the tabernacle; and, behold, Miriam became leprous, white as snow: and Aaron looked upon Miriam, and, behold, she was leprous.

11 And Aaron said unto Moses, Alas, my lord, I beseech thee, lay not the sin upon us, wherein we have done foolishly, and wherein we have sinned.

12 Let her not be as one dead, of whom the flesh is half consumed when he cometh out of his mother's womb.

13 And Moses cried unto the Lord, saying, Heal her now, O God, I beseech thee.

gaining preeminence by the way which is always open to every one—the way of preeminent usefulness—she was holding back and accusing the one who had found that way and its reward of arrogating an exclusive dignity to himself. As for Aaron, he appears to have been a weak echo of his stronger-minded sister, and not much else.

A sudden summons from Jehovah brought the three to the tent of meeting. The theophanic cloud took its stand at the door of the tent; and there Aaron and Miriam, like a pair of culprits at the bar, heard the divine explanation of the difference between God's revelation to Moses and that to other prophets. The explanation appears to amount to this: the kind of allocation of which Moses was the organ consisted of truth communicable in plain language and to the intellect at its ordinary level; while other prophets became recipients only of communications adapted to dream-states or to symbolic representation in visions, impressions which make a more ecstatic seizure on the feelings. Moses' kind of truth was less showy because less productive of rapture; but it was really far more important because it was more weighty with national utilities and human moral issues. Moses is distinguished as being spoken to for business; he is the man of affairs and of responsibility, this is perhaps what is meant by, who is faithful in all mine house

(ver. 7). One somewhat obscure addition is made to this description, the form of Jehovah shall he behold (ver. 8)—a reference perhaps to the experience related in Exod. 33 : 17-23. This whole passage appears intended to make the highest claim as revelation for that form of inspiration which appears least unearthly, and issues in prosaic moral law like the Pentateuch. It is largely on account of this passage perhaps that the Pentateuch is regarded by Jews and Samaritans as the most highly inspired part of the Old Testament (cf. com. on 7 : 89).

10-16. Leaving behind an impression of the divine anger the cloud removes from over the tent, and the terror-stricken Aaron turns and beholds his sister a ghastly, corpse-like leper. It is Moses whom he realizes they have wronged; it is Moses in whom the divine majesty seems almost to embody itself; and to Moses Aaron abjectly prays that he will not count their guilt against them in that they have played the fool (ver. 11) and sinned. He entreats that his sister, whom under the divine stroke he involuntarily contemplates with horror, may not be like a corpse or like a half-decayed, untimely stillbirth (ver. 12). Moses, with his characteristic unselfishness, entreats the Lord that she may be healed, and it is implied that this prayer is answered at once. But it is no more than right that, like every restored leper (Lev. 14 : 8), she

15 And Miriam was shut out from the camp seven days: and the people journeyed not till Miriam was brought in again.

16 And afterward the people removed from Hazeroth, and pitched in the wilderness of Paran.

15 shall be brought in again. And Miriam was shut up without the camp seven days: and the people journeyed not till Miriam was brought in again. And afterward the people journeyed from Hazeroth, and pitched in the wilderness of Paran.

shall undergo some penance of separation; since even if she had experienced no more than a public expression of parental displeasure (ver. 14), she would have been humiliated for seven days. So Miriam was put outside of the camp, but the congregation remained encamped in the same spot until the seven days were finished. Afterward the people accomplished the final stage of the journey which was summarily described at the first mention of their breaking camp after the sojourn at Sinai (10 : 12). The station at which they are found at the opening of the next chapter is Kadesh (13 : 26), which is mentioned as if it were identical with, or in the wilderness of Paran.

It is noteworthy that, just as the early days of the Christian church were signalized by gifts of the Spirit manifesting themselves in prophecy and speaking with tongues, so the beginning of the church life in the wilderness is accompanied with an outbreak of prophecy. But it is in connection with the faith side of their religion rather than the mere institutional or law side that this upspringing of spontaneous life occurs. When the people once get fairly started for their land, and the promises and prospects of their divinely given home begin to be accentuated in their lives, then it is that they begin to see divine things for themselves and to speak their swelling joys. Prophecy always has something forward-looking about it—it hails the coming day. The faith in God's promises is the most natural soil on which it can spring up: "Received ye the Spirit by the works of the law," says Paul, "or by the hearing of faith?" (Gal. 3 : 2.) Noteworthy too, is the fact that this sweetest blossom of religion differentiates itself in its origin from, or quickly finds its contrast with unspirituality and pride. It is the intense laying hold of the promise in antagonism to the gross unbelief which would fain go back to Egypt for its sensual luxuries that predisposes the seventy for the divine gift at the tabernacle; it is the contrast and the intolerance of officialism which Eldad and Medad very promptly encounter in Joshua, just as spontaneous religion encounters it in every period of the church. Miriam misapprehends the value of prophecy and externalizes and cheapens the conception of it by dragging it, as it were, into politics. So the first appearance of the gift in the church in the wilderness not only associates itself with the familiar psychological conditions which always accompany higher spiritual insight and rapture, but it very promptly encounters the same foes of the higher spiritual liberty, officialism, and worldly ambition, which as constant traits of human nature ever lie in wait to curb or cheapen the manifestations of the Spirit.

Chap. 13. THE DISPATCH OF THE SPIES, AND THEIR REPORT. This chapter and the following are to be taken together as making up one narrative, the narrative of the spies. It is quite unmistakably a double account, being composed of two elements woven together, each of which, read continuously, makes up a nearly complete narrative and which present the characteristics respectively of P and JE. The composite character of the chapters appears especially in the fact that one narrative frequently parallels the other (e. g., 13 : 22 parallels ver. 21; ver. 32 parallels ver. 27-31, and 14 : 26-35 parallels ver. 11-25), and also in the fact that the two accounts differ in their representations of the facts. Thus, according to JE the spies go only as far as the neighborhood of Hebron (13 : 22-24), while according to P they go through the whole country to the far north (ver. 21). In the one account they represent the country on their return as fertile but too strongly defended for them to conquer (13 : 27-31); in the other they call it a country that "eateth up its inhabitants," that is, a country too poor to be worth taking (13 : 32). In JE Caleb alone stills the people and is alone exempted from the sentence of exclusion from Palestine (13 : 30; 14 : 24); in P Joshua is included with Caleb in the act of pacifying the people and in the exemption from the divine sentence. Perhaps too, we may trace to the double character of the account the fact that in some parts of the narrative the spies are represented as starting out from and returning to the wilderness of Paran (13 : 3, 26), while in others the place is named as Kadesh (13 : 26). In other parts of the Pentateuch where this story of the spies is recapitulated (e. g., Num. 32 : 8-13; Deut. 1 : 22-45), the narrative of JE seems to be the one of the two in this double chapter which is more closely followed in respect to the shortness of the journey—i. e., only to Eshcol—and in respect to the characteristic name Kadesh-barnea, as distin-

 14 Of the tribe of Naphtali, Nahbi the son of Vophsi.
 15 Of the tribe of Gad, Geuel the son of Machi.
 16 These are the names of the men which Moses sent to spy out the land. And Moses called Oshea the son of Nun Jehoshua.
 17 And Moses sent them to spy out the land of Canaan, and said unto them, Get you up this way southward, and go up into the mountain:

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,
 2 Send thou men, that they may spy out the land of Canaan, which I give unto the children of Israel: of every tribe of their fathers shall ye send a man, every one a prince among them.
 3 And Moses sent them from the wilderness of Paran according to the commandment of the Lord: all of them men who were heads of the children of Israel. And these were their names: of the tribe of Reuben, Shammua the son of Zaccur. Of the tribe of Simeon, Shaphat the son of Hori. Of the tribe of Judah, Caleb the son of Jephunneh. Of the tribe of Issachar, Igal the son of Joseph. Of the tribe of Ephraim, Hoshea the son of Nun. Of the tribe of Benjamin, Palti the son of Raphu. Of the tribe of Zebulun, Gaddiel the son of Sodi. Of the tribe of Joseph, namely, of the tribe of Manasseh, Gaddi the son of Susi. Of the tribe of Dan, Ammiel the son of Gemalli. Of the tribe of Asher, Sethur the son of Michael. Of the tribe of Naphtali, Nahbi the son of Vophsi. Of the tribe of Gad, Geuel the son of Machi. These are the names of the men which Moses sent to spy out the land. And Moses called Hoshea the son of Nun Joshua. And Moses sent them to spy out the land of Canaan, and said unto them, Get you up this way by the South, and go up into the gushed from the more general name, wilderness of Paran, though not in respect to the inclusion of Caleb alone in the exception to the general panic. [It is, perhaps, right for the general editor to say that the reasons presented by Doctor Genung in support of the hypothesis of a "double narrative" do not appear to be conclusive. This Doctor Genung virtually admits in the sequel, suggesting himself a natural way of accounting for the most striking apparent discrepancy, namely, that which relates to the extent of the exploration of the country by the spies. See comment on ver. 21-33.—A. H.]

1. And the Lord spake unto Moses. In the account of this incident which is put into the mouth of Moses in Deuteronomy (Deut. 1 : 22), the idea, instead of emanating from the Lord, comes as the suggestion to Moses of the people. The direction of Jehovah here in Numbers is that these men sent shall all be heads or princes of their tribes. The men selected, however, are entirely distinct from the heads of the tribes named in chap. 1, 2, though Hoshea, the representative here of the tribe of Ephraim, is the grandson of Elishama, the prince at the head of the tribal host in chap. 2 (1 Chron. 7 : 26, 27). None of these men, as is fitting, come to any distinction so as to be named elsewhere, except Caleb and Hoshea. With Caleb this exploit was always a proud reminiscence (Josh. 14 : 6-8), as it brought him the distinction of a divine mention and promise (14 : 24). Hoshea (ver. 16), unaccountably spelled Oshea in the Authorized version, is here said to be the original name of the servant of Moses already familiarly known as Joshua. Moses changed his name from Hoshea, which means "salvation" or "welfare," to Jehoshua (shortened in English to Joshua), "Jah is salvation"; but whether this was done on this occasion or earlier, say on the more likely occasion of his victory over Amalek (Exod. 17 : 8-13), we have no means of knowing, as in all earlier mentions of his name he already appears as Joshua, and in only one other place (Deut. 32 : 44) is he called by his original name.

17. These men are directed by Moses to ascend the mountains which here at Kadesh lie as a barrier between them and their future home, known as the Amorite hill country (cf. Deut. 1 : 20), and go into the mountain, Negeb, the southern and least fertile part of Canaan, extending from the south border nearly to Hebron, and on into the hill country of Judea. They were to make a thorough examination of the land in regard to its fertility, its inhabitants, and its military strength, and to bring ocular demonstration of its characteristics in the form of specimens of its products (ver. 20).

In ver. 21 we have the story from the P source, the same as that from which the first sixteen

18 And see the land, what it is; and the people that dwelleth therein, whether they be strong or weak, few or many;

19 And what the land is that they dwell in, whether it be good or bad; and what cities they be that they dwell in, whether in tents, or in strong holds;

20 And what the land is, whether it be fat or lean, whether there be wood therein, or not. And be ye of good courage, and bring of the fruit of the land. Now the time was the time of the firstripe grapes.

21 So they went up, and searched the land from the wilderness of Zin unto Rehob, as men come to Hamath.

22 And they ascended by the south, and came unto Hebron; where Ahiman, Sheshai, and Talmai, the children of Anak, were. (Now Hebron was built seven years before Zoan in Egypt.)

23 And they came unto the brook of Esheol, and cut down from thence a branch with one cluster of grapes, and they bare it between two upon a staff; and they brought of the pomegranates, and of the figs.

24 The place was called the brook Esheol, because of the cluster of grapes which the children of Israel cut down from thence.

18 mountains: and see the land, what it is; and the people that dwelleth therein, whether they be strong or weak, whether they be few or many;

19 and what the land is that they dwell in, whether it be good or bad; and what cities they be that they dwell in, whether in camps, or in strong

20 holds; and what the land is, whether it be fat or lean, whether there be wood therein, or not. And be ye of good courage, and bring of the fruit of the land. Now the time was the time

21 of the firstripe grapes. So they went up, and spied out the land from the wilderness of Zin unto Rehob, to the entering in of Hamath. And they went up by the South, and came unto Hebron; and Ahiman, Sheshai, and Talmai, the children of Anak, were there. (Now Hebron was built seven years before Zoan in Egypt.)

22 And they came unto the valley of Esheol, and cut down from thence a branch with one cluster of grapes, and they bare it upon a staff between two; they brought also of the pomegranates, and

verses are derived, and this appears again in ver. 25 and the first part of 26, and in 32. The continuous account as this relates it would be: that the spies went through the whole land from the south boundary to Rehob in the far north (ver. 21), and returned at the end of forty days to the wilderness of Paran (ver. 25, 26a), and brought back an evil report of the land to the effect that it consumed its inhabitants, besides being defended by men of gigantic stature (ver. 32). On the other hand, the story from the JE source, which starts in at ver. 17, indicates that the spies were directed to go up into the Negeb, and so on to the hill country, and make a careful reconnaissance bringing back specimens of the fruits, as it was early grape harvest (ver. 17-20); that these went up into the Negeb and on to Hebron, finding there the three sons of Anak, and brought back various kinds of fruits, especially a bunch of grapes of extraordinary weight from the valley of Esheol (ver. 22-24), and that on their return to Kadesh they showed the fruit and admitted that the land was all that had been anticipated, but that the people were strong and the cities great and fortified; and, finally, before any explicit intimation is given that the congregation were panic-stricken, that Caleb stilled the people, being in this matter opposed by the other spies who maintained their inability to take the land (ver. 27-31), and described with great vividness their contrast to the Nephilim, the sons of Anak (ver. 33). 21. The wilderness of Zin. This is the desert into which the wilderness of Paran merges at its northeast side, stretching eastward to the Arabah. It is mentioned here, as also in 34: 3, seq., as the southern boundary of the Holy Land, or Judah (Josh. 15: 1, 3). In this desert

Kadesh was situated (20: 1; 27: 14; 33: 36), and the apparent location of Kadesh in the wilderness of Paran in ver. 26 would indicate that the distinction between the wilderness of Paran and that of Zin was not always clearly observed. Rehob is probably the place mentioned as Beth-Rehob in Judg. 18: 28 (cf. 2 Sam. 10: 6, 8), near the city of Laish which the Danites took and named Dan. As men come to Hamath, rather, the entering in of Hamath (see R. V.), is the valley or pass between Lebanon and Anti-Lebanon, called Cœle-Syria. It is possible that the two accounts of the spies may be harmonized by supposing that some of them were instructed to keep in the south, while other parties of them went to the middle portion and to the far north, and returned somewhat later. Those who explored the south, at least, found at Hebron the three men of the race of Anak, Ahiman, Sheshai, and Talmai (ver. 22), men whom Caleb afterward drove out (Josh. 15: 14; Judg. 1: 20). A note mentions Hebron as very ancient (ver. 22); its early name was Kirjath-Arba, or city of Arba (Gen. 35: 27), so called from Arba, who was the greatest man among the Anakim (Josh. 14: 15), indeed, the ancestor of the race (Josh. 21: 11). These sons of Anak were described by the frightened spies on their return as descendants of the Nephilim (ver. 33), a name used elsewhere only of the giants or Titans of antediluvian times (Gen. 6: 4). 23. The brook of Esheol, or rather, valley (see R. V.). This place was evidently near Hebron; and that region is celebrated to this day for its vines, which have been known to yield clusters, weighing eleven or twelve pounds, of grapes like plums in size. The bunch of grapes, Heb. לְעֶשְׂכֹל, 'eshkol, is said by the author to have given at a later period

25 And they returned from searching of the land after forty days.

26 And they went and came to Moses, and to Aaron, and to all the congregation of the children of Israel, unto the wilderness of Paran, to Kadesh; and brought back word unto them, and unto all the congregation, and shewed them the fruit of the land.

27 And they told him, and said, We came unto the land whither thou sendest us, and surely it floweth with milk and honey; and this is the fruit of it.

28 Nevertheless the people be strong that dwell in the land, and the cities are walled, and very great: and moreover we saw the children of Anak there.

29 The Amalekites dwell in the land of the south: and the Hittites, and the Jebusites, and the Amorites, dwell in the mountains: and the Canaanites dwell by the sea, and by the coast of Jordan.

30 And Caleb stilled the people before Moses, and said, Let us go up at once, and possess it; for we are well able to overcome it.

31 But the men that went up with him said, We be not able to go up against the people; for they are stronger than we.

32 And they brought up an evil report of the land which they had searched unto the children of Israel, saying, The land, through which we have gone to search it, is a land that eateth up the inhabitants thereof; and all the people that we saw in it are men of a great stature.

33 And there we saw the giants, the sons of Anak, which come of the giants: and we were in our own sight as grasshoppers, and so we were in their sight.

25 dren of Israel cut down from thence. And they returned from spying out the land at the end of

26 forty days. And they went and came to Moses, and to Aaron, and to all the congregation of the children of Israel, unto the wilderness of Paran, to Kadesh; and brought back word unto them, and unto all the congregation, and shewed them

27 the fruit of the land. And they told him, and said, We came unto the land whither thou sendest us, and surely it floweth with milk and honey;

28 and this is the fruit of it. Howbeit the people that dwell in the land are strong, and the cities are fenced, and very great: and moreover we

29 saw the children of Anak there. Amalek dwelleth in the land of the South: and the Hittite, and the Jebusite, and the Amorite, dwell in the mountains: and the Canaanite dwelleth by the

30 sea, and along by the side of Jordan. And Caleb stilled the people before Moses, and said, Let us go up at once, and possess it; for we are

31 well able to overcome it. But the men that went up with him said, We be not able to go up against the people; for they are stronger than

32 we. And they brought up an evil report of the land which they had spied out unto the children of Israel, saying, The land, through which we have gone to spy it out, is a land that eateth up the inhabitants thereof; and all the people that 33 we saw in it are men of great stature. And there we saw the Nephilim, the sons of Anak, which come of the Nephilim: and we were in our own sight as grasshoppers, and so we were in their sight.

the name to the valley (ver. 24). It is to be noted that according to Gen. 14: 13, 24 an Amorite living in this region, brother of Mamre and Aner, and an ally of Abram, was named Esheol, and it is not impossible that the name Esheol, which the valley may have already had at the visit of the spies, was derived from the ancient Canaanite, and that the name through its meaning came to be associated with the bunch of grapes gathered there, and popularly referred to that incident for its origin. 26. To Kadesh. The place is here mentioned as in the wilderness of Paran, but it is elsewhere said to be in the wilderness of Zin. This place is second only to Sinai in importance in connection with the journeyings of the children of Israel. It is first mentioned in Gen. 14: 7, where it is identified with En-Mishpat. A somewhat later name is Kadesh-barnea (32: 8; Deut. 1: 2, etc.), or Kadesh of wandering. This becomes the headquarters of the host of Israel for thirty-eight years, perhaps the place of the sanctuary and of Moses' residence. It is probably to be identified with the site discovered by Rowland in 1842, known among the Arabs as 'Ain Qadis, or Holy Well. It is in a fertile plain or oasis, where a stream of water issues from a wall of limestone rock and is collected into troughs for the watering of cattle. In Deuteronomy it is described as eleven days' journey from Mount Horeb by way of Mount Seir (Deut. 1: 2).

The spies come back and show their fruits and report that the land is indeed a fertile land, but that the people are strong and the cities great and strongly fortified (ver. 27, 28). Their special bugbear is the sons of Anak, to whom they recur in ver. 33. The tribes that occupy the land are roughly classified and located (ver. 29), Amalek in the Negeb, the Hittites, Jebusites, and Amorites in the hill country, and the Canaanites by the sea and in the Jordan Valley. These last, who seem to be described as lowlanders, are also mentioned as living in other and more mountainous regions than the one here specified (14: 43, 45; 21: 1). Caleb, apparently noting the rising tide of the people's dissatisfaction, begins to still the multitude, but his efforts only call out the more vehement opposition from the remaining spies. It was this hero who in his old age chose this very place Hebron, where the greatest difficulties existed, and where the sons of Anak were found, as the inheritance which he would undertake to conquer and possess (Josh. 14: 12). As for Joshua, he does not appear in his rôle of pacifier until the next chapter.

Chap. 14. THE REBELLION OF THE PEOPLE AND THEIR SENTENCE. The effect of the adverse report of the spies was first that it threw the multitude into an extraordinary depression, or as Moses puts it in Deuteronomy (1: 28), "made their hearts melt," and

CHAPTER XIV.

1 AND all the congregation lifted up their voice, and cried; and the people wept that night.

2 And all the children of Israel murmured against Moses and against Aaron: and the whole congregation said unto them, Would God that we had died in the land of Egypt! or would God we had died in this wilderness!

3 And wherefore hath the Lord brought us unto this land, to fall by the sword, that our wives and our children should be a prey? were it not better for us to return into Egypt?

4 And they said one to another, Let us make a captain, and let us return into Egypt.

5 Then Moses and Aaron fell on their faces before all the assembly of the congregation of the children of Israel.

6 And Joshua the son of Nun, and Caleb the son of Jephunneh, which were of them that searched the land, rent their clothes:

7 And they spake unto all the company of the children of Israel, saying, The land, which we passed through to search it, is an exceeding good land.

8 If the Lord delight in us, then he will bring us into this land, and give it us; a land which floweth with milk and honey.

9 Only rebel not ye against the Lord, neither fear ye the people of the land; for they are bread for us: their defence is departed from them, and the Lord is with us: fear them not.

10 But all the congregation bade stone them with stones. And the glory of the Lord appeared in the tabernacle of the congregation before all the children of Israel.

11 And the Lord said unto Moses, How long will this people provoke me? and how long will it be ere they believe me, for all the signs which I have shewed among them?

1 AND all the congregation lifted up their voice, and cried; and the people wept that night.

2 And all the children of Israel murmured against Moses and against Aaron: and the whole congregation said unto them, Would God that we had died in the land of Egypt! or would God

3 we had died in this wilderness! And wherefore doth the Lord bring us unto this land, to fall by the sword? Our wives and our little ones shall be a prey: were it not better for us to return

4 into Egypt? And they said one to another, Let us make a captain, and let us return into Egypt.

5 Then Moses and Aaron fell on their faces before all the assembly of the congregation of the chil-

6 dren of Israel. And Joshua the son of Nun and Caleb the son of Jephunneh, which were of them that spied out the land, rent their clothes:

7 and they spake unto all the congregation of the children of Israel, saying, The land, which we passed through to spy it out, is an exceeding

8 good land. If the Lord delight in us, then he will bring us into this land, and give it unto us; a land which floweth with milk and honey.

9 Only rebel not against the Lord, neither fear ye the people of the land; for they are bread for us: their defence is removed from over them,

10 and the Lord is with us: fear them not. But all the congregation bade stone them with stones. And the glory of the Lord appeared in the tent of meeting unto all the children of Israel.

11 And the Lord said unto Moses, How long will this people despise me? and how long will they not believe in me, for all the signs which I have then awakened, as the next stage in their perturbation, an unreasonable resentment against their leaders Moses and Aaron. Finally their dissatisfaction assumed the more definite shape of making inchoate plans to choose a leader and go back to Egypt (ver. 4). Moses and Aaron fell on their faces before God in order to entreat his interposition, but not, according to Deut. 1: 29-31, until they had unsuccessfully tried to reassure the people by encouragements and persuasions. Joshua, who now for the first appears (ver. 6) as a stiller of the rebellion, joins Caleb in manifesting his grief at the people's perverseness and in attempting to inspire something of an enterprising and warlike spirit. The three-fold motive on which they sought to work was faith in God, cupidity, and belief in the doom of the Canaanites. Not simply the cupidity of those seeking homes or places to grow the slow fruits of the earth did these heroes attempt to arouse, but the fiercer cupidity of those anticipating a swift return in the way of spoil. Neither fear ye the people of the land; for they are bread for us (ver. 9), perhaps means that the people, so far from being an incumbrance or drawback, are an additional asset, for they represent accumulated wealth, or food ready for use, which by a little boldness can immediately be secured, so as to bring us at once into plenty. And all this is urged as a sure thing because, as the picturesque Hebrew expresses it, "their shadow is removed from them" (ver. 9)—the people, as doomed to destruction by Jehovah, are really without defense, however strong they may appear. The figurative use of the term "shadow" to signify defense or security is not uncommon in Hebrew literature (see, e. g., Isa. 30: 2; Ps. 91: 1; 121: 5). The reasoning was really on a very high plane of faith; it was firmly grounded on the assurance that Jehovah's favor is security, and his displeasure always means nakedness and defenselessness despite the strongest armaments. But the people were not in the mood for such transcendent reasoning as this; and they began to raise the cry of a mob (ver. 10), until the glory of Jehovah shone forth from the tent of meeting in its threatening majesty and awed them into silence.

The appearance of the divine glory in the tent seems to have been not only intended to effect the rescue of the devoted Joshua and Caleb, but to portend a momentous communication to Moses. Jehovah's sentence on the rebellious people, with Moses' intercession, is given in the manner perhaps characteristic of JE in ver. 11-25, while in ver. 26-38 the same sentence is given 12 I will smite them with the pestilence, and disinherit them, and will make of thee a greater nation and mightier than they.

13 And Moses said unto the Lord, Then the Egyptians shall hear it, (for thou broughtest up this people in thy might from among them;)

14 And they will tell it to the inhabitants of this land: for they have heard that thou Lord art among this people, that thou Lord art seen face to face, and that thy cloud standeth over them, and that thou goest before them, by day time in a pillar of a cloud, and in a pillar of fire by night.

15 Now if thou shalt kill all this people as one man, then the nations which have heard the fame of thee will speak, saying,

16 Because the Lord was not able to bring this people into the land which he swore unto them, therefore he hath slain them in the wilderness.

17 And now, I beseech thee, let the power of my Lord be great, according as thou hast spoken, saying,

18 The Lord is longsuffering, and of great mercy, forgiving iniquity and transgression, and by no means clearing the guilty, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation.

19 Pardon, I beseech thee, the iniquity of this people according unto the greatness of thy mercy, and as thou hast forgiven this people, from Egypt even until now.

20 And the Lord said, I have pardoned according to thy word:

21 But as truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord.

22 Because all those men which have seen my glory, and my miracles, which I did in Egypt and in the wilderness, and have tempted me now these ten times, and have not hearkened to my voice;

23 Surely they shall not see the land which I swear unto their fathers, neither shall any of them that provoked me see it:

24 But my servant Caleb, because he had another spirit with him, and hath followed me fully, him will I bring into the land whereinto he went; and his seed shall possess it.

12 wrought among them? I will smite them with the pestilence, and disinherit them, and will make of thee a nation greater and mightier than they.

13 And Moses said unto the Lord, Then the Egyptians shall hear it; for thou broughtest up

14 this people in thy might from among them; and they will tell it to the inhabitants of this land: they have heard that thou Lord art in the midst of this people; for thou Lord art seen face to face, and thy cloud standeth over them, and thou goest before them, in a pillar of cloud by

15 day, and in a pillar of fire by night. Now if thou shalt kill this people as one man, then the nations which have heard the fame of thee will

16 speak, saying, Because the Lord was not able to bring this people into the land which he swore unto them, therefore he hath slain them in the

17 wilderness. And now, I pray thee, let the power of the Lord be great, according as thou hast

18 spoken, saying, The Lord is slow to anger, and plenteous in mercy, forgiving iniquity and transgression, and that will by no means clear the guilty;

visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, upon the third and upon the fourth

19 generation. Pardon, I pray thee, the iniquity of this people according unto the greatness of thy mercy, and according as thou hast forgiven

20 this people, from Egypt even until now. And the Lord said, I have pardoned according to thy

21 word: but in very deed, as I live, and as all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord;

22 because all those men which have seen my glory, and my signs, which I wrought in Egypt and in the wilderness, yet have tempted me these ten

23 times, and have not hearkened to my voice; surely they shall not see the land which I swear unto their fathers, neither shall any of them in a somewhat different form more characterized by the style of P. God's patience is represented as sorely tried (ver. 11), and the proposal which first appeared in Exod. 32:10 to destroy the nation and make Moses a new national founder is here repeated. Moses again, as in that chapter, reasons with Jehovah, urging here, however, the consideration, not that the Egyptians would interpret the Israelites' destruction as a proof of Jehovah's malignity (cf. Exod. 32:12), but that they, and all the nations to whom they would tell of the glorious starting out of the exodus (ver. 13), would reason that the divine strength was exhausted in the wilderness without being able to bring its intentions to pass. Then Moses pleads that the power of the Lord, if that must be manifested, may be seen in confirming that revelation of his mercy which he had made to Moses when he asked God at Sinai to show him his glory (Exod. 34:6, seq.). An impressive thing it is, and an exaltation of Old Testament revelation, to see a mortal fully possessed of the truth that the highest divine glory is forbearance and mercy, and pleading that truth with God against an implacableness which, no doubt to test his servant, God apparently assumed. Moses' self-devotion does not on this occasion reach the sublime height which it reached at Sinai where he entreated that Jehovah would blot him out of his book rather than refuse to forgive the people's sin (Exod. 32:32), but he apparently pleads God's revealed mercy to such good purpose that God promises to forgive his countrymen. Jehovah, however, takes a solemn oath that none of these men who have seen his glory and his signs, and have tempted or exasperated him ten times, shall see the land which he swore to their fathers, except Caleb who had another spirit in him and has followed him fully.

The number ten (ver. 22), as applied to the occasions when the Israelites tried the patience of God, no doubt is meant simply as equivalent to an indefinite complete number—"times enough." The rabbis, however, always prosaic, reckon up the precise occasions on which these temptations occurred, and of course with sufficient ingenuity make them agree with the number here. They are: at the Red Sea (Exod. 14:11, seq.); at Marah (Exod. 15:23, seq.), in the wilderness of Sin (Exod. 16:2, seq.); their disregard 25 (Now the Amalekites and the Canaanites dwell in the valley.) To-morrow turn you, and get you into the wilderness by the way of the Red sea.

26 And the Lord spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying,

27 How long shall I bear with this evil congregation, which murmur against me? I have heard the murmurings of the children of Israel, which they murmur against me.

28 Say unto them, As truly as I live, saith the Lord, as ye have spoken in mine ears, so will I do to you:

29 Your carcases shall fall in this wilderness; and all that were numbered of you, according to your whole number, from twenty years old and upward, which have murmured against me,

30 Doubtless ye shall not come into the land, concerning which I swore to make you dwell therein, save Caleb the son of Jephunneh, and Joshua the son of Nun.

31 But your little ones, which ye said should be a prey, them will I bring in, and they shall know the land which ye have despised.

32 But as for you, your carcases, they shall fall in this wilderness.

33 And your children shall wander in the wilderness forty years, and bear your whoredoms, until your carcases be wasted in the wilderness.

34 After the number of the days in which ye searched the land, even forty days, each day for a year, shall ye bear your iniquities, even forty years, and ye shall know my breach of promise.

35 I the Lord have said, I will surely do it unto all this evil congregation, that are gathered together against me: in this wilderness they shall be consumed, and there they shall die.

36 And the men, which Moses sent to search the land, who returned, and made all the congregation to murmur against him, by bringing up a slander upon the land, 25 possess it. Now the Amalekite and the Canaanite dwell in the valley: to-morrow turn ye, and get you into the wilderness by the way to the Red Sea.

26 And the Lord spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying, How long shall I bear with this evil congregation, which murmur against me? I have heard the murmurings of the children of Israel,

28 which they murmur against me. Say unto them, As I live, saith the Lord, surely as ye have

29 spoken in mine ears, so will I do to you: your carcases shall fall in this wilderness; and all that were numbered of you, according to your whole number, from twenty years old and up-

30 ward, which have murmured against me, surely ye shall not come into the land, concerning which I lifted up my hand that I would make you dwell therein, save Caleb the son of Jephunneh, and Joshua the son of Nun. But your little ones, which ye said should be a prey, them will I bring in, and they shall know the land

32 which ye have rejected. But as for you, your carcases shall fall in this wilderness. And your children shall be wanderers in the wilderness forty years, and shall bear your whoredoms, until your carcases be consumed in the

34 wilderness. After the number of the days in which ye spied out the land, even forty days, for every day a year, shall ye bear your iniquities, even forty years, and ye shall know my

35 alienation. I the Lord have spoken, surely this will I do unto all this evil congregation, that are gathered together against me: in this wilderness they shall be consumed, and there they shall

36 die. And the men, which Moses sent to spy out the land, who returned, and made all the congregation to murmur against him, by bringing of directions regarding the manna (Exod. 16 : 20) ; their attempt to gather it on the seventh day (Exod. 16 : 27, 28) ; their murmuring for water at Meribah (Exod. 17 : 2, seq.) ; their sin with the golden calf (Exod. 32) ; the burning at Taberah (Num. 11 : 1, seq.) ; the murmuring of the mixed multitude at Kibroth-Hattaawah (Num. 11 : 4, seq.) ; and finally this occasion.

In ver. 25 the fatal command is issued. It is preceded by the statement that the Amalekite and the Canaanite dwell in the valley or plain, a statement which but imperfectly accords with 13 : 29 and 14 : 43, 45, where these tribes are described as mountaineers. The command is that on the morrow the people shall turn southward and strike into the wilderness by the Red Sea road—the modern Hajj route from 'Aqabah to Suez—for their long wandering.

26-45. In this section the sentence of Jehovah against the rebellious people is repeated in quite different terms and in another style. There is no divine threat appeased by human intercession, but a prediction in prosaic statistical terms, embellished by arithmetical coincidences and grim humor, of what shall befall the people and their children, the recurring burden being, your carcases shall fall in this wilderness, or its equivalent (ver. 29, 32, 33, 35). Both Caleb and

Joshua, instead of Caleb alone as in the preceding section, are exempted from the sentence of exclusion (ver. 30). The fulfillment of the wish which in their panic they uttered, that they might die in the wilderness, is grimly forced upon them (ver. 29) ; the prediction that their children should become a prey is falsified by the assertion that these shall supersede them in the privilege of beholding the Promised Land (ver. 31), though they must first be shepherds in the wilderness forty years as an infliction for their parents' unfaithfulness. The correspondence of the forty years' wandering with the forty days spent by those spies who in one narrative were said to have gone to Rehob (13 : 21, 25) is drawn out with a kind of relish, the most depressing fact of that wandering being described as, that they shall know or experience what it is to have God turn away from them. 34. My breach of promise is more exactly rendered, my turning away. See R. V. The wandering which in this narrative is apparently described as exhibiting an exact coincidence with the forty days' expedition is elsewhere said to have lasted thirty-eight years (Deut. 2 : 14).

The story goes on in ver. 36, 37 to relate what was the fate of the spies who brought in an evil report of the land. It is not expressly said that 37 Even those men that did bring up the evil report upon the land, died by the plague before the Lord.

38 But Joshua the son of Nun, and Caleb the son of Jephunneh, which were of the men that went to search the land, lived still.

39 And Moses told these sayings unto all the children of Israel: and the people mourned greatly.

40 And they rose up early in the morning, and gat them up into the top of the mountain, saying, Lo, we be here, and will go up unto the place which the Lord hath promised: for we have sinned.

41 And Moses said, Wherefore now do ye transgress the commandment of the Lord? but it shall not prosper.

42 Go not up, for the Lord is not among you; that ye be not smitten before your enemies.

43 For the Amalekites and the Canaanites are there before you, and ye shall fall by the sword: because ye are turned away from the Lord, therefore the Lord will not be with you.

44 But they presumed to go up unto the hill top; nevertheless the ark of the covenant of the Lord, and Moses, departed not out of the camp.

45 Then the Amalekites came down, and the Canaanites which dwelt in that hill, and smote them, and discomfited them, even unto Hormah.

37 up an evil report against the land, even those men that did bring up an evil report of the land,

38 died by the plague before the Lord. But Joshua the son of Nun, and Caleb the son of Jephunneh, remained alive of those men that went to spy

39 out the land. And Moses told these words unto all the children of Israel: and the people

40 mourned greatly. And they rose up early in the morning, and gat them up to the top of the mountain, saying, Lo, we be here, and will go

41 up unto the place which the Lord hath promised: for we have sinned. And Moses said, Wherefore

42 now do ye transgress the commandment of the Lord, seeing it shall not prosper? Go not up, for 43 the Lord is not among you; that ye be not smitten down before your enemies. For there the Amalekite and the Canaanite are before you,

44 and ye shall fall by the sword: because ye are turned back from following the Lord, therefore the Lord will not be with you. But they presumed to go up to the top of the mountain:

45 nevertheless the ark of the covenant of the Lord, and Moses, departed not out of the camp. Then the Amalekite came down, and the Canaanite which dwelt in that mountain, and smote them and beat them down, even unto Hormah.

CHAPTER XV.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

this stroke from the Lord's presence occurred at this time; and the passage may be taken as an anticipation of the later history of these men, just as the following verse anticipates the later history of Joshua and Caleb. Deut. 2:15 seems to indicate that there was an unusual sickliness in the camp during the thirty-eight years which shortened the life of the whole generation. As for the statement made here and repeatedly (e. g., Num. 26:63-65) that not one of those over twenty years of age save Caleb and Joshua survived to the second numbering under Eleazar, we must surely modify it to the extent of excepting Eleazar himself who was a prominent leader at the time of the first numbering at Sinai (Num. 3:2, 32; Exod. 28:1), and survived to conduct the second numbering in person.

The sentence, which had been given from the tent of meeting to Moses, was now reported to the people, and they were greatly exercised at the consequences of their rebellion. Their spirit, however, seems not to have been that of genuine repentance, but rather a feverish eagerness to undo their error and snatch the fleeting opportunity just vanishing out of their grasp. 40. They rose up early in the morning, and went up to the top of the mountain, i. e., evidently not to the highest summit, but to some intermediate spur or table-land, as the Amalekites and Canaanites still "came down" (ver. 45) to meet them when the battle occurred. They offered to make the invasion of the Promised Land at once, but Moses warned them that they would not succeed. He assured them that Jehovah was no longer with them (ver. 41); they had turned back from following him, so that they could no more count on his assistance. 44. Nevertheless they presumed, lit., made a swell, to go up to the top of the mountain, but the ark of the covenant and Moses stayed in the camp. This idea of the ark as a palladium is more characteristic of the JE source, which seems to be drawn upon in this section, than of the later legislation of P, which enjoins a more elaborate seclusion of the sacred coffer (see on 10:33-36). 45. Orphaned of the divine assistance as the people were, the Amalekite and Canaanite came down... and smote them, and discomfited them, even unto Hormah. These tribes, which Moses in Deuteronomy (1:44) calls by the more general title of Amorites, or hill-country men, are said in that place to have chased them as bees do in Seir. The place Hormah, or חֶרְמָה, Charmah, is so named here by anticipation, as it apparently did not receive this name until afterwards. It was formerly called Zephath (Judg. 1:17), and in two places the name Charmah, or Place of the ban, is accounted for as arising from the fact of its utter destruction by the Israelites as provided for (Lev. 27:28, 29; Num. 21:3; Judg. 1:17). From the apparent resemblance of the name Zephath—which is not very clear, however—ancient Hormah has been conjecturally identified with Sebahah, a group of noble ruins in the Negeb about twenty-five miles north of Kadesh.

Chap. 15. LAWS REGARDING VARIOUS OFFERINGS. THE SABBATH-BREAKER. THE LAW OF "FRINGES." 1-16. In this chapter

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye be come into the land of your habitations, which I give unto you,

3 And will make an offering by fire unto the Lord, a burnt offering, or a sacrifice in performing a vow, or in a freewill offering, or in your solemn feasts, to make a sweet savour unto the Lord, of the herd, or of the flock :

4 Then shall he that offereth his offering unto the Lord bring a meat offering of a tenth deal of flour mingled with the fourth part of an hin of oil.

5 And the fourth part of an hin of wine for a drink offering shalt thou prepare with the burnt offering or sacrifice, for one lamb.

6 Or for a ram, thou shalt prepare for a meat offering two tenth deals of flour mingled with the third part of an hin of oil.

7 And for a drink offering thou shalt offer the third part of an hin of wine, for a sweet savour unto the Lord.

8 And when thou preparest a bullock for a burnt offering, or for a sacrifice in performing a vow, or peace offerings unto the Lord :

9 Then shall he bring with a bullock a meat offering of three tenth deals of flour mingled with half an hin of oil.

10 And thou shalt bring for a drink offering half an hin of wine, for an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the Lord.

11 Thus shall it be done for one bullock, or for one ram, or for a lamb, or a kid.

12 According to the number that ye shall prepare, so shall ye do to every one according to their number.

13 All that are born of the country shall do these things after this manner, in offering an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the Lord.

14 And if a stranger sojourn with you, or whosoever be among you in your generations, and will offer an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the Lord ; as ye do, so he shall do.

15 One ordinance shall be both for you of the congregation, and also for the stranger that sojourneth with you, an ordinance for ever in your generations : as ye are, so shall the stranger be before the Lord.

16 One law and one manner shall be for you, and for the stranger that sojourneth with you.

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye be come into the land of your

3 habitations, which I give unto you, and will make an offering by fire unto the Lord, a burnt offering, or a sacrifice, to accomplish a vow, or as a freewill offering, or in your set feasts, to make a sweet savour unto the Lord, of the herd,

4 or of the flock : then shall he that offereth his oblation offer unto the Lord a meal offering of a tenth part of an ephah of fine flour mingled with

5 the fourth part of an hin of oil : and wine for the drink offering, the fourth part of an hin, shalt thou prepare with the burnt offering or for

6 the sacrifice, for each lamb. Or for a ram, thou shalt prepare for a meal offering two tenth parts of an ephah of fine flour mingled with the third

7 part of an hin of oil : and for the drink offering thou shalt offer the third part of an hin of wine,

8 of a sweet savour unto the Lord. And when thou preparest a bullock for a burnt offering, or for a sacrifice, to accomplish a vow, or for peace

9 offerings unto the Lord : then shall he offer with the bullock a meal offering of three tenth parts of an ephah of the fine flour mingled with half

10 an hin of oil. And thou shalt offer for the drink offering half an hin of wine, for an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the Lord.

11 Thus shall it be done for each bullock, or for each ram, or for each of the he-lambs, or of the 12 kids. According to the number that ye shall prepare, so shall ye do to every one according

13 to their number. All that are homeborn shall do these things after this manner, in offering an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the

14 Lord. And if a stranger sojourn with you, or whosoever be among you throughout your generations, and will offer an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the Lord ; as ye do, so he

15 shall do. For the assembly, there shall be one statute for you, and for the stranger that sojourneth with you, a statute for ever throughout your generations : as ye are, so shall the stranger

16 be before the Lord. One law and one ordinance shall be for you, and for the stranger that sojourneth with you.

we find the characteristic style and theme of the priest-code as this is seen predominantly all through Leviticus. The ordinances, as also in various places in that book (Lev. 19 : 23 ; 23 : 10 ; 25 : 2 ; etc.), have explicit reference to the time when the people shall come into their land ; but so dispassionately does the chapter refer to that time, and so completely does it ignore the fact that the whole generation has just been condemned to a death in the wilderness, that it seems clear that it could not have been written in immediate connection with the history of the preceding chapter, but was rather inserted from some other source. It is useless to attempt to exhibit any close or necessary connection of thought between these insertions from the priest-code and the sequence of the history in which they occur.

The purpose of these directions seems to be to supply some details regarding the quantity of fine flour and wine to be used in the meal and drink offerings which belong to the sacrifices appropriate for the fulfillment of vows or for spontaneous expressions of devotion. It seems to be taken for granted that the coming into the land where oil and wine may be had will naturally result in many fervent and joyous expressions of this kind. When the meal offering is described in Lev. 2 there is no mention of the drink offering or libation, though some scattered notices (Exod. 29 : 40 ; Lev. 23 : 13) seem to indicate that it was a natural accompaniment of the meal offering. In this place the definite amount of flour and wine appropriate for each offering of a lamb, or for each beast in the larger functions where many victims are offered at a time, is carefully prescribed. These are: for a lamb an עֲשָׂרוֹן, 'issaron, or tenth (of an ephah) of fine flour mingled with a fourth of a hin of oil, with a libation of the same quantity of wine, these being the amounts prescribed in Exod. 29 : 40 for the lamb of the morning and evening sacrifice. For a ram the flour is doubled, while the fraction of the hin of wine and oil is one-third. Three-tenths of flour with a half-hin each of oil and wine accompany the sacrifice

17 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,
18 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye come into the land whither I bring you,

19 Then it shall be, that, when ye eat of the bread of the land, ye shall offer up an heave offering unto the Lord.

20 Ye shall offer up a cake of the first of your dough for an heave offering: as ye do the heave offering of the threshing-floor, so shall ye heave it.

21 Of the first of your dough ye shall give unto the Lord an heave offering in your generations.

22 And if ye have erred, and not observed all these commandments, which the Lord hath spoken unto Moses,

23 Even all that the Lord hath commanded you by the hand of Moses, from the day that the Lord commanded Moses, and henceforward among your generations;

24 Then it shall be, if ought be committed by ignorance without the knowledge of the congregation, that all the congregation shall offer one young bullock for a burnt offering, for a sweet savour unto the Lord, with his meat offering, and his drink offering, according to the manner, and one kid of the goats for a sin offering.

25 And the priest shall make an atonement for all the congregation of the children of Israel, and it shall be forgiven them; for it is ignorance: and they shall bring their offering, a sacrifice made by fire unto the Lord, and their sin offering before the Lord, for their ignorance:

26 And it shall be forgiven all the congregation of the children of Israel, and the stranger that sojourneth among them; seeing all the people were in ignorance.

27 And if any soul sin through ignorance, then he shall bring a she goat of the first year for a sin offering.

And the priest shall make atonement for all the congregation of the children of Israel, and they shall be forgiven; for it was an error, and they have brought their oblation, an offering made by fire unto the Lord, and their sin offering before the Lord, for their error: and all the congregation of the children of Israel shall be forgiven, and the stranger that sojourneth among them; for in respect of all the people it was done unwittingly. of a bullock. These proportions must be repeated with each victim when many are offered in a series. It is carefully specified that this regulation is a uniform one, not only for the home-born, but for foreigners sojourning among them who may wish to fulfill vows or offer free-will offerings to Jehovah.

17-21. The first realizing of the products of the land after the people's entrance thither is to be signaled by the offering of a תְּרוּמָה, trumah, or heave offering to Jehovah. This is to be a cake of the first grits or coarse meal (ver. 20), just as in the case of the trumah of the threshing-floor, which is alluded to as well known, though mentioned only here. The ceremony is not restricted to the first harvest after entering the land, but is to be the perpetual custom (ver. 21).

It will be remembered that in regard to newly planted trees a peculiar system of regarding the fruit as uncircumcised for three years, and wholly consecrated for one year more, before it could be eaten, is instituted in Lev. 19 : 23-25.

22-31. The תְּרוּמוֹת, trumoth, were the requisite of the priests, as is more fully set forth in the eighteenth chapter. All peace offerings must pay the tribute of the right thigh as a trumah to the priest (Lev. 7 : 32). The custom of offering first fruits was enjoined in the earliest legislation (Exod. 23 : 19) and repeatedly, and this particular offering of coarse meal is referred to in Ezek. 44 : 30 and Neh. 10 : 37.

22-31. This section seems to betray a consciousness on the part of the legislator that the ordinances are becoming somewhat complex and numerous for an ordinary person, or even the whole congregation, to be sure of remembering; and the main objective point seems to be to assure the people that if the sin is unintentional (ver. 24-29) there is provision for atonement. In form the enactment starts out as if intended to cover only sins of omission (ver. 22), and this is often taken as the intended distinction from the legislation in Lev. 4, and thus as explaining the slight difference in the victims and sacrifices prescribed. The main difference is that here the bullock for the congregation is prescribed as a burnt offering, while in the case of the sin of the anointed priest (Lev. 4 : 3, seq.), or of the whole congregation (ibid., 13, seq.), according to Leviticus, the bullock is to be offered as a sin offering. It is questionable, however, whether this restriction to sins of omission is intended throughout (see

29 Ye shall have one law for him that sinneth through ignorance, both for him that is born among the children of Israel, and for the stranger that sojourneth among them.

30 But the soul that doeth ought presumptuously, whether he be born in the land, or a stranger, the same reproacheth the Lord; and that soul shall be cut off from among his people.

ver. 24, 27, 29), as a popular provision for a pure negative would be somewhat difficult to maintain or enforce. It is more likely that the passage here and that in Leviticus represent slightly different strata of legislation, this being inserted especially to emphasize the distinction between sins of error and sins of presumption. For sins of error only is the provision made; while for the one who commits sin with a "high hand" (ver. 30) there remains only the stern penalty of cutting off from among the people, as the presumptuous sin is constructive blasphemy. The commandment is asserted to be binding for home-born and foreigner alike (ver. 29, 30).

This legal principle that a transgression must be strictly a sin of error or ignorance in order to be accessible to remission appears to have become very deeply ingrained into Jewish thought; so that even the unlearned Peter, in calling to repentance those who had been parties to the death of Christ, grounds his gospel of remission on the consideration that they had done it κατὰ ἀγνοίαν, or through ignorance (Acts 3:17). In this incident we may perhaps catch a glimpse of an interesting fact in human nature, exemplified in Jewish progress between the time of this legislation and that of Christ and paralleled in the legal history of other nations. This is, that as human feeling becomes milder, laws which, though remaining in force, become too harsh for public sentiment to tolerate are often evaded or made consistent with more merciful treatment by the device of liberal interpretation. Thus in England, long before the law which prescribed the death penalty for petty theft was repealed, juries would take care, though often absurdly, to estimate the amount of the theft at less than the fatal limit in order to save the life of the culprit. In a similar way we may perhaps see that among the Jews this harsh law that every transgression not strictly in error should be punished by death became modified by a liberal interpretation of what constituted error. At least Peter must have been accustomed to a very liberal understanding of the matter to be able to concede that not only the people but also their rulers, those men who had so deliberately set about, by corrupting his disciples, and even by employing false testimony, to compass the death of Christ, had done the deed through ignorance.

32-36. The introduction of this incident by the note of time, while the children of Israel were in the wilderness, not only marks it as an isolated event picked out from among the occurrences of the forty years' wandering, but also stamps it as the utterance of an author who was not himself in the wilderness at the time of writing. It appears to be an example of the high-handed sin for which there was no atonement, or the constructive blasphemy whose penalty was stoning (cf. John 8:59; Acts 7:58). The penalty for Sabbath-breaking is in other places prescribed as cutting off from among the people, or death (Exod. 31:14; 35:2), but the precaution of putting the man in custody until some decision could be obtained regarding him would be necessary in order to determine the precise degree of presumption in his case, and so whether it was a crime subject to the punishment of blasphemy. Jehovah's direction to Moses was that the man should be stoned with stones by the whole congregation, a form of punishment which, as it employed all the people

37 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,
38 Speak unto the children of Israel, and bid them that they make them fringes in the borders of their garments throughout their generations, and that they put upon the fringe of the borders a ribband of blue :

39 And it shall be unto you for a fringe, that ye may look upon it, and remember all the commandments of the Lord, and do them ; and that ye seek not after your own heart and your own eyes, after which ye use to go a whoring :

40 That ye may remember, and do all my commandments, and be holy unto your God.

41 I am the Lord your God, which brought you out of the land of Egypt, to be your God : I am the Lord your God.

37 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,
38 Speak unto the children of Israel, and bid them that they make them fringes in the borders of their garments throughout their generations, and that they put upon the fringe of each border a cord of blue : and it shall be unto you for a fringe, that ye may look upon it, and remember all the commandments of the Lord, and do them ; and that ye go not about after your own heart and your own eyes, and after which ye 40 use to go a whoring : that ye may remember and do all my commandments, and be holy 41 unto your God. I am the Lord your God, which brought you out of the land of Egypt, to be your God : I am the Lord your God.

37-41. The translation of this passage as it is found in the Revised version is more faithful to the Hebrew. A command similar to this is given also in Deut. 22 : 12, though with a different word for "fringe." Much care and ingenuity were expended by the Jews on the construction of these fringes or tassels. They so arranged the threads and knots as to set forth symbolically the six hundred and thirteen precepts of which the law was believed to consist. The ordinary Jewish outer garment was a square piece of cloth, something like a plaid, and the tassels were attached to each of the four corners. In later times, as the fashion of dress changed, a smaller piece of cloth called the tallith was substituted and worn as an undergarment. It is still used in the synagogue. Apparently our Lord wore an outer garment with a κράσπεδον, or fringe, which the people were eager to touch as a conveyer of healing power (Matt. 9 : 20 ; 14 : 36 ; Mark 6 : 56) ; and the Pharisees in his time were accustomed to make these tassels or fringes on their garments very large in token of their peculiar strictness or sanctity (Matt. 23 : 5).

The reason given for the use of these tassels is that the wearers may look upon them and be reminded of the commandments of Jehovah (ver. 39), and especially that their attention might be kept at home instead of their "spying out" after their own heart as those that are led into impure desires by inflaming sights. The verb used is the same as that which describes the act of the spies in exploring the Promised Land. Their high privilege and obligation of being a holy people, a people whose God was Jehovah the deliverer from Egypt, was thus constantly kept before them. It became like the badge of an order, calculated to remind the people that they had something to live up to, and thus to foster and develop the esprit of the nation.

Chap. 16. REBELLION OF KORAH, DATHAN, AND ABIRAM. The company, the motives, and the places and manners of punishment in this extensive uprising are so obviously diverse and so easily separable that modern critics very confidently discover two or perhaps three narratives combined in this chapter. That the main basis of this and the following chapter, which belongs with it, is priestly is apparent ; the attack of Korah and his company is primarily upon the priestly prerogatives enjoyed by the tribe of Levi, or the family of Aaron ; and the result of the total vindication of the divine Levitical arrangement is a very wholesome dread on the part of the lay congregation for the awful sanctities of the tabernacle (see 17 : 12, 13). As an account of a rebellion of laymen against the exclusive privileges of the priesthood the narrative moves in the sphere of P. A further differentiation is made in the P element by which a part, designated as P<sup>2</sup> (see ver. 8-11, 36-40), is distinguished as making the rebellion a movement of the Levites or inferior priests against the family of Aaron, i. e., a schism in the priestly body itself. But aside from this strife over sacerdotal privileges there appears to be, on the part of Dathan and Abiram, a dissatisfaction with Moses as a civil ruler (see ver. 13) ; and these men appear to be punished in their own tents, instead of at the sanctuary, and for contumacy rather than for presuming to offer incense. They do not seem to have been guilty of sacrilege ; they were rebellious. This causes the critics to assign the parts relating to these Reubenites to JE. Thus Driver says : "In JE Dathan and Abiram, Reubenites, give vent to their dissatisfaction with Moses, complaining (ver. 14) that his promises have been unfulfilled, and resenting the authority (13<sup>b</sup>) and judgeship (15<sup>b</sup>) possessed by him : they, with their tents and households, are swallowed up by the earth (ver. 27-34). This is a rebellion of laymen against the civil authority claimed by Moses."

1-3. There is no doubt evidence of more or less compilation and redaction in this account ; but whether the whole is a badly welded narrative of two or three separate rebellions confused with each other, or whether it is a history of one widespread uprising of the theoretically consecrated people against the priests, headed and perhaps instigated by Korah who presented their plea as their advocate and yet had ulterior aims of his own, will be considered as we examine the variant passages more in detail.

The chief instigator, or informing spirit, of this rebellion, from whom it always takes its name, was Korah, who belonged to that family of the Levitical tribe which was concerned with the care of the most holy furniture of the tabernacle—the family of Kohath. To this family also belonged Moses and Aaron, who were of the branch of Amram, while Korah came of the next brother Izhar (cf. Exod. 6 : 18). Korah was therefore near enough to the priestly dignity to aspire to a place in the front rank ; and as he saw the priesthood becoming legally restricted and fixed in the family of Aaron he felt that the remaining Levites had reason for discontent. It is to be noted that previous to the time of Deuteronomy the rigid distinction between priests and Levites does not appear always to have been clearly maintained (see on 3 : 5-10) ; and this account of Korah's rebellion may well be taken as reflecting the dissatisfaction which arose when the Levites—whatever time that may have been in Israelitish history—found themselves being relegated to the position of subordinate militia.

It is this dissatisfaction at being a subordinate priest which the penetrating Moses detects in Korah as his personal motive in stirring up the rebellion (see ver. 8-11). But like all masterful and ambitious men Korah has his company whom he makes his tools to help him into power ; and these he has fired with a quite different and more popular dissatisfaction. Korah's more immediate company consists of two hundred and fifty men (ver. 2) who are princes and prominent men in the tribes, not all Levites, as may easily be inferred from such passages as 27 : 3, where Manassites find it necessary to deny complicity with the sedition. Rather loosely joined with these, and treated in the narrative almost as a separate company, are Dathan and Abiram, descendants through Eliab of Reuben, and On, who is not again mentioned, also a Reubenite and a son of Peleth, perhaps the same as Pallu (Gen. 46 : 9) who was the father of Eliab (Num. 26 : 8). These Reubenites could be most easily bent to Korah's purpose as their ancestor Reuben was the firstborn of Israel, and no doubt his descendants felt that his rights of primogeniture were being invaded. The magistracy had been assumed by Moses, and the priesthood, which now in the completed tabernacle was assuming a dignity and glory worth contending for, was restricted to the tribe of Levi—and where did the firstborn come in ? The rejection of Reuben, as based on Jacob's dying oracle (Gen. 49 : 4), was probably not yet known, or at least not acquiesced in ; and that oracle itself reflected the ideas of a time when Levi's contrasted destiny was thought of more as a penal denial of land inheritance (Gen. 49 : 7) than as a dignity or headship which Reuben had any reason to envy.

These men under the leadership of Korah held a meeting and presented their complaint against Moses and Aaron. Their grievance was that those leaders were usurping, especially in the prerogatives of the temple service, a dignity which belonged to the whole congregation. The whole body of the people were theoretically Jehovah's priests (Exod. 19 : 5, 6), and that Jehovah was among them had been not only often asserted, but was especially emphasized in that outbreak of prophecy at Kibroth-Hattaawah (11 : 25, 26). The heart of the contention, no doubt, was that the function of worship ought to be a family matter, and that in providing an exclusively dedicated sanctuary and a formal ritual Moses and Aaron were seeking to enhance their own dignity and keep others down. That the provision of orderly worship for the whole nation meant taking away the right of praying to God from individuals and families was, no doubt, a misunderstanding, and the whole contention in regard to worship is strikingly like Miriam's contention regarding prophecy (12 : 2), 3 And they gathered themselves together against Moses and against Aaron, and said unto them, Ye take too much upon you, seeing all the congregation are holy, every one of them, and the Lord is among them: wherefore then lift ye up yourselves above the congregation of the Lord?

4 And when Moses heard it, he fell upon his face:

5 And he spake unto Korah and unto all his company, saying, Even to-morrow the Lord will shew who are his, and who is holy; and will cause him to come near unto him: even him whom he hath chosen will he cause to come near unto him.

6 This do; Take you censers, Korah, and all his company;

7 And put fire therein, and put incense in them before the Lord to-morrow: and it shall be that the man whom the Lord doth choose, he shall be holy: ye take too much upon you, ye sons of Levi.

8 And Moses said unto Korah, Hear, I pray you, ye sons of Levi:

9 Seemeth it but a small thing unto you, that the God of Israel hath separated you from the congregation of Israel, to bring you near to himself to do the service of the tabernacle of the Lord, and to stand before the congregation to minister unto them?

10 And he hath brought thee near to him, and all thy brethren the sons of Levi with thee: and seek ye the priesthood also?

11 For which cause both thou and all thy company are gathered together against the Lord: and what is Aaron, that ye murmur against him?

5 fell upon his face: and he spake unto Korah and unto all his company, saying, In the morning the Lord will shew who are his, and who is holy, and will cause him to come near unto him: even him whom he shall choose will he

6 cause to come near unto him. This do; take

7 you censers, Korah, and all his company; and put fire therein, and put incense upon them before the Lord to-morrow: and it shall be that the man whom the Lord doth choose, he shall be holy: ye take too much upon you, ye sons of

9 ye sons of Levi: seemeth it but a small thing unto you, that the God of Israel hath separated you from the congregation of Israel, to bring you near to himself; to do the service of the tabernacle of the Lord, and to stand before the congregation to minister unto them; and that he hath brought thee near, and all thy brethren the sons of Levi with thee? and seek ye the where a function which Moses had expressly wished might be exercised by all (11 : 29) was taken as monopolized by Moses. Like Miriam's contention too, this charge was actuated by envy, for if the people had been pure-hearted, they could have seen that by the maintenance of an exclusively holy sanctuary and priesthood for the standard public worship, no essential privilege was being taken from them except the privilege of relatively exalted position. In this insistence on the priestly privileges of the whole congregation Dathan and Abiram no doubt sympathized, though they were probably not present at the meeting (ver. 12). They were, perhaps, preparing to offer a minchah (ver. 15), intended to operate to the disparagement of the public sacrifices, and possibly they had, along with Korah, set up a kind of rival tabernacle in their own part of the camp (see ver. 24, 27).

In this connection it is worth while to notice the grammatical puzzle which occurs in the first verse. In the Hebrew the chapter begins, And took, meaning that Korah and his company took something, but no object of the verb is given, the word men in our Authorized and Revised versions being supplied. Various completions of the sense have been conjecturally furnished; the LXX puts it, and talked; and some have thought the missing object of "took" ought to be counsel, and have pointed out that Korah and the Reubenites were located comparatively near each other on the south side of the camp, so that they could easily confer with each other. But considering that a presumptuous offering on their part is indicated in ver. 15, why may not the missing object be conjectured to be minchah? According to this understanding, these men took an offering as their first overt act of rebellion and as a concrete indication that they claimed the right to do so, and then assembled themselves against Moses and Aaron in order to justify and defend the movement.

4-11. The first act of Moses when this charge of self-aggrandizement was sprung upon him was to throw himself upon his face, to signify, as he also expressly indicates in ver. 11, that the question is one of divine arrangement rather than of human ambition. But he has the penetration to see that Korah is not really contending for an open priesthood, that is to say, for the abolition of the hierarchy, but is really challenging the title of Aaron to an exclusive dignity which he would gladly perpetuate and hold. The only way to decide this title is to submit the question to the decision of Jehovah, and the test proposed is the act of offering incense before Jehovah in competition, on the part of Korah's company and Aaron respectively, for the resultant signs of his approval. This was the act which had proved so disastrous to Nadab and Abihu (Lev. 10 : 1, 2), and in consenting to this test Korah was consistently and presumptuously standing by an unbelief which had asserted that the tenure of Aaron's priesthood was that of human ambition rather than of divine appointment.

In ver. 8-11, which the critics take to belong to another stratum of priestly thought, Moses reminds Korah that as one of the favored Levites

12 And Moses sent to call Dathan and Abiram, the sons of Eliab: which said, We will not come up:

13 Is it a small thing that thou hast brought us up out of a land that floweth with milk and honey, to kill us in the wilderness, except thou make thyself altogether a prince over us?

14 Moreover thou hast not brought us into a land that floweth with milk and honey, or given us inheritance of fields and vineyards: wilt thou put out the eyes of these men? we will not come up.

15 And Moses was very wroth, and said unto the Lord, Respect not thou their offering: I have not taken one ass from them, neither have I hurt one of them.

16 And Moses said unto Korah, Be thou and all thy company before the Lord, thou, and they, and Aaron, to-morrow:

17 And take every man his censer, and put incense in them, and bring ye before the Lord every man his censer, two hundred and fifty censers; thou also, and Aaron, each of you his censer.

18 And they took every man his censer, and put fire in them, and laid incense thereon, and stood in the door of the tabernacle of the congregation with Moses and Aaron.

19 And Korah gathered all the congregation against them unto the door of the tabernacle of 12 against him? And Moses sent to call Dathan and Abiram, the sons of Eliab: and they said,

13 We will not come up: is it a small thing that thou hast brought us up out of a land flowing with milk and honey, to kill us in the wilderness, but thou must needs make thyself also a

14 prince over us? Moreover thou hast not brought us into a land flowing with milk and honey, nor given us inheritance of fields and vineyards: wilt thou put out the eyes of these men? we will

15 not come up. And Moses was very wroth, and said unto the Lord, Respect not thou their offering: I have not taken one ass from them, neither

16 have I hurt one of them. And Moses said unto Korah, Be thou and all thy congregation before the Lord, thou, and they, and Aaron, to-morrow:

17 and take ye every man his censer, and put incense upon them, and bring ye before the Lord every man his censer, two hundred and fifty censers; thou also, and Aaron, each his censer.

18 And they took every man his censer, and put fire in them, and laid incense thereon, and stood at the door of the tent of meeting with 19 Moses and Aaron. And Korah assembled all the congregation against them unto the door of he already holds special privileges by express divine appointment, and that really there is nothing more for him to seek except the priesthood. He retorts in Korah's own words (see ver. 3) that the Levites rather than he are taking too much upon themselves. The impiety of their act is enhanced by the fact that they are already the objects of special divine favor, and this fact ought to place them in a position to see that it is not merely Aaron their fellow in dependence on God's will, but Jehovah himself whom they are resisting.

12-15. Dathan and Abiram seem to have remained in their tents nursing their discontent in a more sullen, and withal more secular way. It appears from ver. 15 that these men had done the most of overt and defiant exercising of priestly functions as laymen, while Korah only laid claim as a pretext to the right which they went on and assumed. Invited by Moses to the conference and test at the tent of meeting, they refused to come up, alleging as their reason a dissatisfaction with Moses' chimerical schemes and domineering methods (ver. 13) and a distrust of his specious ways of covering up his failures (ver. 14). He had not kept his promise of bringing them to a land of plenty and he was now seeking to divert their attention from the real seriousness of the situation. By the expression, wilt thou put, or bore, out the eyes of these men? (ver. 14) they perhaps meant to hint that by getting Korah and his company up to the tent of meeting where he was at home with his thaumaturgical methods and appliances, he would succeed in blinding them, or, throwing dust in their eyes—to translate into our familiar idiom—so that these dupes would be persuaded that there was nothing wrong. For their own part they were going to keep out of the range of his subtleties.

The charge that he was attempting to "play the lord" over them (ver. 13) made Moses very angry for, conscious of his own meekness (12: 3), he felt keenly its injustice. He could profess before God that he had never practised any of the arts of the despot either in the way of extortion or injury (ver. 15). Moreover there was apparent some great preparation for a spectacular sacrifice which, if it were to succeed, would operate greatly to the detriment of the dignity and influence of the sanctuary. Moses fervently prayed that this impious offering might elicit no signs of the divine approval. Just as a contentious and rebellious claim to the right of prophesying is visited with the punishment of leprosy (chap. 12), so the presenting of a meal offering in a manner and spirit subversive of authority could safely be accorded only rejection; though in neither case is it necessarily implied that no one may speak in God's name or approach him with gifts except those duly constituted by forms of investiture.

16-35. Moses repeats in detail the directions, given in ver. 6, 7, for a conference of the parties concerned, the two hundred and fifty men representing the ideal right of all the people to offer incense, Korah representing the right of the Levites to discharge the highest priestly functions, and Aaron alone on the other side as the representative of the divinely constituted priesthood. The directions are carried out, Korah taking pains to assemble the whole congregation to witness the great trial (ver. 19). Up to this point there is no express mention of divine the congregation; and the glory of the Lord appeared unto all the congregation.

20 And the Lord spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying,

21 Separate yourselves from among this congregation, that I may consume them in a moment.

22 And they fell upon their faces, and said, O God, the God of the spirits of all flesh, shall one man sin, and wilt thou be wroth with all the congregation?

23 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

24 Speak unto the congregation, saying, Get you up from about the tabernacle of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram.

25 And Moses rose up and went unto Dathan and Abiram; and the elders of Israel followed him.

26 And he spake unto the congregation, saying, Depart, I pray you, from the tents of these wicked men, and touch nothing of theirs, lest ye be consumed in all their sins.

27 So they gat up from the tabernacle of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, on every side: and Dathan and Abiram came out, and stood in the door of their tents, and their wives, and their sons, and their little children.

28 And Moses said, Hereby ye shall know that the Lord hath sent me to do all these works; for I have not done them of mine own mind.

29 If these men die the common death of all men, or if they be visited after the visitation of all men; then the Lord hath not sent me.

30 But if the Lord make a new thing, and the earth open her mouth, and swallow them up, with all that appertain unto them, and they go down quick into the pit; then ye shall understand that these men have provoked the Lord.

31 And it came to pass, as he had made an end of speaking all these words, that the ground clave asunder that was under them:

the tent of meeting: and the glory of the Lord appeared unto all the congregation.

20 And the Lord spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying, Separate yourselves from among this congregation, that I may consume them in a moment.

22 And they fell upon their faces, and said, O God, the God of the spirits of all flesh, shall one man sin, and wilt thou be wroth with all the congregation? And the Lord spake unto

24 Moses, saying, Speak unto the congregation, saying, Get you up from about the tabernacle

25 of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. And Moses rose up and went unto Dathan and Abiram;

26 and the elders of Israel followed him. And he spake unto the congregation, saying, Depart, I pray you, from the tents of these wicked men, and touch nothing of theirs, lest ye be consumed in all their sins.

27 So they gat them up from the tabernacle of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, on every side: and Dathan and Abiram came out, and stood at the door of their tents, and their wives, and their sons, and their little

28 ones. And Moses said, Hereby ye shall know that the Lord hath sent me to do all these works; for I have not done them of mine own

29 mind. If these men die the common death of all men, or if they be visited after the visitation of all men; then the Lord hath not sent me.

30 But if the Lord make a new thing, and the ground open her mouth, and swallow them up, with all that appertain unto them, and they go down alive into the pit; then ye shall understand that these men have despised the Lord.

31 And it came to pass, as he made an end of speaking all these words, that the ground clave interference either by way of command or theophany, but now that the climax of impiety is reached the divine glory shines out with a lurid and ominous light, as on a former occasion at Kadesh (see 14 : 10). The warning goes forth to Moses and Aaron to separate themselves from the congregation in order to give an opportunity for a sudden and wholesale act of retribution from Jehovah (ver. 20, 21). This seems to be a repetition in another form of the same threat which has repeatedly come so near execution and yet has been averted by intercession (Exod. 32 : 10, seq.; Num. 14 : 12, seq.). In this case Moses and Aaron prostrate themselves in entreaty and remonstrance against involving the great, thoughtless multitude in the punishment of the few (ver. 22).

In ver. 24 and 27 the word translated tabernacle is a word that is never used in prose of any structure except the sanctuary of Jehovah. This fact has led some critics to conjecture that the original form may have been "tabernacle of Jehovah," as in 17 : 13. It seems to me not impossible that this peculiar term, used as it is in the singular of a structure belonging in common to the three conspirators, may have been employed to denote some sort of rival sanctuary which these men had set up as the focus or meeting-point of their sacerdotal pretensions.

The narration now leaves the company whose contention was especially about the exclusive priesthood of Aaron, and takes up the contention and punishment of those who disputed the divine legation of Moses. Accompanied by the elders of Israel Moses went to Dathan and Abiram, warning the congregation to keep away from their tents lest they be involved in their sin and ruin. Finding themselves the objects of such a formal visitation and of such general avoidance, Dathan and Abiram with all their families came and stood at their tent doors to await the end. Solemnly and confidently Moses proposed the test whereby Jehovah's mind should be known, and yet at the same time the retribution should be so manifestly divine as to exonerate Moses from the charge of procuring it himself. He thus forestalled the charge which was nevertheless carelessly made the next day (see ver. 41). Regarding his own divine commission, Moses was willing to be vindicated by an act of Jehovah which should be like a new creation in its uniqueness and in the power involved (ver. 30). Moses is not usually given to talking very much in definite prediction of what Jehovah is going to do, but in this case his own prescience as a prophet needed to be vindicated, as well as his enjoyment of the divine protection. In fulfillment of his words the earth

32 And the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed them up, and their houses, and all the men that appertained unto Korah, and all their goods.

33 They, and all that appertained to them, went down alive into the pit, and the earth closed upon them: and they perished from among the congregation.

34 And all Israel that were round about them fled at the cry of them: for they said, Lest the earth swallow us up also.

35 And there came out a fire from the Lord, and consumed the two hundred and fifty men that offered incense.

36 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 37 Speak unto Eleazar the son of Aaron the priest, that he take up the censers out of the burning, and scatter thou the fire yonder; for they are hallowed.

38 The censers of these sinners against their own souls, let them make them broad plates for a covering of the altar: for they offered them before the Lord, therefore they are hallowed: and they shall be a sign unto the children of Israel.

39 And Eleazar the priest took the brasen censers, wherewith they that were burnt had offered; and they were made broad plates for a covering of the altar:

40 To be a memorial unto the children of Israel, that no stranger, which is not of the seed of Aaron, come near to offer incense before the Lord; that he be not as Korah, and as his company: as the Lord said to him by the hand of Moses.

41 But on the morrow all the congregation of the children of Israel murmured against Moses and against Aaron, saying, Ye have killed the people of the Lord.

42 And it came to pass, when the congregation was gathered against Moses and against Aaron, that they looked toward the tabernacle of the congregation: and, behold, the cloud covered it, and the glory of the Lord appeared.

43 And Moses and Aaron came before the tabernacle of the congregation.

32 asunder that was under them: and the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed them up, and their households, and all the men that appertained unto Korah, and all their goods. So they, and all that appertained to them, went down alive into the pit: and the earth closed upon them, and they perished from among the 34 assembly. And all Israel that were round about them fled at the cry of them: for they said, Lest 35 the earth swallow us up. And fire came forth from the Lord, and devoured the two hundred and fifty men that offered the incense.

36 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 37 Speak unto Eleazar the son of Aaron the priest, that he take up the censers out of the burning, and scatter thou the fire yonder; for they are 38 holy; even the censers of these sinners against their own lives, and let them be made beaten plates for a covering of the altar: for they offered them before the Lord, therefore they are holy: and they shall be a sign unto the chil- 39 dren of Israel. And Eleazar the priest took the brasen censers, which they that were burnt had offered; and they beat them out for a covering of the altar: to be a memorial unto the children of Israel, to the end that no stranger, which is not of the seed of Aaron, come near to burn incense before the Lord; that he be not as Korah, and as his company: as the Lord spake unto him by the hand of Moses.

41 But on the morrow all the congregation of the children of Israel murmured against Moses and against Aaron, saying, Ye have killed the people of the Lord. And it came to pass, when the congregation was assembled against Moses and against Aaron, that they looked toward the tent of meeting: and, behold, the cloud covered it, 43 and the glory of the Lord appeared. And Moses and Aaron came to the front of the tent of meet-opened and swallowed up the whole rebellious company in that part of the camp with their households. These are described as the men that appertained unto Korah (ver. 32), though we have the express statement (26 : 11) that the children of Korah died not; and as for Korah himself it is not clear whether he was involved in this destruction by earthquake or whether he perished by fire among those that offered the incense at the tent of meeting. In punishment of the two hundred and fifty who were in contention with Aaron, the consuming fire of the sanctuary manifested the self-avenging holiness of Jehovah's altar (ver. 35), as in the case of Nadab and Abihu (Lev. 10 : 1, 2).

36-40. The censers and the coals which had been so immediately and awfully associated with a direct act of divine retribution were too sacred ever to be employed for common purposes. Eleazar, who was not so strictly interdicted as the high priest himself from going among the dead (see Lev. 21 : 1-6), was directed to scatter the fire with which they had kindled their incense afar off (ver. 37), and to make the censers into beaten plates to cover the altar. These plates would thus remain as a reminder that no one not of the seed of Aaron was to burn incense before Jehovah (ver. 40). The line between priests and Levites was thus definitely drawn. As for the further test as to which was the priestly tribe, this was furnished by the events narrated in the next chapter. The latter part of ver. 40 seems to place Korah among those who perished at the sanctuary.

41-50. By the next day the people were somewhat recovered from the terror (ver. 34) inspired by the earthquake, and their resentment fixed itself on Moses and Aaron as the authors of the calamity of the day before. Such an inveterate eagerness to believe Moses and Aaron in the wrong, as well as the rash willingness of two hundred and fifty men to follow Korah as a leader into the most awful danger, shows how formidable and widely representative of the nation's dissatisfaction was Korah's conspiracy. They assembled at the door of the tent of meeting, on the very ground that had just been cleared of the corpses of those who had sinned against their own souls, lives (ver. 38), and charged the devoted brothers with murdering the people of the Lord. Again the ominous cloud and glory gathered about the sanctuary and attracted their shuddering attention (ver. 42). Again the voice of Jehovah bade Moses leave

44 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,
45 Get you up from among this congregation, that I may consume them in a moment. And they fell upon their faces.

46 And Moses said unto Aaron, Take a censer, and put fire therein from off the altar, and put on incense, and go quickly unto the congregation, and make an atonement for them: for there is wrath gone out from the Lord; the plague is begun.

47 And Aaron took as Moses commanded, and ran into the midst of the congregation; and, behold, the plague was begun among the people: and he put on incense, and made an atonement for the people.

48 And he stood between the dead and the living; and the plague was stayed.

CHAPTER XVII.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and take of every one of them a rod according to the house of their fathers, of all their princes according to the house of their fathers twelve rods: write thou every man's name upon his rod.

3 And thou shalt write Aaron's name upon the rod of Levi: for one rod shall be for the head of the house of their fathers.

4 And thou shalt lay them up in the tabernacle of the congregation before the testimony, where I will meet with you.

5 And it shall come to pass, that the man's rod, whom I shall choose, shall blossom: and I will make to cease from me the murmurings of the children of Israel, whereby they murmur against you.

And thou shalt write Aaron's name upon the rod of Levi: for there shall be one rod for each head of their fathers' houses. And thou shalt lay them up in the tent of meeting before the testimony, where I meet with you.

him free to destroy the people in a moment; and again Moses and Aaron prostrated themselves in the act of intercession (ver. 45). By some intuition which enabled him to follow the movements of the divine wrath Moses knew that the plague had broken out among the people; and he bade Aaron make haste and employ that priestly censer which had been exalted the day before by an act of destruction in supplanting the divine power to save (ver. 46). Thus the rationale of the high priesthood was more amply and normally manifested in saving its very despisers than by its power to repel profanation. While the plague raged with fatal effect Aaron stood as it were between dead and living until his intercession finally stayed its ravages, but not until fourteen thousand and seven hundred people had been fatally stricken.

Chap. 17. CONFIRMATION OF THE PRIESTLY PREROGATIVES OF THE TRIBE OF LEVI. Now that the rebellion is quelled, the real question at issue can be decided in a more declarative and instructive way. During the tumult of passion the voice of the teacher is hushed; the only thing to which power can then address itself is the restoration of order. The utmost which the dreadful example made of Korah's company could teach was the negative truth, of which remembrance was constantly made in the beaten plates of the altar (16: 40), "that no stranger, which is not of the seed of Aaron, come near to burn incense before the Lord." The positive attestation of Jehovah's choice of Levi, or Aaron, is now exhibited through a miracle in his express behalf.

1-11. Moses was directed to take of each of the princes or heads of the tribes a rod inscribed with the name of the possessor, making twelve rods. It seems probable that Ephraim and Manasseh were counted as two tribes, so that there were twelve exclusive of Levi, Aaron's being an additional rod, as the Vulgate understands it. This was the reckoning which was characteristic of P (see 1: 10, 32, 34, etc.), though the counting of Joseph as one tribe was not unknown (Deut. 27: 12). Aaron was considered the prince or head of the house of Levi. These rods were to be laid up in the tent of meeting, before the testimony, i. e., the tables of stone, which was Jehovah's chosen place to be communicated with (ver. 4; comp. Exod. 30: 36), and there Jehovah would work a miracle of growth which would assuage the murmurings of the children

6 And Moses spake unto the children of Israel, and every one of their princes gave him a rod apiece, for each prince one, according to their fathers' houses, even twelve rods: and the rod of Aaron was among their rods.

7 And Moses laid up the rod before the Lord in the tabernacle of witness.

8 And it came to pass, that on the morrow Moses went into the tabernacle of witness; and, behold, the rod of Aaron for the house of Levi was budded, and brought forth buds, and bloomed blossoms, and yielded almonds.

9 And Moses brought out all the rods from before the Lord unto all the children of Israel: and they looked, and took every man his rod.

10 And the Lord said unto Moses, Bring Aaron's rod again before the testimony, to be kept for a token against the rebels; and thou shalt quite take away their murmurings from me, that they die not.

11 And Moses did so: as the Lord commanded him, so did he.

12 And the children of Israel spake unto Moses, saying, Behold, we perish, we are undone, we 13 Whosoever cometh anything near unto the tabernacle of the Lord shall die: shall we be consumed with dying?

6 And Moses spake unto the children of Israel, and all their princes gave him rods, for each prince one, according to their fathers' houses, even twelve rods: and the rod of Aaron was 7 among their rods. And Moses laid up the rods before the Lord in the tent of the testimony.

8 And it came to pass on the morrow, that Moses went into the tent of the testimony; and, behold, the rod of Aaron for the house of Levi was budded, and put forth buds, and bloomed

9 blossoms, and bare ripe almonds. And Moses brought out all the rods from before the Lord unto all the children of Israel: and they looked,

10 and took every man his rod. And the Lord said unto Moses, Put back the rod of Aaron before the testimony, to be kept for a token against the children of rebellion; that thou mayest make an end of their murmurings against me, 11 that they die not. Thus did Moses: as the Lord commanded him, so did he.

12 And the children of Israel spake unto Moses, saying, Behold, we perish, we are undone, we 13 are all undone. Every one that cometh near, that cometh near unto the tabernacle of the Lord, dieth: shall we perish all of us?

CHAPTER XVIII.

1 AND the Lord said unto Aaron, Thou and thy sons and thy father's house with thee shall bear the iniquity of the sanctuary: and thou and thy sons with thee shall bear the iniquity of your priesthood.

2 And thy brethren also of the tribe of Levi, the tribe of thy father, bring thou with thee, that they may be joined unto thee, and minister unto thee:

1 AND the Lord said unto Aaron, Thou and thy sons and thy fathers' house with thee shall bear the iniquity of the sanctuary: and thou and thy sons with thee shall bear the iniquity of your 2 priesthood. And thy brethren also, the tribe of Levi, the tribe of thy father, bring thou near with thee, that they may be joined unto thee, of Israel. Moses did according to directions, and the next day, on going into the tent of testimony, he found Aaron's rod exhibiting all the stages of vegetation from buds to blossoms and ripe almonds (ver 8). Thus that house was designated for the priesthood whose sceptre had life and growth in it. The rods were all brought out and each man was bidden identify his own and see for himself whose insignia exhibited the tokens of Jehovah's choice (ver. 9). Finally the burgeoned staff was laid up before the testimony along with the memorial manna (Exod. 16 : 34) and the standard incense (Exod. 30 : 36), that it might be a permanent evidence or token to the "sons of rebellion" (ver. 10), calculated to silence controversy and prevent the fatal consequences of sedition.

12, 13. These two verses, which are translated better in the Revised version, appear to express more naturally the feelings of the people after the dreadful events of chap. 16 than after the miracle that has just been recounted. They form indeed a natural transition from this whole episode of judgment and separation to the legislation of the next chapter, and may well be read in close connection with 18 : 1.

Chap. 18. DUTIES, RELATIVE POSITION, AND REVENUES OF THE PRIESTS AND LEVITES.
1-7. The regulations of this chapter revert to the preceding chapters as their occasion, especially in ver. 3, 5, where they are said to be intended to prevent Levites from fatally intruding on the priests' duties, and in ver. 22, where the Levites themselves appear as safeguards against the provoking of the divine wrath on the part of the people. This first section simply defines the priests' and the Levites' relative position and duties. It is addressed to Aaron, sometimes as head of the tribe of Levi, sometimes as the chief priest. He with his sons and his father's house (ver. 1), i. e., all the tribe, are to be responsible for the sanctuary in general; while he and his sons are to occupy the narrower circle of the priesthood. Of these respective spheres of duty the incumbents are said to bear the iniquity, meaning that for whatever fault there is in the performance or the defense of these sacred functions they are to be responsible. That the sanctuary itself and its most sacred performances incurred defilement was recognized in the annual act of atonement (see Lev. 16 : 16, 18); and that the consecrated body of men should recognize in their weighty responsibilities a certain burden of "iniquity," would follow from the principle that those assuming the holiest duties and characters are the most sensitive to short-coming (see on chap. 6 : 13-21).

As for the Levites, these were to be joined (ver. 2) to Aaron, and to act as his subordinates, but thou and thy sons with thee shall minister before the tabernacle of witness.

3 And they shall keep thy charge, and the charge of all the tabernacle: only they shall not come nigh the vessels of the sanctuary and the altar, that neither they, nor ye also, die.

4 And they shall be joined unto thee, and keep the charge of the tabernacle of the congregation, for all the service of the tabernacle: and a stranger shall not come nigh unto you.

5 And ye shall keep the charge of the sanctuary, and the charge of the altar: that there be no wrath any more upon the children of Israel.

6 And I, behold, I have taken your brethren the Levites from among the children of Israel: to you they are given as a gift for the Lord, to do the service of the tabernacle of the congregation.

7 Therefore thou and thy sons with thee shall keep your priest's office for every thing of the altar, and within the veil; and ye shall serve: I have given your priest's office unto you as a service of gift: and the stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death.

8 And the Lord spake unto Aaron, Behold, I also have given thee the charge of mine heave offerings of all the hallowed things of the children of Israel; unto thee have I given them by reason of the anointing, and to thy sons, by an ordinance for ever.

9 This shall be thine of the most holy things, reserved from the fire: every oblation of theirs, every meat offering of theirs, and every sin offering of theirs, and every trespass offering of theirs, which they shall render unto me, shall be most holy for thee and for thy sons.

10 In the most holy place shalt thou eat it; every male shall eat it: it shall be holy unto thee.

11 And this is thine; the heave offering of their gift, with all the wave offerings of the children of Israel: I have given them unto thee, and to thy sons and to thy daughters with thee, by a statute for ever: every one that is clean in thy house shall eat of it.

their charge being the tent; while to the vessels of the sanctuary and to the altar (ver. 3), and to all that is within the veil (ver. 7) the priests alone had the right of admission and contact. The word "joined" is a play upon the name Levi, which means joined, the writer thus indicating that Levi exemplified the meaning of his name in being joined to the priesthood, as well as in the circumstance which led his mother first to give it to him (see Gen. 29 : 34). The Levites are further described as a gift given נְתֻנִים, nethunim, to Jehovah (ver. 6), as more fully explained in 3 : 5-10; and the priesthood is described as a "service of gift" (ver. 7), i. e., perhaps a dignity derived from Jehovah by direct bestowal, and not a right which any one might claim or seize. The word stranger in ver. 4 means one not of the tribe of Levi, while in ver. 7 it means one not of the seed of Aaron, in either case meaning an alien in relation to the particular privileged class under consideration at the time.

8-19. We have in this section an account of the revenues especially devoted to the priests. Like the first section it is addressed specifically to Aaron (ver. 8). Aaron and his sons have the charge, or guardianship, of Jehovah's תְּרוּמוֹת, t'rumoth, or offerings which the children of Israel and minister unto thee: but thou and thy sons with thee shall be before the tent of the testimony. And they shall keep thy charge, and the charge of all the Tent: only they shall not come nigh unto the vessels of the sanctuary and unto the altar, that they die not, neither they, nor ye.

4 And they shall be joined unto thee, and keep the charge of the tent of meeting, for all the service of the Tent: and a stranger shall not come nigh unto you. And ye shall keep the charge of the sanctuary, and the charge of the altar: that there be wrath no more upon the

6 children of Israel. And I, behold, I have taken your brethren the Levites from among the children of Israel: to you they are a gift, given unto the Lord, to do the service of the tent of meeting. And thou and thy sons with thee shall keep your priesthood for every thing of the altar, and for that within the veil; and ye shall serve: I give you the priesthood as a service of gift: and the stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death.

7 Therefore thou and thy sons with thee shall keep your priest's office for every thing of the altar, and within the veil; and ye shall serve: I have given your priest's office unto you as a service of gift: and the stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death.

8 And the Lord spake unto Aaron, And I, behold, I have given thee the charge of mine heave offerings, even all the hallowed things of the children of Israel, unto thee have I given them by reason of the anointing, and to thy

9 sons, as a due for ever. This shall be thine of the most holy things, reserved from the fire: every oblation of theirs, even every meal offering of theirs, and every sin offering of theirs, and every guilt offering of theirs, which they shall render unto me, shall be most holy for

10 thee and for thy sons. As the most holy things shalt thou eat thereof: every male shall eat

11 thereof; it shall be holy unto thee. And this is thine; the heave offering of their gift, even all the wave offerings of the children of Israel: I have given them unto thee, and to thy sons and to thy daughters with thee, as a due for ever: every one that is clean in thy house shall eat elevate in token of consecration. The word is used in its widest sense, as in 5 : 9 ; Lev. 22 : 12 ; and the priests have the strongest motive for seeing that these offerings are faithfully rendered to Jehovah, namely, their own interest as direct beneficiaries. These are given them by reason of the anointing (ver. 8), or perhaps for an anointing portion (see the same word in Exod. 29 : 29), and confirmed to them as an ordinance for ever, of eternity. Five different kinds of offerings are enumerated in detail: (1) The "most holy things from the fire," i. e., all oblations, such as the meal offerings, sin offerings, guilt offerings, of which only the "memorial" was burned. The burnt offering is not enumerated, because that was entirely consumed, and only the skin went to the priest. These were most sacredly reserved for Aaron and the male members of his family, who were to eat them in a holy place (ver. 10; cf. Lev. 7 : 6). (2) "The תְּרוּמָה, t'rumah, of their gift," i. e., the wave breast and the heave thigh of the peace offerings, as specified in Lev. 7 : 28-34. Of this all who were ceremonially clean belonging to the priest's household might eat, whether sons or daughters, or even servants born in the house or bought with his money (ver. 11; cf. Lev. 22 : 11).

12 All the best of the oil, and all the best of the wine, and of the wheat, the firstfruits of them which they shall offer unto the Lord, them have I given thee.

13 And whatsoever is first ripe in the land, which they shall bring unto the Lord, shall be thine; every one that is clean in thine house shall eat of it.

14 Every thing devoted in Israel shall be thine.

15 Every thing that openeth the matrix in all flesh, which they bring unto the Lord, whether it be of men or beasts, shall be thine: nevertheless the firstborn of man shalt thou surely redeem, and the firstling of unclean beasts shalt thou redeem.

16 And those that are to be redeemed from a month old shalt thou redeem, according to thine estimation, for the money of five shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary, which is twenty gerahs.

17 But the firstling of a cow, or the firstling of a sheep, or the firstling of a goat, thou shalt not redeem; they are holy: thou shalt sprinkle their blood upon the altar, and shalt burn their fat for an offering made by fire, for a sweet savour unto the Lord.

18 And the flesh of them shall be thine, as the wave breast and as the right shoulder are thine.

19 All the heave offerings of the holy things, which the children of Israel offer unto the Lord, have I given thee, and thy sons and thy daughters with thee, by a statute for ever: it is a covenant of salt for ever before the Lord unto thee and to thy seed with thee.

20 And the Lord spake unto Aaron, Thou shalt have no inheritance in their land, neither shalt thou have any part among them: I am thy part and thine inheritance among the children of Israel.

21 And, behold, I have given the children of Levi all the tenth in Israel for an inheritance, for their service which they serve, even the service of the tabernacle of the congregation.

22 Neither must the children of Israel henceforth come nigh the tabernacle of the congregation, lest they bear sin, and die.

12 thereof. All the best of the oil, and all the best of the vintage, and of the corn, the firstfruits of them which they give unto the Lord, to thee have I given them. The firstripe fruits of all that is in their land, which they bring unto the Lord, shall be thine; every one that is clean in thy house shall eat thereof. Every thing devoted

15 in Israel shall be thine. Every thing that openeth the womb, of all flesh which they offer unto the Lord, both of man and beast, shall be thine: nevertheless the firstborn of man shalt thou surely redeem, and the firstling of unclean

16 beasts shalt thou redeem. And those that are to be redeemed of them from a month old shalt thou redeem, according to thine estimation, for the money of five shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary (the same is twenty gerahs). But the firstling of an ox, or the firstling of a sheep, or the firstling of a goat, thou shalt not redeem; they are holy: thou shalt sprinkle their blood upon the altar, and shalt burn their fat for an offering made by fire, for a sweet savour unto

18 the Lord. And the flesh of them shall be thine, as the wave breast and as the right thigh, it shall be thine. All the heave offerings of the holy things, which the children of Israel offer unto the Lord, have I given thee, and thy sons and thy daughters with thee, as a due for ever: it is a covenant of salt for ever before the Lord

20 unto thee and to thy seed with thee. And the Lord said unto Aaron, Thou shalt have no inheritance in their land, neither shalt thou have any portion among them: I am thy portion and thine inheritance among the children of Israel.

21 And unto the children of Levi, behold, I have given all the tithe in Israel for an inheritance, in return for their service which they serve, even the service of the tent of meeting. And henceforth the children of Israel shall not come nigh the tent of meeting, lest they bear sin, and

(3) The "fat" of the oil, and of the vintage, and of the corn, and the first fruits which are offered to Jehovah (ver. 12, 13; cf. Lev. 23 : 20).

(4) Everything made cherem, or put under the ban (ver. 14; see Lev. 27 : 28).

(5) "Everything that openeth the womb," i. e., all firstlings, whether of man or beast, which by fundamental principle belonged to Jehovah (Exod. 13 : 2).

Of these the firstborn of man was invariably to be redeemed, and that of an unclean beast to be redeemed or destroyed according to regulations given more in detail elsewhere (Lev. 27 : 6; Exod. 13 : 13; 34 : 20; Lev. 27 : 27).

The firstling of a beast such as is offered in sacrifice could not be redeemed (ver. 17), as its blood was to be dashed on the altar, and its fat as sacred was to be burned for an odor of pleasantness to Jehovah.

The flesh, however, went to the priest (ver. 18), just as the wave breast and the right thigh of the peace offering.

This was to be for Aaron and his sons and daughters an ordinance of eternity (ver. 19), designated as a "covenant of salt," i. e., a covenant carrying with it obligations as inviolable as those of hospitality, of which salt is the symbol (see on Lev. 2 : 13, and cf. 2 Chron. 13 : 5).

20-24. This section appears to be addressed to Aaron as the head of the tribe of Levi. Ver. 20 therefore outlines the general principle which applies to the whole tribe, namely, that Jehovah, rather than a tract of land, is his inheritance.

His support is a sacred revenue coming from Jehovah himself. It is from this point of view that the tithes of the children of Israel are called their heave offering to Jehovah (ver. 24), an unusual designation for the secular title which, so far as we know, was not literally elevated in token of consecration.

This principle of a divine rather than a landed maintenance being enunciated, the details of the Levites' secular support are given in ver. 21-24, and that of the priests in ver. 25-32.

The custom of the tithe came down from patriarchal times (see Gen. 14 : 20; 28 : 22), and is made a legal institution in Lev. 27 : 30-33; but here for the first the specific use or application of that tax is designated.

The tithe of the children of Israel comes to the Levites as wages in return for the service which they serve (ver. 21).

That service, here described as a service to the children of Israel, is so far as they are concerned the service of protecting them from necessary contact with the self-avenging sanctities of the tabernacle (ver. 22; cf. 1 : 53; 8 : 19, and notes). This revenue being simply business wages, there is 23 But the Levites shall do the service of the tabernacle of the congregation, and they shall bear their iniquity: it shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations, that among the children of Israel they have no inheritance.

24 But the tithes of the children of Israel, which they offer as an heave offering unto the Lord, I have given to the Levites to inherit: therefore I have said unto them, Among the children of Israel they shall have no inheritance.

25 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

26 Thus speak unto the Levites, and say unto them, When ye take of the children of Israel the tithes which I have given you from them for your inheritance, then ye shall offer up an heave offering of it for the Lord, even a tenth part of the tithe.

27 And this your heave offering shall be reckoned unto you, as though it were the corn of the threshing-floor, and as the fulness of the winepress.

28 Thus ye also shall offer an heave offering unto the Lord of all your tithes, which ye receive of the children of Israel; and ye shall give thereof the Lord's heave offering to Aaron the priest.

29 Out of all your gifts ye shall offer every heave offering of the Lord, of all the best thereof, even the hallowed part thereof out of it.

30 Therefore thou shalt say unto them, When ye have heaved the best thereof from it, then it shall be counted unto the Levites as the increase of the threshing-floor, and as the increase of the winepress.

31 And ye shall eat it in every place, ye and your households: for it is your reward for your service in the tabernacle of the congregation.

32 And ye shall bear no sin by reason of it, when ye have heaved from it the best of it: neither shall ye pollute the holy things of the children of Israel, lest ye die.

23 die. But the Levites shall do the service of the tent of meeting, and they shall bear their iniquity: it shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations, and among the children of Israel they shall have no inheritance. For the tithe of the children of Israel, which they offer as an heave offering unto the Lord, I have given to the Levites for an inheritance: therefore I have said unto them, Among the children of Israel they shall have no inheritance.

25 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

26 Moreover thou shalt speak unto the Levites, and say unto them, When ye take of the children of Israel the tithe which I have given you from them for your inheritance, then ye shall offer up an heave offering of it for the Lord, a

27 tithe of the tithe. And your heave offering shall be reckoned unto you, as though it were the corn of the threshing-floor, and as the ful-

28 ness of the winepress. Thus ye also shall offer an heave offering unto the Lord of all your tithes, which ye receive of the children of Israel; and thereof ye shall give the Lord's heave

29 offering to Aaron the priest. Out of all your gifts ye shall offer every heave offering of the Lord, of all the best thereof, even the hallowed

30 part thereof out of it. Therefore thou shalt say unto them, When ye heave the best thereof from it, then it shall be counted unto the Levites as the increase of the threshing-floor, and as the

31 increase of the winepress. And ye shall eat it in every place, ye and your households: for it is your reward in return for your service in the 32 tent of meeting. And ye shall bear no sin by reason of it, when ye have heaved from it the best thereof: and ye shall not profane the holy things of the children of Israel, that ye die not.

CHAPTER XIX.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying,

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses and unto no restriction as to when and where it shall be eaten as in the case of the holy things over which special jurisdiction is claimed.

25-32. Jehovah now addresses Moses (ver. 25), as the Levites are to be instructed concerning an obligation which Aaron is not competent to enforce. Observe that while the Levites are the subordinates or assistants of Aaron (ver. 2) they are not his employees. They receive their support from the people (ver. 21), and Aaron is therefore their beneficiary rather than their paymaster. The principle laid down in this section is, that when the tithe has once come into possession of the Levites it is as much theirs to be accounted for and taxed in its turn as if it were their produce from the ground (ver. 27). Of this tithe they are to take a tenth as their heave offering to Jehovah (ver. 26), and this shall go the priest. This tenth must be of the best, constituting indeed the holy part of their gifts (ver. 29). It is not until this holy part has been taken that the remainder has really become their own, or secular wages (ver. 31), so that they can eat it wherever they choose without fear of "profaning the holy things of the children of Israel," and so incurring risk of death (ver. 32).

Chap. 19. THE WATER OF PURIFICATION; ITS PREPARATION AND USE. With the peculiar characteristics of Jewish religious feeling, which centered the integrity of the spiritual life in the shunning of contagion from without (see Commentary on Leviticus, remarks at the beginning of chap. 11), the providing of a water of purification was a logical, one might almost say an inevitable, outgrowth of the desire to make religion available for the emergencies of common life. This water was a kind of portable preparation in which were concentrated the ceremonially cleansing virtues of the sin offering. It could be applied without the intervention of the priest, and at a distance from the sanctuary. Just as, when baptism is held to be of vital importance for the salvation of the soul, ecclesiastical regulations permit this rite to be performed by laymen in cases of emergency, so when entire ceremonial cleanness can alone fit the person for the congregation of Jehovah, there is provision made for the restoration of that cleanness without the presence of the priest. The most common source of accidental defilement would be by the dead; and if this chapter may be taken as having any special

2 This is the ordinance of the law which the Lord hath commanded, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel, that they bring thee a red heifer without spot, wherein is no blemish, and upon which never came yoke:

3 And ye shall give her unto Eleazar the priest, that he may bring her forth without the camp, and one shall slay her before his face:

4 And Eleazar the priest shall take of her blood with his finger, and sprinkle of her blood directly before the tabernacle of the congregation seven times:

5 And one shall burn the heifer in his sight; her skin, and her flesh, and her blood, with her dung, shall he burn:

6 And the priest shall take cedar wood, and hyssop, and scarlet, and cast it into the midst of the burning of the heifer.

7 Then the priest shall wash his clothes, and he shall bathe his flesh in water, and afterward he shall come into the camp, and the priest shall be unclean until the even.

8 And he that burneth her shall wash his clothes in water, and bathe his flesh in water, and shall be unclean until the even.

9 And a man that is clean shall gather up the ashes of the heifer, and lay them up without the camp in a clean place, and it shall be kept for the congregation of the children of Israel for a water of separation: it is a purification for sin.

10 And he that gathereth the ashes of the heifer shall wash his clothes, and be unclean until the even: and it shall be unto the children of Israel, and unto the stranger that sojourneth among them, for a statute for ever.

11 He that toucheth the dead body of any man shall be unclean seven days.

2 Aaron, saying, This is the statute of the law which the Lord hath commanded, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel, that they bring thee a red heifer without spot, wherein is no blemish,

3 and upon which never came yoke: and ye shall give her unto Eleazar the priest, and he shall bring her forth without the camp, and one shall

4 slay her before his face: and Eleazar the priest shall take of her blood with his finger, and sprinkle of her blood toward the front of the

5 tent of meeting seven times: and one shall burn the heifer in his sight; her skin, and her flesh, and her blood, with her dung, shall he

6 burn: and the priest shall take cedar wood, and hyssop, and scarlet, and cast it into the midst of

7 the burning of the heifer. Then the priest shall wash his clothes, and he shall bathe his flesh in water, and afterward he shall come into the

8 camp, and the priest shall be unclean until the even. And he that burneth her shall wash his

9 clothes in water, and bathe his flesh in water, and shall be unclean until the even. And a

10 man that is clean shall gather up the ashes of the heifer, and lay them up without the camp in a clean place, and it shall be kept for the

11 congregation of the children of Israel for a water of separation: it is a sin offering. And he that gathereth the ashes of the heifer shall

12 wash his clothes, and be unclean until the even: and it shall be unto the children of Israel, and unto the stranger that sojourneth connection with the time and events, the occurrence of so many deaths by the plague (16 : 49), and the needs of those who engaged in the task of burial, would suggest the necessity of some such legislation. The use of purifying waters was not uncommon in ancient religions. The red heifer, with its rites so redolent of chemic-ethical suggestion, was a fascinating subject to the Oriental mind, so that the title "The Heifer" is given to a whole Sura of the Koran.

1-10. This ordinance is called the ordinance, statute, of the law (ver. 2), a form of expression which occurs in only one other place (31 : 21), where this same law of purification from the dead is enforced and amplified. Addressed to Moses and Aaron (ver. 1), it simply prescribes in detail the preparation of a water of separation, or, impurity (ver. 9), for the cleansing of those who have been defiled by the dead. The children of Israel are to bring to the priest a red heifer which is perfect, without spot, and on which no yoke was ever imposed (ver. 2). It will be remembered that the kine by which the Philistines sent back the ark into Judea were also to be such as had never borne a yoke (1 Sam. 6 : 7). This heifer is to be delivered to Eleazar the priest, the one who was chosen to take up the censers from the burning (16 : 37), as the task which at every step left the operator defiled could not be imposed on the high priest. The victim is to be slain without the camp, under Eleazar's personal inspection (ver. 3), and he is to sprinkle of the blood with his finger seven times toward the front of the tent of meeting (ver. 4). In the later times of the Jewish people the heifer was slain on the Mount of Olives in full view of the east gate of the temple. After slaughtering, the animal is burned entire under the eye of the priest (ver. 5), while he personally casts into the fire cedar wood and hyssop and scarlet, the substances used in connection with the cleansing of the leper (Lev. 14 : 4, 6). As both the priest (ver. 7) and the one who does the burning (ver. 8) are rendered unclean by their respective shares of the work, the final task of gathering the ashes and storing them in a clean place has to be performed by a third person, ceremonially untainted (ver. 9), who in his turn is rendered unclean and has to undergo the same ablutions as his predecessors (ver. 10). The symbolism of the red color, of the unblemished and untainted condition of the beast, and of the cedar and scarlet and hyssop are not explained and can only be conjectured. A certain mystery, however, always attaches to the insisting on conditions and the concocting of ingredients the uses of which are not obvious. This sacrifice is designated, so far as its efficacy is concerned, as a sin offering (ver. 9); and it is prescribed as a perpetual ordinance.

12 He shall purify himself with it on the third day, and on the seventh day he shall be clean: but if he purify not himself the third day, then the seventh day he shall not be clean.

13 Whosoever toucheth the dead body of any man that is dead, and purifieth not himself, defileth the tabernacle of the Lord; and that soul shall be cut off from Israel: because the water of separation was not sprinkled upon him, he shall be unclean; his uncleanness is yet upon him.

14 This is the law, when a man dieth in a tent: all that come into the tent, and all that is in the tent, shall be unclean seven days.

15 And every open vessel, which hath no covering bound upon it, is unclean.

16 And whosoever toucheth one that is slain with a sword in the open fields, or a dead body, or a bone of a man, or a grave, shall be unclean seven days.

17 And for an unclean person they shall take of the ashes of the burnt heifer of purification for sin, and running water shall be put thereto in a vessel:

18 And a clean person shall take hyssop, and dip it in the water, and sprinkle it upon the tent, and upon all the vessels, and upon the persons that were there, and upon him that touched a boue, or one slain, or one dead, or a grave:

19 And the clean person shall sprinkle upon the unclean on the third day, and on the seventh day: and on the seventh day he shall purify himself, and wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and shall be clean at even.

20 But the man that shall be unclean, and shall not purify himself, that soul shall be cut off from among the congregation, because he hath defiled the sanctuary of the Lord: the water of separation hath not been sprinkled upon him; he is unclean.

21 And it shall be a perpetual statute unto them, that he that sprinkleth the water of separation shall wash his clothes; and he that toucheth the water of separation shall be unclean until even.

22 And whatsoever the unclean person toucheth shall be unclean; and the soul that toucheth it shall be unclean until even.

12 clean seven days: the same shall purify himself therewith on the third day, and on the seventh day he shall be clean: but if he purify not himself the third day, then the seventh day he shall not be clean.

13 Whosoever toucheth the dead body of any man that is dead, and purifieth not himself, defileth the tabernaecle of the Lord; and that soul shall be cut off from Israel: because the water of separation was not sprinkled upon him, he shall be unclean; his uncleanness is yet upon him.

14 This is the law when a man dieth in a tent: every one that cometh into the tent, and every one that is in the tent, shall be unclean seven days.

15 And every open vessel, which hath no covering bound upon it, is unclean.

16 And whosoever in the open field toucheth one that is slain with a sword, or a dead body, or a bone of a man, or a grave, shall be unclean seven days.

17 And for the unclean they shall take of the ashes of the burning of the sin offering, and running water shall be put thereto in a vessel:

18 and a clean person shall take hyssop, and dip it in the water, and sprinkle it upon the tent, and upon all the vessels, and upon the persons that were there, and upon him that touched the bone, or the slain, or the dead, or the grave: and the clean person shall sprinkle upon the unclean on the third day, and on the seventh day: and on the seventh day he shall purify him; and he shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and shall be clean

20 at even. But the man that shall be unclean, and shall not purify himself, that soul shall be cut off from the midst of the assembly, because he hath defiled the sanctuary of the Lord: the water of separation hath not been sprinkled

21 upon him; he is unclean. And it shall be a perpetual statute unto them: and he that sprinkleth the water of separation shall wash his clothes; and he that toucheth the water of 22 separation shall be unclean until even. And whatsoever the unclean person toucheth shall be unclean; and the soul that toucheth it shall be unclean until even.

11-22. Though this substance prepared from the ashes of the red heifer is called a "water of separation" (ver. 9) it is not until ver. 17 that the direction to add water to the ashes is distinctly given; and it seems more likely that the purifying specific was preserved in the form of ashes than in the form of lye, and that running or "living" water was added to it as it was needed. The general law for the one who touches the dead is that he is unclean and that seven days is the least period that will restore him. On the third day and on the seventh day he is to purify himself with the water of separation, after which he is clean. Neglect of the first or third-day application, however, hinders the final efficacy of the process (ver. 12); and entire neglect of the law entails the cutting off of the delinquent from the congregation (ver. 13). The disregard of these precautions in respect to uncleanness from the dead is said to "defile the tabernacle of Jehovah," a sort of implied identification of the temple of God with the human body of which we see traces in early Christian feeling (John 2 : 19, 21 ; 1 Cor. 6 : 19, 20). In ver. 14-17 specific cases of defilement requiring the use of the water of separation are given. A death in a tent renders every one in it, and every subsequent visitor while the body is there, unclean for seven days (ver. 14). Every open vessel which has not a cover tied on (lit., "a cover, a string") is also rendered unclean (ver. 15). Those in the open air who come in contact with a slain man, or a corpse, or a bone, or a grave are also rendered unclean (ver. 16). The application of the water is more particularly described in ver. 17, seq., we being furnished not only with the information that the ashes are to be treated with living water (ver. 17), but also that the patients are to be sprinkled by some clean person (ver. 18), instead of by themselves as might have been inferred from ver. 12; and that the administrator (ver. 19, 21), or indeed whoever touches the water or the unclean person (ver. 22), shall incur a defilement lasting until the evening.

Chap. 20. DEATH OF MIRIAM. THE WATERS OF STRIFE. REFUSAL OF A PASSAGE THROUGH EDOM. DEATH OF AARON AT MOUNT HOR. I. Perhaps it would be of small profit to the general reader to undertake to identify and delimit the passages in this and the following chapter which are described by

CHAPTER XX.

1 THEN came the children of Israel, even the whole congregation, into the desert of Zin in the first month: and the people abode in Kadesh; and Miriam died there, and was buried there.

2 And there was no water for the congregation: and they gathered themselves together against Moses and against Aaron.

3 And the people chode with Moses, and spake, saying, Would God that we had died when our brethren died before the Lord!

the critics as compiled from P and from JE, or E alone, respectively. It is enough to say that the section appears to be compiled from various sources rather than struck out at a heat by a single author. Certainly Moses, if he were writing the sustained account as we have it, would have made his chronology clearer than to bring his congregation abruptly into Kadesh in the first month (ver. 1), without mentioning the year, after having given, as his last note of time, the second year, and the second month, and the twentieth day of the month (10 : 11), the date at which the cloud was lifted from the tabernacle for the removal from Sinai. See R. F. Horton, "Inspiration and the Bible," pp. 186, 187.

The year of this assembling is perhaps the fortieth year of the wandering, as it seems to be in close connection with this event that the people move on to Mount Hor (see ver. 22) where Aaron dies; and this occurred in the fortieth year after the children of Israel came out of Egypt (see 33 : 38). Of this long wandering, during which the whole generation was wasting away, we have no history except the account of the dispute about the priesthood (chap. 16, 17) which may have occurred in the earlier part of it. The people were sentenced to the nomadic life by being commanded to take the Red Sea road (14 : 25), which is the modern Hajj route far to the south of Kadesh, leading to the head of the gulf of 'Akabah. It is probable that the congregation, who were sentenced to be shepherds in the wilderness (see 14 : 33), were scattered throughout the wadies of the peninsula where they could find pasturage for their cattle. That cattle in large numbers could be maintained in those valleys at that epoch is indisputable, for the Bedouin keep large flocks and herds in those regions at the present day. The nucleus of the camp would be the sanctuary and the camp of Moses and the Levites; and the names of the camping-places given in 33 : 19-35 designate probably the places where the tabernacle rested. From this list of places, most of which are unknown, it appears that the farthest point south and east reached by the tabernacle was Ezion-geber (33 : 35; cf. Judg. 11 : 16) at the head of the eastern arm of the Red Sea. Various temporary or partial convenings of the people may have occurred at times during the wandering, as is perhaps indicated by the names Q'helathah, assembling (33 : 22) and, Maq' heloth, assemblies (ibid., 25) among the camping-places, but this verse at the beginning of the twentieth chapter relates the assembling of the whole congregation at Kadesh preparatory to resuming their journey as a unified host. All the working up of the movement, the firing of decadent ardor, the organizing of bands, the busy movement to and fro of messengers, the search for remote groups hid among the hills, which must have gone to make this assembling in the fortieth year possible, we can only imagine.

At this place and time Miriam dies, that remarkable woman who forty years since was so revered by the people that the whole camp tarried a week on its journey while she was excluded from the camp on her recovery from her leprosy (12 : 15; see comment on whole chapter).

2-13. And there was no water (ver. 2). Perhaps an unusual drought at the time, together with the unwonted demand occasioned by such a multitude coming so suddenly into the neighborhood with all their flocks and herds, produced a shortage of water to drink. The congregation, whose forty years of discipline had not cured them of the habit of grumbling, held a kind of indignation meeting against Moses and Aaron and gave expression to the rather peculiar wish that they had shared in the fate of the two hundred and fifty who were destroyed in the affair of Korah (ver. 3; cf. 16 : 35), as if these were regarded as heroes who had perished in a noble cause. This seems to indicate that there was still a strong animus against the priesthood. The same P account goes on in ver. 6 to state, in its characteristic formula for narrating crises of this kind, that Moses and Aaron went to the door of the tent of meeting and fell on their faces (cf. 14 : 5; 16 : 4, 22), and that the

4 And why have ye brought up the congregation of the Lord into this wilderness, that we and our cattle should die here?

5 And wherefore have ye made us to come up out of Egypt, to bring us in unto this evil place? it is no place of seed, or of figs, or of vines, or of pomegranates; neither is there any water to drink.

6 And Moses and Aaron went from the presence of the assembly unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and they fell upon their faces: and the glory of the Lord appeared unto them.

7 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

8 Take the rod, and gather thou the assembly together, thou, and Aaron thy brother, and speak ye unto the rock before their eyes; and it shall give forth his water, and thou shalt bring forth to them water out of the rock: so thou shalt give the congregation and their beasts drink.

9 And Moses took the rod from before the Lord, as he commanded him.

10 And Moses and Aaron gathered the congregation together before the rock, and he said unto them, Hear now, ye rebels; must we fetch you water out of this rock?

11 And Moses lifted up his hand, and with his rod he smote the rock twice: and the water came out abundantly, and the congregation drank, and their beasts also.

10 Lord, as he commanded him. And Moses and Aaron gathered the assembly together before the rock, and he said unto them, Hear now, ye rebels; shall we bring you forth water out of this rock? And Moses lifted up his hand, and smote the rock with his rod twice: and water came forth abundantly, and the congregation glory of Jehovah appeared to them (cf. 14: 10; 16: 19, 42). The account which is attributed to the JE source compares with this very much as Dathan and Abiram's grievance compares with that of Korah in chap. 16. The complaint is directed especially against Moses (ver. 3a), and its burden is the familiar one that their leaders have lured the "assembly of Jehovah" out of Egypt with false hopes (ver. 4, 5). Indeed, the complaint in ver. 4, 5 sounds a little strange as coming from the lips of a people who had had forty years to forget the land of Egypt, and who had not yet resumed active traveling with Moses in search of the Promised Land. In a secular writing one would suspect such a passage to be a somewhat inartistic bit of stock description not quite clearly and consistently imagined. "The language of the murmurers. . . has the air of a traditional remonstrance handed down from the last generation."

Moses is directed to take his wonder-working rod (ver. 8; cf. Exod. 7: 17, 20; 9: 23; 10: 13; 14: 16; 17: 5, 9, seq.), which as we are here alone informed (ver. 9) was kept laid up before Jehovah, and along with Aaron to assemble the congregation and speak to the rock, or cliff, in their presence, and thus bring forth water for the people and their cattle. The same rod had been employed on a similar occasion at Rephidim (Exod. 17: 5-7), and there by divine direction Moses had used it to smite the rock. Here, on the other hand, the direction is to speak to the rock, and the reason why Moses should take the trouble to fetch the rod from its resting-place is not obvious. Perhaps the mere inattention to detail involved in striking with the rod instead of holding it idly in his hand was not counted an important part of the sin for which he was excluded from the land of promise. Certainly that failure in exactness did not block the outflow of miraculous power, for the water gushed forth abundantly at the stroke. Speak ye unto the rock (ver. 8). The word is סֵלָעַ, selâ', or cliff, instead of the more common word צֹרַר tsur, used of the rock in Horeb (Exod. 17: 6). The rabbis in their comments or haggadoth on this passage and 21: 16-18 have fancied that the rock in Rephidim and this were the same rock, it having followed the children of Israel through all their forty years' wandering—a tradition which is evidently employed and spiritualized by Paul in 1 Cor. 10: 4.

Moses and Aaron assembled the congregation before the cliff and in an imperious and self-sufficient way, and evidently in some irritation, Moses demanded of the people, whom he characterized as murmurers or rebels; must, shall, we fetch you water out of this rock? accompanying the harsh interrogatory with two blows of the rod (ver. 11). For the spirit in which this was done both Moses and Aaron were debarred from the privilege of bringing the children of Israel into their land (ver. 12). It is only in this place that the reason given for the sentence is that they did not believe in God, and even here the unbelief is not simply doubt, but such a neglect to fix the people's faith and expectation upon God as resulted in his not being sufficiently sanctified or acknowledged in the presence of the children of Israel. In all other places the sin of Moses and Aaron is characterized as rebellion, the 12 And the Lord spake unto Moses and Aaron, Because ye believed me not, to sanctify me in the eyes of the children of Israel, therefore ye shall not bring this congregation into the land which I have given them.

13 This is the water of Meribah; because the children of Israel strove with the Lord, and he was sanctified in them.

14 And Moses sent messengers from Kadesh unto the king of Edom, Thus saith thy brother Israel, Thou knowest all the travel that hath befallen us:

15 How our fathers went down into Egypt, and we have dwelt in Egypt a long time; and the Egyptians vexed us, and our fathers:

16 And when we cried unto the Lord, he heard our voice, and sent an angel, and hath brought us forth out of Egypt: and, behold, we are in Kadesh, a city in the uttermost of thy border:

12 drank, and their cattle. And the Lord said unto Moses and Aaron, Because ye believed not in me, to sanctify me in the eyes of the children of Israel, therefore ye shall not bring this assembly into the land which I have given them.

13 These are the waters of Meribah; because the children of Israel strove with the Lord, and he was sanctified in them.

14 And Moses sent messengers from Kadesh unto the king of Edom, Thus saith thy brother Israel, Thou knowest all the travail that hath befallen

15 us: how our fathers went down into Egypt, and we dwelt in Egypt a long time; and the Egyptians

16 evil entreated us, and our fathers: and when we cried unto the Lord, he heard our voice, and sent an angel, and brought us forth out of Egypt: and, behold, we are in Kadesh, a verb used in most cases being from the same root as the word "rebels" in ver. 10. They "rebelled against Jehovah's word," or, mouth (ver. 24; 27: 14); they "trespassed against him and sanctified him not in the midst of the children of Israel" (Deut. 32: 51); they "were rebellious against his spirit and Moses spake unadvisedly with his lips" (Ps. 106: 33). Evidently the speaking to the congregation as if Moses and Aaron were the independent providers for their wants, and as if they were to be the supreme authors of the miracle—a sort of invasion of the divine prerogative—was accounted as the center of their sin. At the same time, according to Moses' review of the transaction in Deuteronomy, it was on the people's account as much as on his that he was debarred from the Promised Land (Deut. 1: 37; 3: 26; 4: 21). It seems very probable that if Moses and Aaron, after all that God had wrought through them and after this conspicuous slight of Jehovah's majesty, had gone on and made a triumphal entry into Canaan, they would on their death have gone perilously near becoming the objects of such a hero worship on the part of the people as would have threatened the integrity of their allegiance to Jehovah. This danger, and not a mere petty jealousy on Jehovah's part of a mortal, would be a legitimate reason for the sentence of failure. As Moses' predominant characteristic was meekness (12: 3), so his great life-failure resulted from a manifestation of the very opposite trait, or undue self-exaltation. It was natural that the sentence of Jehovah should thus come home to his conscience, for it is through what we have in our own conscience that the Spirit convinces us of sin. Moses felt condemned for lacking in the virtue which to him was most important. So Jesus, whose supreme virtue was self-sacrifice, saw the temptation, which he most energetically repelled, in the suggestion to be lacking in that unreserving devotion (see Matt. 16: 23).

The name given to the place (ver. 13) is derived from the people's contention with Jehovah rather than from the sin of Moses and Aaron. The final result of this contention was that the impression of Jehovah's holiness was greatly enhanced. This repeated mention of the making holy, or sanctifying, of Jehovah (שׁ-ד-שׁ, q-d-sh; see ver. 12, 13) may possibly contain an allusion to the name Kadesh, the holy place, where if anywhere Jehovah ought to be sanctified. This Meribah is sometimes called Meribah of Kadesh (27: 14; Deut. 32: 51) to distinguish it from the place of the former similar miracle which was also sometimes called "Meribah" (see Exod. 17: 7).

14-21. Preparations were now set on foot for the final march and the invasion of the Promised Land. Instead of going directly from Kadesh into Canaan by the Negeb as was formerly planned (13: 17, seq.), the project was to go in a north-easterly direction through the territory of Edom, around the southern end of the Dead Sea and through the country of Moab, thus entering the land from the east by crossing the Jordan. "The first move was up along the natural boundary line of Canaan, from Kadesh-barnea, through the wilderness of Zin, to the boundary hinge of Jebel Madurah on the plains of Mose-rah, the junction of wadies Murrah and Madurah" (H. C. TRUMBULL, "Kadesh-barnea"). As the proposed route was to lie through Edom, Moses sent messengers from Kadesh unto the king of Edom—for we learn from Gen. 36: 31-43 that there was a whole line of kings in Edom before the monarchy was established in Israel—asking in diplomatic fashion for a passage through his territory. Reminding him that the nations were brothers (ver. 14), he recounted briefly the history of Israel's vicissitudes since the two ancestors had parted in peace centuries before (Gen. 33: 16, 17), skillfully implying that the nation's enterprise of going to Canaan was deserving of encouragement since it was manifestly furthered by divine and even miraculous help (ver. 16). According to the message 17 Let us pass, I pray thee, through thy country : we will not pass through the fields, or through the vineyards, neither will we drink of the water of the wells : we will go by the king's high way, we will not turn to the right hand nor to the left, until we have passed thy borders.

18 And Edom said unto him, Thou shalt not pass by me, lest I come out against thee with the sword.

19 And the children of Israel said unto him, We will go by the high way : and if I and my cattle drink of thy water, then I will pay for it : I will only, without doing any thing else, go through on my feet.

20 And he said, Thou shalt not go through. And Edom came out against him with much people, and with a strong hand.

21 Thus Edom refused to give Israel passage through his border : wherefore Israel turned away from him.

22 And the children of Israel, even the whole congregation, journeyed from Kadesh, and came unto mount Hor.

17 city in the uttermost of thy border : let us pass, I pray thee, through thy land : we will not pass through field or through vineyard, neither will we drink of the water of the wells : we will go along the king's high way, we will not turn aside to the right hand nor to the left, until we

18 have passed thy border. And Edom said unto him, Thou shalt not pass through me, lest I

19 come out with the sword against thee. And the children of Israel said unto him, We will go up by the high way : and if we drink of thy water, I and my cattle, then will I give the price thereof : let me only, without doing any thing else, pass through on my feet. And he 20 said, Thou shalt not pass through. And Edom came out against him with much people, and with a strong hand. Thus Edom refused to give Israel passage through his border : wherefore Israel turned away from him.

22 And they journeyed from Kadesh : and the children of Israel, even the whole congregation, of Jephthah in Judg. 11 : 17, a similar request was sent to the king of Moab. Moses' request was a moderate one, simply that the host might go through without disturbing farm or vineyard or drinking water from the wells, but keeping to the king's . . . way, or main, raised thoroughfare (ver. 17), without turning aside to right or left. Such military roads, or main thoroughfares, are still called in Oriental countries Derb es-Sultan, or "way of the emperor." But that such an immense host should go through the country without causing any loss or damage was perhaps more than even Moses could legitimately guarantee. "We can easily understand the objection of the king of Edom. Many of the defiles through which the main road would were not adapted for the march of a great multitude. The Israelites could scarcely have gone through Edom without injuring the fields and vineyards, and though the undertaking was given in good faith by Moses, how could he answer for the whole of that undisciplined host he was leading toward Canaan? The safety of Edom lay in denying to other peoples access to its strongholds. The difficulty of approaching them was their main security. Israel might go quietly through the land now, but its armies might soon return with hostile intent. Water too, was very precious in some parts of Edom. Enough was stored in the rainy season to supply the wants of the inhabitants; beyond that there was none to spare, and for this necessary of life money was no equivalent. A multitude traveling with cattle would have made scarcity or famine—might have left the region almost desolate. With the information they had, Moses and Joshua may have believed that there were no insuperable difficulties. Yet the best generalship might have been unequal to the task of controlling Israel in the passes and among the cultivated fields of that singular country" (WATSON). The king of Edom, therefore, firmly refused the Israelites passage, even though they offered to pay for the water they drank (ver. 19), and came out against them with a military force (ver. 20). According to Moses' account in Deuteronomy (Deut. 2 : 4-8), it was their conviction that Mount Seir was divinely allotted to the children of Esau, which prevented the Israelites from attempting a forcible invasion.

22-29. The main point in this section, not plain from the text itself, is the location of mount Hor. The word "Hor" means mountain, and the Hebrew form in this place is mountain, the mountain, a name which is also applied to Mount Hermon in 34 : 7, 8. Tradition identifies this mountain with Jebel Neby Harun, "mountain of the prophet Aaron," near Petra, on the east side of the Arabah, or low valley extending from the Dead Sea to the gulf of 'Akabah. This mountain is crowned with a rude, domed structure purporting to be the tomb of Aaron. But this location does not fit in with the text, and "it was not until the days of Josephus, fifteen centuries after Aaron's death, that the mountains near Petra were thought to be the place of this funeral. . . Is it likely that after Israel had asked permission to enter Edom and been met with a refusal, they would march into the very heart of the country, camp close to its capital, and then bury Aaron in the mountain close by?" (HENRY A. HARPER, "The Bible and Modern Discoveries.") The mountain where Aaron was buried is more probably the remarkable isolated peak known as Jebel Madurah, thirty or forty miles north-east of Kadesh, where the two wadies divide to go down into the Arabah. "On that isolated and remarkable mountain, at the very border-

23 And the Lord spake unto Moses and Aaron in mount Hor, by the coast of the land of Edom, saying, 24 Aaron shall be gathered unto his people: for he shall not enter into the land which I have given unto the children of Israel, because ye rebelled against my word at the water of Meribah.

25 Take Aaron and Eleazar his son, and bring them up unto mount Hor:

26 And strip Aaron of his garments, and put them upon Eleazar his son: and Aaron shall be gathered unto his people, and shall die there.

27 And Moses did as the Lord commanded: and they went up into mount Hor in the sight of all the congregation.

28 And Moses stripped Aaron of his garments, and put them upon Eleazar his son; and Aaron died there in the top of the mount: and Moses and Eleazar came down from the mount.

And the Lord spake unto Moses and Aaron in mount Hor, by the 24 border of the land of Edom, saying, Aaron shall be gathered unto his people: for he shall not enter into the land which I have given unto the children of Israel, because ye rebelled against 25 my word at the waters of Meribah. Take Aaron and Eleazar his son, and bring them up unto 26 mount Hor: and strip Aaron of his garments, and put them upon Eleazar his son: and Aaron shall be gathered unto his people, and shall die 27 there. And Moses did as the Lord commanded: and they went up into mount Hor in the sight 28 of all the congregation. And Moses stripped Aaron of his garments, and put them upon Eleazar his son; and Aaron died there in the top of the mount: and Moses and Eleazar came 29 down from the mount. And when all the congregation saw that Aaron was dead, they wept for Aaron thirty days, even all the house of Israel.

CHAPTER XXI.

1 AND when king Arad the Canaanite, which dwelt in the south, heard tell that Israel came by the way of the spies; then he fought against Israel, and took some of them prisoners.

1 AND the Canaanite, the king of Arad, which dwelt in the South, heard tell that Israel came by the way of Atharim; and he fought against line of the Land of Promise and yet outside of it, Aaron died and was buried; and before that mountain, on the borders of Edom yet not within Edom's line, the people mourned for thirty days over the loss of their faithful high priest" (TRUMBULL). The encampment of the children of Israel during the funeral and the thirty days of mourning was perhaps in the plain of Moserah (33 : 30, 31), the place where, according to the remarkable insertion in Deut. 10 : 6, the death of Aaron took place. It was probably while the messengers were on their way to the king of Edom, and before their return with his answer, that the events of this section occurred.

The solemn intimation came to Moses and Aaron from Jehovah, apparently after the people had reached the vicinity of the mountain (ver. 23), that Aaron must be gathered unto his people, and the guilt of that rebellious missing of the divine Spirit at Meribah was impressed upon them as the theocratic cause of his doom (ver. 23, 24). The directions to Moses were to take Aaron and Eleazar his son up on the mountain and, after solemnly stripping the aged priest of his official garments, to invest the son, now a man well beyond the flower of his age (cf. Exod. 28 : 1; Num. 3 : 2, 32), with those insignia of the high-priestly office (ver. 26). This command was carried out by Moses, and in due course there followed the peaceful death of the great priest on that lonely peak in sight of the hills of Judah (ver. 28), and the people on their discovery of the fact observed a mourning period of thirty days (ver. 29).

Chap. 21. FROM MOUNT HOR TO THE STEPPES OF MOAB. 1-3. King Arad the Canaanite, rather, the Canaanite, the king of Arad, R. V. Arad appears to have been a district in the Negeb, or southern part of Canaan, in the territory afterward belonging to Judah (Judg. 1 : 16; Josh. 12 : 14). By the way of the spies. The obscure word, אֶתְרִים, 'atharim, here translated spies, is taken as a proper name in the R. V. "There really seems no justification for its rendering as 'spies.' 'Tracks' or 'monuments' (indicating a way marked or 'blazed' by signal-cairns, after a manner still common in that region), would be justified from the Chaldaic 'athar, 'a place' or 'track.'" What way is meant we have not the data for knowing. Perhaps the Canaanitish king was alarmed lest the Israelites should invade his country by the most direct way from Kadesh, the way by which the spies had entered the Negeb forty years before. It seems likely that while the children of Israel were encamped at the foot of Mount Hor the messengers returned from their embassy to the king of Edom with the intelligence that no passage would be afforded through his land (20 : 18, seq.). So they turned back from their proposed route, which would have led directly from the foot of Jebel Madurah down into and across the Arabah, to retrace their steps westward and southward and so regain the Red Sea road (ver. 4). "As the Israelites turned back at this time, the Canaanitish king of Arad came against them and struck at them, probably at their rear as they were moving off, 'and took some of them prisoners.'" It was just when the Israelites were smarting under the disappointment of not being permitted to go through Edom, and were apparently retreating, that this little king struck his spiteful and unexpected blow and carried off some of their brethren. Unable to undertake a campaign against him at this time, the children of Israel contented themselves with making a solemn vow to Jehovah that if these people should ever fall into their power they would accord them the extreme treatment of putting their cities under the ban (ver. 2). For the ban, see Lev. 27, 28, seq. It is human nature to be especially resentful against interferers who wantonly put added calamities on those who are having bad luck (cf. Ps. 137 : 7; Obad. 10, seq.). The account of the Canaanites' defeat (ver. 3) is here inserted by anticipation, like 14 : 37, 38. The actual conquest and banning occurred long afterward. As Dillmann remarks, if this fulfillment of the vow had been carried out under Moses, the Israelites must necessarily have gained a complete victory over the king of Arad which would have removed all hindrance to their invading the Promised Land from the south. The account of the fulfillment of the vow is given in Judg. 1 : 17. From that passage we learn that the chief city of the king of Arad which, from the circumstance of the banning, was called Hormah (from חֶרֶם, cherem, the ban, cf. on 14 : 45) was previously called Zephath.

4-9. As the children of Israel were not permitted to go through the land of Edom, they were obliged to go around it, and cross the Arabah to its east side far to the south of Edom, near the head of the gulf of 'Akabah (cf. Deut. 2 : 8). As the way led down into that hot, barren valley, the burning and shifting sands and the gravel and detritus of granite which in that region make travel so difficult, were a great source of discouragement. Food and water were scarce, and the manna to which the people were more closely than ever restricted became very distasteful (cf. 11 : 6). Moreover, that region was infested with serpents, described as burning serpents, perhaps on account of the inflammation and intense thirst caused by their bite, or on account of their fiery, metallic appearance, or perhaps for both reasons. There are still to be found in that part of Arabia and the Arabah many fiery colored, venomous snakes which are much dreaded by the Arabs. The bite of these reptiles proved fatal to many of the incautious Israelites; and it is a significant mark of the chastened spirit of this generation, as compared with the rebellious disposition of former years, that the people came to Moses apparently of their own accord and penitently accounted for these bites as divine visitations in punishment of their rebellious words against God and against Moses (cf. ver. 5). They asked Moses to entreat Jehovah that the serpents might be called off from their mission of retribution. As Moses interceded in behalf of the people, the intimation came to him from Jehovah, not that this peril incident to the wilderness journey would be removed, but that while the danger from the deadly reptiles remained as besetting as ever, Moses was to make a סָרָפָה, saraph, or "fiery serpent," and elevate it on a pole or standard, and that for any bitten culprit who should look at this image of his tormentor the 9 And Moses made a serpent of brass, and put it upon a pole, and it came to pass, that if a serpent had bitten any man, when he beheld the serpent of brass, he lived.

9 And Moses made a serpent of brass, and set it upon the standard: and it came to pass, that if a serpent had bitten any man, when he looked bite would not be fatal (ver. 8). Moses made the image out of brass and set it on the standard, and it was found that if any one on being bitten looked attentively at the serpent of brass he escaped the deadly effect of the poison (ver. 9). This introduction into the religious life of the Israelites of what at first sight looks like a bit of fetichism, was so noteworthy an event in the history of religion that it was used by our Saviour as a type or illustration of his own spiritual effect on the life of the world (see JOHN 3 : 14, 15).

The resemblance of the brazen serpent, at least in its religious aspect, to the manifestation of the Son of Man must be sought in its psychical or spiritual power for the people of its time rather than its mere outward features. The features of similarity between a healing serpent lifted up on a pole and the dying Saviour lifted up on the cross are easily observed, and with sufficient ingenuity and the employment of doctrinal as well as visible analogies they may be drawn out to great fineness in many and interesting ways. But these are resemblances that suggest themselves to us who have the saving and inspiring fulfilment to read the symbol by. To the people in the wilderness, on the contrary, this serpent was not a symbol; there was no impulse to look away from or beyond it for its hidden meaning; it simply prevented death when they looked at it. It is to be remembered that no historic Christ had come to throw light on this piece of brass for them; they did not have the second term of the comparison which alone could make an analogy intelligible or possible. In short, they were not saved by an analogy or type; they were saved by a brazen serpent. The analogy of this serpent with Christ was not therefore an analogy existing in the people's minds—not a doctrinal analogy which could be fruitful only as it was expounded and understood—but a similarity of mental or spiritual effects on the people in the wilderness and on those of Christendom respectively such as could be secured without doctrinal explanation. The historical inquiry is: What did the unspeculative people who looked at a brass serpent and were healed receive for the religious life which was commensurable with what those receive who simply and unspeculatively believe in Christ?

That this unspeculative benefiting was spiritual and not merely fetichistic is evident from the after history of the image. When the people in later times were found to have made the brazen serpent into a fetich, i. e., an object containing mysterious divine power in itself, it was stigmatized as a "piece of brass" and destroyed (2 Kings 18 : 4). The author of the Wisdom of Solomon calls it a "symbol of salvation," only he makes it a reminder, as a symbol, of the commandment of the law, and says that he who turned to it was not saved because of the thing seen, but because of God the Saviour of all (Wisdom 16 : 5-7). That the use of the serpent image here was prompted by the heathen veneration of the serpent as the divinity of wisdom and healing, such as we see shadowed in the emblem of Esculapius and Hygeia, is an impossible supposition, as this would detach it in idea entirely from the deadly creatures which were the occasion of the expedient. Its employment points to a way of looking at sin and death which is connected somehow with faith in Christ, and each theologian's way of drawing out the analogy will no doubt be influenced by his theory of our Saviour's atonement for sin. Not unworthy of notice is the danger that in expounding the efficacy of the cross in its essential resemblance to the power of the serpent in the wilderness the atonement itself may be made fetichistic through laying too great emphasis on its inscrutable and arbitrary connection with the sin for which it is the appointed specific. While not attributing an incredible degree of spiritual discernment to the bitten Israelite, we cannot but feel that somehow he idealized sin and its penalty, death, in the act of being healed. Lange thus contrasts the idea of death and sin of which this was the starting-point with the pagan idea: "Heathenism proclaims its delusion in two words: sin is merely an ill, an endurable fate, but the ill itself is the real peculiar harm, far worse than the sin. Christendom, on the contrary, in its truth proclaims: sin is the intolerable injury, but the ill result, its consequence, is also its remedy. Thus in the cross, or even in death, in the communion in death with Christ, is salvation." This much of resemblance in spiritual effect between type and anti-type we may perhaps discern without an undue excursion into the realms of fancy: The serpent's victim felt himself dying; and in that moment of intense experience so full of helpless-

10 And the children of Israel set forward, and pitched in Oboth.

12 From thence they removed, and pitched in the valley of Zered.

13 From thence they removed, and pitched on the other side of Arnon, which is in the wilderness that cometh out of the coasts of the Amorites: for Arnon is the border of Moab, between Moab and the Amorites.

14 Wherefore it is said in the book of the wars of the Lord, What he did in the Red sea, and in the brooks of Arnon, 15 And at the stream of the brooks that goeth down to the dwelling of Ar, and lieth upon the border of Moab.

From thence they journeyed, and pitched on the other side of Arnon, which is in the wilderness, that cometh out of the border of the Amorites: for Arnon is the border of 14 Moab, between Moab and the Amorites. Wherefore it is said in the book of the Wars of the Lord, ness and penitence and fear, he looked away from himself to the divinely ordained image, and through that upward glance perceived his death messenger so idealized and exalted that the very perception and wonder set up a reactionary movement sufficient to counteract the burning poison. The identification of his penalty and his healing was not only a fancy but a personal consciousness. So in regard to the great fulfillment on the cross: whatever theories we may attempt from the computed standpoint of the divine intention, it remains a great world-fact from the standpoint of the human consciousness that Christianity has so idealized the death on the cross as through faith to identify that death with the believer's own, and so secure his peace with God and the birth of the new man in his inner life.

10-20. Between Mount Hor and Oboth (ver. 10) the itinerary in chap. 33 inserts the two stations Zalmonah and Punon (33 : 41, 42), which are perhaps camping stations in that part of the wilderness where the plague of the serpents occurred. Ije-abarim (ver. 11), or, Ruins of Abarim, so called in distinction from the Iim, or ruins in Judah (Josh. 15 : 29), is described as over against Moab toward the sun-rising. The children of Israel have now rounded the south end of the Arabah at Ezion-geber, and are skirting its eastern side among the mountains of Abarim, or mountains of the "Further Regions," which form a less precipitous side of the valley of the Arabah than the mountains on the west side of that deep depression. It is somewhere here that we may locate the command in Deuteronomy (Deut. 2 : 3) "Ye have compassed this mountain (i. e., Seir, cf. ver. 4) long enough: turn you northward." They are still in the vicinity of Mount Seir, or the territory of Edom which extends on both sides of the Arabah, and they seem to be enjoined to avoid invading the nations in all this vicinity. It appears that they are going around Moab on its eastern side (cf. Judg. 11 : 18), and the injunction to "vex not Moab" (Deut. 2 : 9) is inserted by the Samaritan Pentateuch immediately after ver.

11. A little farther along a similar injunction is laid upon the people against any collision with the children of Ammon (Deut. 2 : 19, inserted by Sam. after ver. 12). The valley of Zered (ver. 12), which is conjecturally identified with the modern Wady Kerak, called in its upper courses Wady 'Ain Franjy, was the first westward flowing brook which crossed their line of march, and the moment of passing this ravine is made in the Moses discourse in Deuteronomy to mark the end of the wilderness wandering, the whole period from the time of the sentence to the crossing of the ravine being placed at thirty-eight years (Deut. 2 : 14). In their next move they came to the Arnon (ver. 13), the present Wady Mojib, a narrow but very deep ravine running across the whole country of Moab. This ravine divides into several branches farther up the plateau, all of them precipitous and forming a very difficult frontier. These branches are indicated by the plural "valleys of Arnon," in the fragment of the old song (ver. 14). It was to the upper courses of the Arnon that the Israelites came. That they camped on the other side does not mean that they crossed it; the account is written from the standpoint of Western Palestine, and the other, or farther side means the south side. Before the children of Israel venture to cross this ravine, which is the frontier beyond which the fighting is to commence, they send their messengers to Sihon (ver. 21).

At this point the writer inserts (ver. 14, 15) a fragment of a song taken from a collection otherwise unknown called the "Book of the Wars of Jehovah"—perhaps the earliest verbatim citation from written documents or anthologies, as distinguished from oral song or legend. The old collection very likely contained songs, especially folk-songs, taken from the heroic times of 16 And from thence they went to Beer: that is the well whereof the Lord spake unto Moses, Gather the people together, and I will give them water.

17 Then Israel sang this song, Spring up, O well; sing ye unto it:

18 The princes digged the well, the nobles of the people digged it, by the direction of the lawgiver, with their staves. And from the wilderness they went to Mattanah:

19 And from Mattanah to Nahaliel: and from Nahaliel to Bamoth:

20 And from Bamoth in the valley, that is in the country of Moab, to the top of Pisgah, which looketh toward Jeshimon.

21 And Israel sent messengers unto Sihon king of the Amorites, saying,

22 Let me pass through thy land: we will not turn into the fields, or into the vineyards; we will not drink of the waters of the well: but we will go along by the king's high way, until we be past thy borders.

16 And from thence they journeyed to Beer: that is the well whereof the Lord said unto Moses, Gather the people together, and I will give them water.

17 Then sang Israel this song:

Spring up, O well; sing ye unto it:

18 The well, which the princes digged, Which the nobles of the people delved, With the sceptre, and with their staves.

And from the wilderness they journeyed to Mattanah: and from Mattanah to Nahaliel: and from Nahaliel to Bamoth: and from Bamoth to the valley that is in the field of Moab, to the top of Pisgah, which looketh down upon the desert.

21 And Israel sent messengers unto Sihon king of the Amorites, saying, Let me pass through thy land: we will not turn aside into field, or into vineyard; we will not drink of the water of the wells: we will go by the king's high way, until the wars that were waged in Jehovah's name against the heathen. In the earlier period of the monarchy the battles of Israel against the Philistines began to be thought of as Jehovah's wars (see 1 Sam. 17 : 45 ; 18 : 17 ; 25 : 28). Not improbably the Well Song (ver. 17, 18), and the Song of Moses (Exod. 15 : 1-18), were preserved in this collection. This fragment simply enumerates some names of places in the accusative as the object of some verb not given, and appears to be interesting to the writer on account of the mention of Arnon and its valleys. The first words are obscure and are given as proper names in the Revised version. George Adam Smith translates:

“Waheb in Suphah [we passed] and the valleys of Arnon,
And the cliff of the valleys, which stretches to Ar's seat,
And leans on the border of Moab.”

The places mentioned in ver. 16-20 are thus identified by Henry A. Harper, who quotes from Major Conder of the Palestine Exploration Fund: “They went on to ‘Beer,’ where a well was dug, thence to Mattanah, which we may easily recognize as the great Wady Waleh, with its rude stone monuments and brook. Nahaliel, ‘the valley of God,’ is the gorge of Callirhoe, above which on the north stands another great group of both menhirs and dolmens, and thus Bamoth Baal falls into place as the ridge south of the stream of Wady Jideid, now called the ‘Crucified One,’ which presents a group of more than a hundred rude stone monuments. The Israelite journey was thus in a straight line to Pisgah, and their camps were at distances equal to those which the Bedawin accomplished on an average in their moves. Each great brook is mentioned, and the line is that which a large body of men must of necessity take on account of the absence of water on the flat plateau further east. Now they got their first view of the Land of Promise, for they looked toward Jeshimon, that waste west of the Dead Sea.” The occurrence at Beer (ver. 16) was perhaps notable as being the people's first experience of supplying their want of water through good, downright, self-reliant digging, as distinguished from miracle or hunting for water-courses. We can imagine with what alacrity all classes of the people, even the princes and nobles, sprang to the task of obeying the novel and grateful command. The event is celebrated with another quotation from old folk-song. Instead of, By the direction of the lawgiver (ver. 18), the translation of the Revised version is to be preferred. It is perhaps needless to say that not a literal digging with scepter and staff of office is meant in the poetic imagery of the song, but such a personal interest in and minute direction of the work as exemplified what can be accomplished when the most intelligent and powerful enter genuinely into details with their men. “This journey, though it is described in the book of Numbers before the war with Sihon, must have come after the latter. No host, so large and enumbered as this, could have ventured down any of the glens from the plateau to the Jordan before their own warriors had occupied Heshbon, for Heshbon, standing above them, commands these glens” (SMITH).

21-30. The history of this war with Sihon is given as from the lips of Moses in Deut. 2 : 26-37. The place from which the messengers were sent is there specified as the Wilderness of Kedemoth, or “eastern parts” (Deut. 2 : 26). The Amorite king though marked for defeat (Deut. 2 : 24), was first addressed with “words of peace,” in order that his destruction might be on his own head. A request for a harmless passage through his land, similar to the one sent to the king of 23 And Sihon would not suffer Israel to pass through his border: but Sihon gathered all his people together, and went out against Israel into the wilderness: and he came to Jahaz, and fought against Israel.

24 And Israel smote him with the edge of the sword, and possessed his land from Arnon unto Jabbok, even unto the children of Ammon: for the border of the children of Ammon was strong.

25 And Israel took all these cities: and Israel dwelt in all the cities of the Amorites, in Heshbon, and in all the villages thereof.

26 For Heshbon was the city of Sihon the king of the Amorites, who had fought against the former king of Moab, and taken all his land out of his hand, even unto Arnon.

27 Wherefore they that speak in proverbs say, Come into Heshbon, let the city of Sihon be built and prepared:

28 For there is a fire gone out of Heshbon, a flame from the city of Sihon: it hath consumed Ar of Moab, and the lords of the high places of Arnon.

29 Woe to thee, Moab! thou art undone, O people of Chemosh: he hath given his sons that escaped, and his daughters, into captivity unto Sihon king of the Amorites.

30 We have shot at them; Heshbon is perished even unto Dibon, and we have laid them waste even unto Nophah, which reacheth unto Medeba.

23 we have passed thy border. And Sihon would not suffer Israel to pass through his border: but Sihon gathered all his people together, and went out against Israel into the wilderness, and came to Jahaz: and he fought against Israel.

24 And Israel smote him with the edge of the sword, and possessed his land from Arnon unto Jabbok, even unto the children of Ammon: for the border of the children of Ammon was strong.

25 And Israel took all these cities: and Israel dwelt in all the cities of the Amorites, in Heshbon, and in all the towns thereof.

26 For Heshbon was the city of Sihon the king of the Amorites, who had fought against the former king of Moab, and taken all his land out of his hand, even unto Arnon. Wherefore they that speak in proverbs say,

Come ye to Heshbon,
Let the city of Sihon be built and established:

28 For a fire is gone out of Heshbon,
A flame from the city of Sihon:
It hath devoured Ar of Moab,
The lords of the high places of Arnon.

29 Woe to thee, Moab!
Thou art undone, O people of Chemosh:
He hath given his sons as fugitives,
And his daughters into captivity,
Unto Sihon king of the Amorites.

30 We have shot at them; Heshbon is perished even unto Dibon,
And we have laid waste even unto Nophah,
Which reacheth unto Medeba.

Edom (20 : 17-19), which latter, by the way, seems to have been not altogether unheeded, at least on the east of the Arabah (see Deut. 2 : 29), was met by a refusal and a gathering of Sihon's forces at Jahaz, a place in the neighborhood of Kedemoth (Deut. 2 : 32; Isa. 15 : 4; Jer. 48 : 21, 34), and near the southeast limit of Sihon's territory. Instead of turning aside, as in the former case (cf. 20 : 21), from their course, which from high up some branch of the Arnon, where they were, must necessarily strike westward across Sihon's territory in order to reach the Jordan, the Israelites met him in battle and gained a decisive victory—one of the much celebrated events of Israelitish history (Ps. 135 : 11; 136 : 19)—which gave them possession of the whole of his territory from Arnon unto Jabbok. Sihon's dominion is described in Josh. 12 : 2. The advance of the victory-flushed Israelites was stopped only by the border of the children of Ammon, which is naïvely characterized as strong (ver. 24). Another and more theocratic reason existed, according to Deuteronomy (2 : 19, 37), for not invading the territory of Ammon, but no doubt the good strong frontier was a great help to the Israelites in interpreting the divine command in this case. The elation of realizing that so soon in their fighting career the Israelites were actually dwelling in the cities of the Amorites, and especially in Heshbon, Sihon's capital, and in all the "daughters" or dependent towns thereof, furnishes occasion for giving an account of how this Moabitish territory came into possession of an Amorite king to begin with.

"That Israel's fighting began after the passage of the Arnon, was due to a recent change in the political disposition of Eastern Palestine. Properly all the country from Jabbok to Arnon belonged, northwards to Ammon, southwards to Moab. But shortly before Israel's arrival, Sihon, an Amorite king from Western Palestine, had crossed the Jordan, and driving Moab southwards over Arnon, and Ammon eastwards to the sources of the Jabbok, had founded a kingdom for himself between these two rivers." (GEORGE ADAM SMITH, "Historical Geography of the Holy Land.") The taunt-song is quoted as from they that speak in proverbs, a name very nearly equivalent to our expression, "the poets." The word מִשָּׁל, mashal, or proverb, from a verb which means to compare, is not only used as a title for the book of Proverbs (Prov. 1 : 1), but may designate almost any kind of poetry, or elevated and imaginative speaking. Balaam on three occasions "lifted up his mashal" (23 : 7; 24 : 3, 15), Job in resuming his response to his friends "added to lift up his mashal" (Job 27 : 1), and the people of Israel when they are delivered from their troubles are invited to "lift up" a prescribed mashal, or triumphant satire against the king of Babylon (Isa. 14 : 4). The song here in Numbers "opens with the taunt of the victorious Israel to the Amorites to return and rebuild their city (ver. 27), then (ver. 28, 29) describes how the Amorites had come to be there, namely, by previously taking the country from Moab, and returns (ver. 30) to the keynote of Israel's own victory:

31 Thus Israel dwelt in the land of the Amorites.
 32 And Moses sent to spy out Jaazer, and they took the villages thereof, and drove out the Amorites that were there.
 33 And they turned and went up by the way of Bashan: and Og the king of Bashan went out against them, he, and all his people, to the battle at Edrei.
 34 And the Lord said unto Moses, Fear him not: for I have delivered him into thy hand, and all his people, and his land; and thou shalt do to him as thou didst unto Sihon king of the Amorites, which dwelt at Heshbon.
 35 So they smote him, and his sons, and all his people, until there was none left him alive: and they possessed his land.

31 Thus Israel dwelt in the land of the Amorites.
 32 And Moses sent to spy out Jazer, and they took the towns thereof, and drove out the Amorites that were there. And they turned and went up by the way of Bashan: and Og the king of Bashan went out against them, he and all his people, to battle at Edrei. And the Lord said unto Moses, Fear him not: for I have delivered him into thy hand, and all his people, and his land; and thou shalt do to him as thou didst unto Sihon king of the Amorites, which dwelt at Heshbon. So they smote him, and his sons, and all his people, until there was none left him remaining: and they possessed his land.

 And we laid waste unto Nobah (?), which lies on the desert” (SMITH).

The reading, the desert (ver. 30), instead of Medeba, is adopted by Dillmann, from the Peshitto, on the supposition that Nophah is the same as the Nobah of Judg. 8 : 11, which is northeast of Heshbon and not near Medeba at all. But the text is very uncertain. Heshbon “was situate on a low hill rising out of the elevated table-land about sixteen miles east of the Jordan, where its ruins (of the Roman period) are still visible” (DRIVER.) Chemosh (ver. 29) was the national god of the Moabites (cf. Jer. 48 : 7, 13, 46), no doubt the very deity to whom Mesha, the king of Moab, offered up his son as a burnt offering (2 Kings 3 : 27). The worship of Chemosh was introduced into Israel by Solomon (1 Kings 11 : 7; 2 Kings 23 : 13). Several of these names appear on the celebrated Moabite Stone of King Mesha, from which the spelling Daibon (ver. 30) is adopted by Professor Smith.

31-35. The account of the conquest of Bashan, and the description of the country, are more fully given in Deut. 3 : 1-17. This section in Numbers is pronounced by critics an insertion by a Deuteronomist writer; and indeed there is but little mention of Og and the conquest of his country in the Hexateuch outside of the well-marked Deuteronomist passages. Israel was probably settled for some time in the Moabitish country (ver. 31), and it appears that in some campaign on which Moses' emissaries completed the conquest of Sihon's country by taking Ja'azer, a city some ten miles northeast of Heshbon, and its towns, from which they expelled the Amorites, they “turned” (cf. Deut. 3 : 1) and went up Bashan-way, and thus provoked a hostile demonstration from Og, the king of that country (ver. 33). “A chief, such as Og is represented to be, was not likely to be quiescent before so strong an invader on his own side of the river.” Bashan is the region extending from the Yarmuk, a stream entering the Jordan from the east not far from the south end of the Sea of Galilee, northward to Mount Hermon, and eastward from the Sea of Galilee to the range of mountains called Jebel Hauran, or the mountains of Hauran. Deuteronomy does not make it very clear how or when the country of Gilead, or the region from the Jabbok to the Yarmuk, was subdued by the Israelites; and it sometimes reads as if the dominion of Og extended to the Jabbok. The place where Og gave battle was Edrei, the present Adra'a, east of the source of the Yarmuk. Edrei is usually mentioned in connection with 'Ashtaroth (Josh. 12 : 4; 13 : 12, 31; Deut. 1 : 4) and appears to have been one of the residences of the king, while Ashtaroth was his capital (Josh. 9 : 10). Jehovah assured Moses that he should subdue Og and his country in the same decisive way in which he had conquered Sihon (ver. 34), a prediction which was abundantly fulfilled (ver. 35).

Chap. 22 : 1 is probably from the priestly source, and is connected in sense with ver. 10,

PART THIRD. OCCURRENCES AND DIVINE INSTRUCTIONS DURING THE SOJOURN IN THE STEPPES OF MOAB, CHAPTERS 22 : 2 TO 36.

This third section opens with an account of the performances of Balak the king of Moab who, appalled by the number and success of the children of Israel, sought to enlist the unseen supernatural forces against these formidable invaders through the soothsayer Balaam, but was foiled by Jehovah's taking control of the seer's operations and turning the curse into a blessing. Meanwhile Israel, the course of whose history this treatment does not directly modify, was placidly lying in the plains of Moab stretched out from Beth-jeshimoth to Abel-shittim; and the only prominent occurrences related in connection with this part of the history are the falling into the seductive temptations of the Baal-peor worship (chap. 25), with the consequent retribution of the plague, and the war with Midian undertaken by Israel as the punitive agents of Jehovah, and resulting in a permanent rule for the distribution of spoil (chap. 31). Much work of a planning and statistical nature was accomplished, such as the second taking of the census, the allotment of the land on the east of the Jordan to the two tribes and a half which chose to inherit the pastoral territory already conquered, the fixing of the tribal boundaries in western Palestine, and the designating of Levitical towns and cities of refuge. A recapitulation of all the stations occupied during the wilderness journey is inserted from the priestly sources, and various regulations regarding the inheritance and marriage of heiresses, the priestly offerings for stated occasions, and the sanctity of vows, complete the preparation of the tribes for their entrance on their promised possession.

2-41. BALAAM'S SUMMONS TO CURSE ISRAEL, AND HIS JOURNEY TO MOAB. Balak the son of Zippor (ver. 2) is explained in ver. 4, as being king of Moab at the time. Perhaps he was not the hereditary descendant of the "former king of Moab" (21 : 26) who was dispossessed by Sihon, but one of a new dynasty, and not impossibly a Midianite, as the later Targums make him, a circumstance which would be in keeping with the totemistic suggestion of his ancestor's name צִפּוֹר, Tsippor, or "bird," as compared with other Midianite princes' names, אֹרֵב, 'Oreb, "crow," and זֵעֵב, 'Ze'eb, "wolf" (Judg. 7 : 25). He may have been imposed on the Moabites as a ruler by Sihon (cf. Josh. 13 : 21). The Moabites, who had been driven to the south of Arnon (see on 21 : 21-30), now found themselves completely flanked by the children of Israel who had gone around them without harming them and obtained a firm lodgment to their north, on the very ground which they had been unable to defend and retain. Ver. 3 contains a doubled statement describing the emotions of the Moabites at being thus calmly shouldered aside by a numerous and mysterious people: they were terrified, and they were distressed, or, disgusted—such a feeling as Rebekah had regarding the daughters of Heth (Gen. 27 : 46), or the Egyptians regarding the rapidly multiplying Israelite slaves whom they afflicted (Exod. 1 : 12). The particular horror which the Moabites expressed in their plea with the elders of Midian for an alliance was not the fear of their new neighbors' military prowess, but the apprehension of being eaten out of house and home (ver. 4), a somewhat specious sort of plea for a pastoral people (cf. 31 : 32, seq. : 2 Kings 3 : 4) who had few growing crops to be disturbed. The Midianites ought to have been able to appreciate the description of such greedy traits as especially characterized themselves (Judg. 6 : 3-5). The isolated mention of the elders of Midian (ver. 4, 7) comes somewhat unprepared, and leads one to remark that a

5 He sent messengers therefore unto Balaam the son of Beor to Pethor, which is by the river of the land of the children of his people, to call him, saying, Behold, there is a people come out from Egypt: behold, they cover the face of the earth, and they abide over against me:

6 Come now therefore, I pray thee, curse me this people; for they are too mighty for me: peradventure I shall prevail, that we may smite them, and that I may drive them out of the land: for I wot that he whom thou blessest is blessed, and he whom thou cursest is cursed.

7 And the elders of Moab and the elders of Midian departed with the rewards of divination in their hand; and they came unto Balaam, and spake unto him the words of Balak.

5 Zippor was king of Moab at that time. And he sent messengers unto Balaam the son of Beor, to Pethor, which is by the River, to the land of the children of his people, to call him, saying, Behold, there is a people come out from Egypt: behold, they cover the face of the earth, and 6 they abide over against me: come now therefore, I pray thee, curse me this people; for they are too mighty for me: peradventure I shall prevail, that we may smite them, and that I may drive them out of the land: for I know that he whom thou blessest is blessed, and he whom 7 thou cursest is cursed. And the elders of Moab and the elders of Midian departed with the rewards of divination in their hand; and they came unto Balaam, and spake unto him the branch of that people, who otherwise were mostly inhabitants of Arabia east of the Elanitic gulf, had settled in the field of Moab (Gen. 36 : 35) and were probably tributary to Sihon and involved in the recent defeat of the Amorites by Israel (Josh. 13 : 21). After their defeat along with the Amalekites and other Arabs by Gideon (Judg. 6, seq.) they disappear from history. The timid and superstitious Balak undertook to "fight" against the children of Israel (cf. Josh. 24 : 9) by the supernatural agency of curses and spells. He evidently regarded those people as enjoying a peculiar demonic favor which by means of a sufficiently influential curse he could overcome so as to prevail against them by force of arms (ver. 6). The importance of prophetic, or even ordinary men's, blessings and curses was very much more taken account of in ancient times than in these days (see on Lev. 19 : 14; cf. Gen. 9 : 25-27; 27 : 4, 33, 37, etc.); and a belief in the validity of Balaam's utterances, and the consequent importance of their being kept favorable to Israel, was no doubt entertained by the narrator of these chapters, and by the Deuteronomist (Deut. 23 : 4, 5), though not on any such superstitious grounds as Balak's, who had so much less elevated an idea of the divine nature and activity.

Balak sent messengers to Balaam the son of Beor (ver. 5), to Pethor, which is by the river, i. e., the Euphrates. The place is called in Deut. 23 : 4 Pethor of Mesopotamia ('Aram-Naharaim), and in Balaam's discourses (23 : 7) "Aram" and "the Mountains of the East." It has been identified with the Pitru often mentioned in the cuneiform inscriptions of Shalmaneser II., which was on the right bank of the upper Euphrates, near the junction of the Sajur, and not strictly in Mesopotamia, though so near it as to be not improperly confounded with it in an oratorical description. Balaam's abode is called the land of the children of his people, or  $\text{אֲמוֹנִי}$ , 'ammo', a form which some regard as the name of a god and render, "children of Ammo." It is said that the Aramæans of Pethor called themselves "sons of Ammo." Others are inclined to conjecture that 'ammo' has accidentally become substituted for 'ammon', in accordance with the suspicion that Balaam was a Midianite living no farther away than among the Ammonites. Of the personality of Balaam little is known. The form of the name Balaam is derived from the LXX, the Hebrew pointing being Bileam. The name is derived from  $\text{בָּלַע}$ , balac, to devour, with the syllable 'am' which is probably an affirmative. It is a curious coincidence that the first king of Edom, Bela the son of Beor (Gen. 36 : 32), had virtually the same name and father's name. Widespread traditions identify Balaam with Lokman the Arabian fabulist, the Æsop of the East, whose name also means "devourer," and who was said by Arabic writers to be the son of Ba'ura, i. e., Beor. "The Hebrew book of Henoah states that Balaam was called in Arabic Loknim, probably a misreading for Lokman." Balaam is usually mentioned without any designation of his office, though in one place (2 Peter 2 : 16) he is called a prophet, and Josh. 13 : 22 designates him as a soothsayer, as he is regarded by Balak, whose messengers approach him with the "rewards of divination in their hand" (ver. 7). He evidently had a great reputation for the uniformity with which his pronouncements took effect (ver. 6). In his way he seems to have been a worshiper of the true God, who according to the narrator repeatedly communicates with him, and whom in his own utterances he almost uniformly names Jehovah. In one place he uses the expression, "Jehovah my God" (ver. 18). That he was a bad man does not appear to be indicated in the narrative, at least until he abandoned himself and gave the devilish counsel followed in chap. 25. The adverse moralizings in later parts of the Bible suggested by his history, when not simply censures of Moab for hiring him (Deut. 23 : 4, 5; Josh. 24 : 9; Neh. 13 : 2), are either in regard to his venality (2 Peter 2 : 15; Jude 11), or to his advice in the matter of

And God said unto Balaam, Thou shalt not go with them; thou shalt not curse the peo-

Beth-peor (Rev. 2:14), while in one place his counsel is warmly commended as important to be kept in mind (Micah 6:5). The struggle and the crisis in his character, together with the question of his inspiration on this occasion, will be discussed as we follow the story.

In his message to Balaam the panic-stricken Moabite king is most vividly impressed with the immense number of the Israelitish host: they are a people come out of Egypt—that land which is almost a synonym for teeming fecundity—and they cover the “eye of the earth” (ver. 5). The men sent are elders of Moab and elders of Midian (ver. 7), and their errand is ordered like a common official visit to a soothsayer, with the customary “divinations” (meaning divining fees—just as “tidings” means reward for tidings in 2 Sam. 4:10)—in their hand.

8-21. With this section we begin to meet the textual traits which lead critics to assign the Balaam story to its distinct source. The noticeable thing is that in ver. 8-21 the narrator uniformly employs the name Elohim, or God, when there is occasion to speak of the Deity, while Balaam as uniformly uses the name Jehovah. On the other hand, in ver. 22-35 the principal divine agency, which is the angel, appears always as the angel of Jehovah, and it is Jehovah who opens the mouth of the ass and the eyes of Balaam. This use of the divine names, with some other mannerisms of diction, leads the critics to assign ver. 8-21 to E, and ver. 22-35 to J. This theory of diverse sources, however, simply leads us into a cul de sac, so far as any explanation of the peculiar use of the divine names is concerned; and to me there appears a deeper congruity in this remarkable distribution of the names Elohim and Jehovah which the mere chance welding together of diverse traditions cannot account for. Elohim stands for the simple, massive conception of God as the universal creative Energy and Infinite Norm of Truth and Right—that God who does not come to exist for us by our formulation of his idea, but whose pressure we feel through our primary moral intuitions. Jehovah is the same God revealed and given an intellectual content which may become the basis of a theology and the inspiring motive of a cult. Aside from all finely aimed ethnical and etymological inquiries, this is the broad residual distinction between the two names. It is very much like the distinction between so-called natural and revealed religion. Revealed religion—religion which comes to us through our concepts—is indispensable as a means for rendering the idea of God fruitful and saving; but our concepts, however inspiring, must continually come back to our purest natural intuitions for ethical correction, lest in our dogmatic self-confidence we become blind leaders of the blind. It was his primary intuition of right—what Christ calls “the light that is in thee” (Mat. 6:23)—that persuaded Balaam that Israel was a blessed people; it was the Jehovah whom he professed and of whom he made his ordered inquiries whom he unconsciously sought to manipulate into an ultimate permission to earn Balak’s reward, and so was thrown out of unity with himself.

The kind of divination which Balak expected of Balaam, and which was no doubt his characteristic method, will give us an idea of the mental make-up of the man, which is the psychological basis on which we must build our understanding of his story in these three chapters. He was to come where he could see the object with whose destiny he was to concern himself; and it is to be noted that Balak makes his message vivid to the seeing imagination by describing the broad, general appearance of the Israelites as they lay in their camp “covering the eye of the earth.” This picture, it will be observed, impressed itself on Balaam’s imagination so that he reproduced it in his conversation with God (ver. 11), and the mere description was a sufficient basis for God’s communication to Balaam’s inner consciousness that the Israelites were a blessed people (ver. 12). Balaam’s method of divination, therefore, is seen to be that of rapport through suggestion. With a highly imaginative temperament Balaam was keenly susceptible to influence through his vivid inner perceptions. It was the receptive temperament such as characterizes mediums, clairvoyants, hypnotic subjects, and all who can be brought under the power of an alien personality. It is largely by suggestion that such persons are wrought upon. In glimpsing the fate of persons or peoples he had the art of a certain self-abandonment or surrender which made him perfectly passive to impressions; and in that state a sight of the object would so operate by suggestion as to awaken a premonition of its destiny. In his emphatic assurances to Balak that his movements must be as Jehovah permitted (ver. 13, 18), he implied that in his elevated state in which he was practising his art he was likely to be so borne along by the suggestions and impressions of the occasion as to be practically beyond his own control.

Balak, however, thought of that power to speak of people in terms of destiny—which he called blessing and cursing—as a real power to influence them for good or evil, instead of a rapport which followed rather than commanded their fate. He therefore wished to employ Balaam's curse as a malign force. So shallow, indeed, were his conceptions of spiritual things that when Balaam told him the first time that Jehovah refused to give him leave to go on the errand of cursing, he took it that he had not bidden high enough, and no doubt thought of Balaam's God himself as procurable for any purpose for a sufficiently high price (ver. 16, 17). This grossly sordid and venal notion Balaam is very prompt to correct (ver. 18), and he assures him that the whole business is a matter of faithfulness to that inner reality which he calls "the word of Jehovah his God," rather than of his arbitrary choice as a wielder of occult forces.

The contrast of these two men's ideas of the real nature of this blessing and cursing will help us to form an opinion of Balaam's religion. The consulting king's notion of the deity who presides over fate was that of a venal, capricious being who could be won to either side of a controversy by rewards, or cajoled and compelled by incantations and sacrifices. This was essentially a heathenish idea—an idea which is the very contrast and denial of the true approach to God. On the contrary, Balaam thinks of God as great and incorruptible and unescapable—one whose will is not to be commanded by a mortal, but ascertained and submitted to. As a publisher of destiny, therefore, he is simply in God's hands; he must proclaim what God says. In his passive surrender to impressions he is simply throwing himself upon the great tide of Jehovah's world designs, to be borne irresistibly whither it leads. Now this, however much it may lack of the full-orbed knowledge of God which is revealed in his Son, is far from heathenish; it is a right conception of God as far as it goes. It is at least a walking humbly before him as the mighty World-Power whom we cannot corrupt or change. Exactly this contrast between the notion of a God who is flattered and bought over by selfishly fulsome propitiations and a God who requires only right and merciful and humble conduct is brought out in that epitome of rational religion which Micah the prophet gives as a quotation from Balaam's response to the superstitious Moabite king, or at least the prophet's reflection directly inspired by some tradition of Balaam's sayings otherwise unknown:

“Wherewith shall I come before Jehovah,
And bow myself before the high God?
Shall I come before him with burnt-offerings,
With calves of a year old?
Will Jehovah be pleased with thousands of rams?
With ten-thousands of rivers of oil?

19 Now therefore, I pray you, tarry ye also here this night, that I may know what the Lord will say unto me more.

20 And God came unto Balaam at night, and said

19 Now therefore, I pray you, tarry ye also here this night, that I may know what the Lord will speak unto me more. And God came unto Balaam at

Shall I give my first-born for my transgression,
Fruit of my body for sin of my soul?
He hath showed thee, O man, what is good;
And what is Jehovah seeking of thee,
But to do justice and to love mercy,
And to walk humbly with thy God?"

(Micah 6 : 5-8.)

It is not particularly strange that a clear-sighted man, even though not of the chosen people, should hold such sane and rational views of God and duty—but they belong to one who acknowledges Jehovah (see ver. 18). Here is the unbiased sense of right fructified by the concept of God as Jehovah, the "One who Is"—the everlasting Constant Term—as distinguished from one whom we form and mold either by the work of our hands, or by flatteries and occult compulsions. Balaam no doubt worshiped Jehovah as the only God who could satisfy his insight, but withal in a liberal and rationalistic way, and not with that idol-hating exclusiveness which alone could pass for orthodoxy in Judaism (cf. 23 : 1, 29). The question of his character, however, does not turn on that of the God whom he contemplated and feared to resist, but on the prevalence in his religion of love and the sincere service of the whole heart.

Balaam invited the princely messengers in to lodge for the night, promising to consult Jehovah regarding their request and bring them word in the morning (ver. 8). The account goes on to say that God came to Balaam, and after asking him in human fashion who were his visitors and receiving Balak's message in due form, straitly prohibited his going on any errand of cursing against Israel, for they were a blessed or divinely favored people (ver. 10-12). In what form God "came" to Balaam we have no information. That it occurred at night does not prove that God communicated with Balaam by a dream, and from the circumstances of the case this seems unlikely, as it was evidently in response to some way which Balaam had of consulting Jehovah that he obtained the communication, and people do not generally possess the power of inducing dreams at will. It seems to me a rational conjecture that the consultation with Jehovah was through no traumatic or hypnotic evoking of the "subliminal consciousness," but simply by intense meditation in a thoroughly self-emptied and alertly receptive spirit. This was what he called "inquiring." As Balak's vivid picture of wide-spreading Israel passed before his mind, and all the circumstances of that wonderful people's divinely guided migration from Egypt arose in order before his deeply seeing imagination, there swept in upon him such an overwhelming sense of a World-Power and Eternal Purpose, with whom this people was at one, as brought the vast and vague but irresistible conviction that Israel was blessed. "God came to him." Balaam was admitted to a perception of the mighty sweep of that cosmical Energy which can be designated by the name of no tribal or ecclesiastical deity but by the universally divine term Elohim. The forms of question and answer with which the colloquy with God is clothed are, no doubt, due to the vivid imagination of the seer himself, whose temperament as a dweller in the border-land between fantasy and common reality naturally endowed all his deeper mental operations with concrete forms.

In the morning Balaam sent away the messengers with the answer that Jehovah refused him permission to go with them (ver. 13). When this answer reached Balak, that monarch in his shallow worldliness supposed that it meant only an avaricious soothsayer's haggling for a higher reward. With a larger and more honorable delegation he renewed his request, promising him the highest honors and whatever emolument he might name, but urging him on no account to fail to come to him (ver. 15-17). Balaam answered that the obstacle was not the insufficiency of the reward; however magnificent that might be, he could not go beyond the word of Jehovah in the case (ver. 18). But as the message bade him let nothing hinder him from going to Balak, the thought would suggest itself that even the possibility of another oracle being given him than the one Balak desired need not prevent him from doing so much as make the journey. With this new phase of the problem in mind, Balaam again delayed the messengers for the night, while he reopened the question with Jehovah in the hope of an additional communication from him (ver. 19). And sure enough, the message comes which he desires. Even in that audience of his inquiring, but not entirely self-effacing, soul with God he finds a way to reconcile it with his conscience to make the journey. There is almost a quibble in the verbal permission into which his imagination shapes the grateful easing 21 And Balaam rose up in the morning, and saddled his ass, and went with the princes of Moab.

28 And the Lord opened the mouth of the ass, and she said unto Balaam, What have I done unto thee, that thou hast smitten me these three times?

of his conscience in the direction of his desires: If the men be come to call thee—if the matter puts itself in the light of an invitation to go, whatever the outcome—rise up, and go with them; but yet the word which I shall say unto thee, that shalt thou do (ver. 20). The divine communications with the human soul are never altogether objective. There is something in the soul itself which helps to shape them, and it is possible by our very attitude to extort a permission which does not enlist the conscience, but only stills its voice. Balaam felt permitted to go, but his soul was not at peace.

22-35. This section, in which the speaking ass is introduced, seems to have emanated from an author who "has different conceptions before his mind from those of the preceding and following contexts" (BACON). Balaam starts "with the princes of Moab" on a journey which, according to the locating of Balaam's abode as at Pethor (ver. 5; 23 : 7; Deut. 23 : 4), must have been a caravan journey of over three hundred miles across the Syrian waste. For such a journey one would expect the use of camels, but Balaam sets out on an ass with two servants (ver. 22), and presently we find him in a hollow way between vineyards (ver. 24). Such conditions would indicate a much shorter journey and in a thickly settled and cultivated country. Some would find in this a derivation from a Balaam story not exactly in harmony with the rest of these three chapters and corresponding more nearly with 31 : 8, 16; Josh. 13 : 22, according to which Balaam, after "returning to his place" (24 : 25), is found in intimate counsel with the Midianites and is finally involved in their overthrow. It causes critics to raise the question whether, according to one stratum of tradition, Balaam was not a Jehovah-prophet living among the Ammonites (cf. "sons of Ammo," or "Ammon," ver. 5), or the Midianites, from whose country Moses apparently brought the elements of the Jehovah worship (Exod. 3 : 1, seq.; 18 : 11).

God's anger was kindled because he was going (ver. 22). The use of the participle "going" indicates that it was the being actually under way which half brought Balaam to himself and made him feel uncomfortable and guilty. This is the only time the name אֱלֹהִים, Elohim, God, is used in this section. It indicates that this anger of God, of which Balaam was conscious, was not manifested as a definite conviction of Jehovah's displeasure, which would amount to a contradiction of the permission given in ver. 20, but a larger, vaguer inquiet, resulting from his finding himself out of harmony with the sum of things. Unknown to Balaam, the angel of Jehovah had placed himself in the way as a "satan" or adversary. It was not until the ass, more sanely aware of the obstacle than the prophet, had turned out of the way twice (ver. 23, 25) in spite of beating and had finally lain down under her rider (ver. 27), and after the third beating had opened her mouth in vocal remonstrance (ver. 28-30), that Balaam became aware of the angel's presence. As he prostrates himself in terror, the angel

30 And the ass said unto Balaam, Am not I thine ass, upon which thou hast ridden ever since I was thine unto this day? was I ever wont to do so unto thee? And he said, Nay.

31 Then the Lord opened the eyes of Balaam, and he saw the angel of the Lord standing in the way, and his sword drawn in his hand: and he bowed down his head, and fell flat on his face.

32 And the angel of the Lord said unto him, Wherefore hast thou smitten thine ass these three times? behold, I went out to withstand thee, because thy way is perverse before me:

33 And the ass saw me, and turned from me these three times: unless she had turned from me, surely now also I had slain thee, and saved her alive.

34 And Balaam said unto the angel of the Lord, I have sinned: for I knew not that thou stoodest in the way against me: now therefore, if it displease thee, I will get me back again.

30 And the ass said unto Balaam, Am not I thine ass, upon which thou hast ridden all thy life long unto this day? was I ever wont to do so

31 unto thee? And he said, Nay. Then the Lord opened the eyes of Balaam, and he saw the angel of the Lord standing in the way, with his sword drawn in his hand: and he bowed his

32 head, and fell on his face. And the angel of the Lord said unto him, Wherefore hast thou smitten thine ass these three times? behold, I

33 am come forth for an adversary, because thy way is perverse before me: and the ass saw me, and turned aside before me these three times: unless she had turned aside from me, surely now I had even slain thee, and saved her alive.

34 And Balaam said unto the angel of the Lord, I have sinned; for I knew not that thou stoodest in the way against me: now therefore, if it dis-explains that he has placed himself in the way as an obstruction because "the way leads headlong against me," i. e., Jehovah (ver. 32). It seems as if the angel had come as the special representative of Jehovah in order to teach Balaam that the course which went against his primary intuition of right, or Elohim-consciousness, was also opposed to his dogmatically acquired and more sophisticated conception of God as Jehovah. The angel's reproof of Balaam takes pains to make prominent his treatment of his beast (ver. 32) and to point out that the animal has proved more discerning than he and has really saved his life (ver. 33). It is Balaam's saner self which it is necessary to awaken, and this can be more normally reached if the distracting terror at his supernatural adversary (ver. 31) is mitigated by his humiliation on account of his own undignified and unjust loss of temper. Balaam acknowledges that he has sinned in beating his beast so cruelly, and pleads in extenuation that he did not know that the animal had such good reason for "mocking" or "vexing" him (see ver. 29). Now that he sees that his going to Moab is displeasing to the angel, or rather to Jehovah whom he represents, Balaam offers to return home (ver. 34), but is directed to go on with the men under the same rigid restriction as was placed on him before (ver. 35; cf. ver. 20).

How much of this incident of the speaking animal is a transcript of the vivid operations of Balaam's perturbed mind, and how much is actual objective fact, it is impossible to determine. In any case it was real to Balaam, and he is the only one for whose benefit the incident occurred and probably the only one from whom the report of the occurrence could reach the world. The only other instance of a speaking animal in the Bible is that of the serpent in Eden (Gen. 3: 1, al.). In this account of Balaam it is said that Jehovah opened the mouth of the ass (ver. 28), but it is very questionable whether the servants, if they were present, either heard the beast talk or saw the angel. It is to be noticed, as rendering the theory of mere invention improbable, that the subjects comprehended by the beast in its utterances were not such as transcend the mental powers of the brute creation. There is no mention of the angel, nor any apprehension of the spiritual entanglements in which its master is involved, but only a remonstrance and a reminder of past faithfulness. On the other hand, it may be said that the language of the animal expresses no more, when reversed to fit Balaam's point of view, than the prophet's own better nature might have suggested to him, namely, perplexity that a beast which he had owned for a long period, and which had always obeyed him, should thus exceptionally turn out of the way and need punishment three times. This feeling, polarized in Balaam's mind by his disturbed sense of divine displeasure, might easily shape itself in his imaginative and concrete mental processes into a vocal remonstrance proceeding from the beast which he was maltreating.

It was a perturbed mind that rendered Balaam susceptible to the experiences of this unlucky journey. That it was the overmastering eagerness of mere avarice which made him blind to the presence of the angel is not altogether apparent. He was not a coarse enough man for that. A passage in the Second Epistle of Peter (2: 15, 16), which, with its briefer parallel in Jude 11, points a moral from this part of the Balaam story, while assigning avarice as the main incentive which brought Balaam on this journey, nevertheless speaks of "leaving the straight road and getting astray" (καταλείποντες εὐθεῖαν ὁδὸν ἐπλανήθησαν), and of the dumb beast, as a rebuke of his "missing the law" (παρνομίας) forbidding the "infatuation" (παραφροσύνη) of the prophet, in such a way as to point to a deeper maladjustment than a mere earthly absorption in gain, in short, to indicate that the moralizer had in mind an unquiet somewhat like that massive sense of divine displeasure with which the account figures the prophet as starting out. This made him testy, and this made him hear rebukes for his unwonted irascibility from the very mouth of the ass, and finally opened his eyes to that spiritual presence which presented in bodily form the opposing attitude of Jehovah himself.

36-41. Balak, on receiving intelligence that Balaam had come, went out to meet him at his frontier near the Arnon (cf. 21 : 13), at a city of Moab (ver. 36), rather, Ir of Moab, probably the same as Ar (cf. 21 : 15, 28; Isa. 15 : 1). He chided the tardy prophet for his delay, which to his vanity seemed to be a reflection on his purchasing power (ver. 37), and received the rather chilling assurance that with all his magnificent promises he had only commanded Balaam's presence, not his mantic power, which he still reserved subject to the unascertained dictation of God (ver. 38). From the frontier city Balaam was conducted to קִרְיַת הַחֻצוֹת, Qiriath-huzoth, or City of streets (ver. 39), not improbably Balak's official residence, as Huzoth is apparently mentioned as such on an Egyptian papyrus in the British Museum. A peace-offering banquet welcomed Balaam and the princes with him (ver. 40); and the next morning he was brought to the high places, or bamoth, of Baal, which is no doubt the Bamoth, or Bamoth-baal mentioned as one of the stopping-places of the children of Israel (21 : 19, 20), and one of the places that fell to the tribe of Reuben (Josh. 13 : 17). From this place which, though north of the Arnon, still perhaps remained in possession of Moab, Balaam could see one extremity of the Israelitish camp (ver. 41).

Chap. 23. BALAAM'S FIRST TWO DISCOURSES. 1-10. The first direction which Balaam gave to the king of Moab was that he should build seven altars in that place, and offer a bullock and a ram on each altar. All important undertakings in ancient times were preceded by sacrifices intended to gain the good-will of the gods. The number seven is a frequently occurring sacred number. It was sometimes employed even by Gentiles in religious ceremonies connected with the quest for the inner truth of things. When Æneas consulted the Sybil he offered seven oxen and seven sheep (Virgil, Æn., VI., 38, seq.). Balak did according to the seer's directions (ver. 2), and the two together made the prescribed sacrifice on each altar. In the LXX this act of offering is asserted only of Balak, just as in ver. 30, thus corresponding more closely to the expression "thy burnt offering" (ver. 3) and "his burnt offering" (ver. 6); but Balaam claims the act of sacrificing as his own in ver. 4. Balak is directed to take his station by his burnt offering (ver. 3), perhaps Lord will come to meet me: and whatsoever he sheweth me I will tell thee. And he went to an high place.

4 And God met Balaam: and he said unto him, I have prepared seven altars, and I have offered upon every altar a bullock and a ram.

5 And the Lord put a word in Balaam's mouth, and said, Return unto Balak, and thus thou shalt speak.

6 And he returned unto him, and, lo, he stood by his burnt sacrifice, he, and all the princes of Moab.

7 And he took up his parable, and said, Balak the king of Moab hath brought me from Aram, out of the mountains of the east, saying, Come, curse me Jacob, and come, defy Israel.

8 How shall I curse, whom God hath not cursed? or how shall I defy, whom the Lord hath not defied?

9 For from the top of the rocks I see him, and from the hills I behold him: lo, the people shall dwell alone, and shall not be reckoned among the nations.

will go; peradventure the Lord will come to meet me: and whatsoever he sheweth me I will tell thee. And he went to a bare height. And God met Balaam: and he said unto him, I have prepared thee seven altars, and I have offered

5 up a bullock and a ram on every altar. And the Lord put a word in Balaam's mouth, and said, Return unto Balak, and thus thou shalt speak.

6 And he returned unto him, and, lo, he stood by his burnt offering, he, and all the princes of 7 Moab. And he took up his parable, and said, From Aram hath Balak brought me, The king of Moab from the mountains of the East:

Come, curse me Jacob,

And come, defy Israel.

8 How shall I curse, whom God hath not cursed? And how shall I defy, whom the Lord hath not defied?

9 For from the top of the rocks I see him, And from the hills I behold him: Lo, it is a people that dwell alone, And shall not be reckoned among the nations.

for the purpose of guarding it as Abraham did on another occasion (Gen. 15 : 11), while the seer himself goes to see what Jehovah will show him. He is evidently seeking the fateful knowledge in omens or signs in nature or the sky (cf. 24 : 1, which should read omens instead of enchantments), and for this purpose he goes to a bare height (see R. V.). It was the custom of Roman augurs also to carry on their observation of natural omens from exposed high places (Cicero, De off., III., 16). While Balaam's ordinary method of pronouncing destiny was by throwing himself into a passive or trance-like state and gathering impressions through suggestion (see on 22 : 8-21), yet he was no doubt versed in all the fanciful lore of omens and signs derived from the appearances of nature. This device of consulting omens was perhaps adopted on the present occasion as more controllable and plastic than his ordinary method of trance or surrender to impressions. In this latter state he knew that his utterances would be beyond his control (see 22 : 18); and the fact that he abandoned the device of seeking omens when he found they were of no use (24 : 1) seems to indicate that he had recourse at first to omens instead of trance in the hope that, by keeping in his active mental state, he might steer his auguries into a curse instead of a blessing. Despite his premonition that Israel was blessed (22 : 12), Balaam was making strenuous efforts to figure out a destiny for Israel in accordance with Balak's wishes. But once more, as on that former occasion when he had fairly set out (22 : 22, and note), Balaam was brought back to his primary intuition of the unyieldingness of the truth of things. God, Elohim, met him, Balaam (ver. 4), and as he reflected before the infinite Presence that he had builded the seven altars, i. e., the sacred number customary when parties ally themselves with inviolate truth (see Gen. 21 : 28-31), and had offered a bullock and a ram on every altar, the already disclosed truth (see 22 : 12) of God's purpose to bless Israel came upon him with a commanding insistence which he dared not resist (ver. 5). With the conviction that his message was made up from Jehovah he went back to Balak standing with his princes by his burnt-offering (ver. 6), and broke into the rhythmic utterance which is the measured rapture of all impassioned and lofty thought (ver. 7).

That discourse is interesting as a highly subjective expression of the mind or consciousness of the seer as swayed by his surroundings. He first recalls the position in which he finds himself, namely, engaged, at Balak's invitation, in the effort to curse and defy Israel (ver. 7), i. e., to feel horror or repugnance at his fate, and to excite the frenzy of defiant rage at his presence. Then he expresses his feeling of the divine resistance which such effort encounters (ver. 8).

"How shall I curse whom 'El hath not cursed?
And how shall I menace whom Jehovah hath not menaced?"

There is no material, no stirring, for a feeling of horror in regard to a people so palpably well-fated in the sight of God as this people. Going on and ascribing his impression frankly to the marvelous view obtained from the top of the rocks, the prophet speaks as one especially struck with the separateness, the sublime uniqueness, of that wonderful people:

"Behold! a people dwelleth alone;
And among the nations doth not reckon itself!" (ver. 9.)

Now comes the prediction of the future; and it is simply a vision of the characteristic Oriental blessing of immense populousness:

10 Who can count the dust of Jacob, and the number of the fourth part of Israel? Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his!

11 And Balak said unto Balaam, What hast thou done unto me? I took thee to curse mine enemies, and, behold, thou hast blessed them altogether.

12 And he answered and said, Must I not take heed to speak that which the Lord hath put in my mouth?

13 And Balak said unto him, Come, I pray thee, with me unto another place, from whence thou mayest see them: thou shalt see but the utmost part of them, and shalt not see them all: and curse me them from thence.

14 And he brought him into the field of Zophim, to the top of Pisgah, and built seven altars, and offered a bullock and a ram on every altar.

10 Who can count the dust of Jacob, Or number the fourth part of Israel? Let me die the death of the righteous, And let my last end be like his!

11 And Balak said unto Balaam, What hast thou done unto me? I took thee to curse mine enemies, and, behold, thou hast blessed them altogether.

12 And he answered and said, Must I not take heed to speak that which the Lord putteth in my mouth? And Balak said unto him, Come,

I pray thee, with me unto another place, from whence thou mayest see them; thou shalt see but the utmost part of them, and shalt not see them all: and curse me them from thence. And he took him into the field of Zophim, to the top of Pisgah, and built seven altars, and offered up

“Who hath counted the dust of Jacob, And the number—the fourth part of Israel?”

Finally, when it comes to pronouncing destiny, or throwing the whole wishing self into a fate-laden utterance—which is what cursing or blessing consists in—Balaam can conceive no personal fate so fervently to be longed for as just the glorious outcome which he perceives reserved for Israel’s history:

“Let my soul die the death of the upright!
And be my last end like his!” (Ver. 10.)

The word translated righteous (אֲשֵׁרִים y'sharim, ver. 10), is perhaps a play on the poetic name of Israel, אֲשֵׁרִים Y'shurun (Deut. 32 : 15 ; Isa. 44 : 2, etc.). To the ancient Oriental mind, which had not risen to the idea of immortality in an unseen state as anything desirable, the symbol of all glorious or covetable destiny was a happy death. Beyond the gateway of death, in conceiving of a person’s future, the early mind did not travel. Hence to wish for a death, even for one’s own soul, like that of the righteous was to wish for a similar glorious outcome or destiny conceived of in a generalized and massive way, the individual post-mortem existence being left to the unrevealed and uninterrogated mind of God.

11-24. When Balak reproached Baalam at his first arrival it was for his reluctance to come to him, which seemed to imply contempt of his power to reward (22 : 37). Now he undertakes to assert the right of an employer, as if he owned Balaam’s services: I took thee to curse mine enemies, and, behold, thou hast blessed them altogether (ver. 11). He finds, however, that Balaam is in the grasp of a higher power (ver. 12). Come, I pray thee, with me unto another place (ver. 13). “Balak, in true heathen fashion, attributes the unfavorable result to external circumstances, and at the same time does not desist from the attempt, but proposes to help matters by a change of station-point” (DILLMANN). Thou shalt see but the utmost part of them, and shalt not see them all. Considerable difficulty has been felt with this passage as it reads, on account of the apparent identity of the conditions proposed with those in which Balaam is already placed (see 22 : 41). Ingenious attempts have been made so to translate as to make the passage in 22 : 41 describe a wide-open view, or else to make the passage here, rendered in the present tense, refer to what Balaam now sees at Bamoth-Baal, as a contrast to what Balak proposes to show him from the next station. It seems more natural to translate this passage as it is in the Authorized and Revised versions, and to suppose that, though from the place where the first altars were built only a restricted view of the people was obtainable (22 : 41), yet when Balaam went to his “bare height” (23 : 3) he gained a fuller survey. Certainly ver. 9, 10 indicate that Balaam had a very impressive view of the Israelitish camp. Balak took him to the field of Zophim, or “Gazers,” at the top, head, of Pisgah (ver. 14). It was somewhere along this Nebo platform that Moses was finally brought for his dying view of the promised land (Deut. 34 : 1). “Nebo and the neighboring hills were also the stations and altars of Balaam. Balak brought him from the Arnon, and first they took up their position at Bamoth-Baal, which must have lain back from the edge of the hills, for Balaam could see from it only the farther edge of Israel’s camp in the plain below (22 : 41). The seer’s second station was in the field of Zophim, or the Gazers, which is given as on ‘the head of Pisgah’ (23 : 14), where seven altars were built. The third station was the top, head, of Peor, that look-eth toward, down on, Jeshimon (ver. 28)—the same index as is given for Nebo itself, yet probably a point still nearer to the plain of Shittim. The places at which Balaam took his stand and looked for omens were all probably sanctuaries. The range is covered with the names of deity—Baal, Nebo, Peor. Nor could there be more suitable platforms for altars, nor more open posts for observing the stars or the passage of clouds, or the flight of birds across the great hollow of the 'Arabah. The field of Gazers was rightly named. To-day the hills have many ancient altars and circles of stones upon them" (SMITH).

The same preparation for the solemn act was made as before, and Balaam went by himself to "be met" (ver. 15). While on the first occasion it was said that "Elohim met Balaam," here it is "Jehovah" (ver. 16), and this is not without its correspondence with the specific character of this second discourse which is founded more particularly on the known or revealed being of God as above human weakness and as in alliance with Israel, rather than on the general appearance and obvious thriftiness of the upright nation. On his return the seer again finds Balak with his princes eagerly awaiting the result of the second trial. I give my own translation of the discourse:

"Rise, Balak, and hear;

Give ear unto me, son of Zippor:

Not a man is 'El, that he should lie,

And the son of Adam, that he should repent.

Hath he spoken, and will he not do?

And given the word, and will he not confirm it?

Behold, I received command to bless;

And he hath blessed, and I may not reverse it.

He hath not discerned folly in Jacob;

And hath not seen wrong in Israel.

Jehovah his God is with him;

And the shout of a king is in him.

'El is bringing them from Egypt;—

His are like the movements of a wild ox.

For there is no omen in Jacob,

And no divination in Israel:

According to the time it is spoken unto Jacob,

And unto Israel, what 'El hath wrought.

Behold a people—as a lion he rises!

And as a strong lion he lifts himself up!

He shall not lie down till he has devoured prey,

And drunk the blood of the slain!"

This discourse differs from the first in being more definitely laudatory, and more positively assertive of the divine dealings with Israel. The seer seems to forget all his limitations and rises to a sublime height of prophetic inspiration. In the former case he could not curse because God had not cursed; here God, who does not lie nor repent like finite beings (ver. 19), has positively blessed, and that irreversible act of God Balaam accepts as a command to him to bless (ver. 20). Following out more definitely the idea contained in the epithet "righteous" in the first discourse (ver. 10), Balaam asserts God's redeeming blindness to fault in Israel, and his alliance as Jehovah with him, which imparts a royal quality to the nation (ver. 21). The expression, "The shout of a king is in him," is a specimen of the magnificent Hebrew imagery which ought not to be disguised in translation. It interprets itself. If the psalmist felt, with regard to Jehovah in the more impressive phenomena of nature, that "in his temple everything saith, Glory!" (Ps. 29 : 9), the admiring seer could feel in this place that everything in Israel saith, Royalty! This translation of a nation from Egypt is an act of God, and it awakens in Balaam's mind the image of the genius of the thee, saying, All that the Lord speaketh, that I must do? And Balak said unto Balaam, Come now, I will take thee unto another place; peradventure it will please God that thou mayest curse me them from thence. And Balak took Balaam unto the top of Peor, that looketh down upon the desert. And Balaam said unto Balak, Build me here seven altars, and prepare me here seven bullocks and seven rams. And Balak did as Balaam had said, and offered up a bullock and a ram on every altar.

nation as like a mighty דָּבָר, r'em, or wild ox (ver. 22). This couplet is repeated in the third discourse (24 : 8). And now as Balaam contemplates Israel under the fostering care of Jehovah, he feels with self-disgust how utterly out of touch is all Israel's history, and all his inspired conception of the divine process of events, with the petty auguries and divinations of the heathen (ver. 23). According to this time it shall be said of Jacob and of Israel, What hath God wrought! (See translation in the Notes.) This seems to be a kind of objective definition of prophecy—that function which is the distinction of spiritual Israel, and which so gloriously contrasts with the omen-seeking of those who have no revelation—as a sort of sympathy or communion with Jehovah which keeps the run of the movements of his Spirit, and so comprehends the significance of God's working as it emerges out of the time.<sup>1</sup> We are reminded of the Saviour's saying to those who had grown out of alignment with God's Spirit: "Ye know how to discern the face of the heaven; but ye cannot discern the signs of the times" (Matt. 16 : 3). Prophecy is essentially the perception of the divine philosophy of history while history is in the making. It is the discerning, at the time, of what God hath wrought. This contrast between Israel discovering the divine will through prophets, of whom Moses was the type, and the surrounding nations who use auguries and practise divination is strongly asserted and enjoined in Deut. 18 : 14, seq. Balaam ends his discourse by comparing the people of Israel to a strong lion which has become aroused, arguing from the very disposition of the king of beasts whom he resembles that there must be bloodshed and conquest before he settles down (ver. 24).

25-30. As Balak perceives that the current of vaticination is setting so strongly in the direction of blessing, he is anxious to stop the flow of it at this point. If he cannot have the curse, he will at least avoid having the actual blessing pronounced (ver. 25). Balaam has given an impassioned description of the theocratic felicity and the prowess of Israel, but the actual words of blessing, so much dreaded by the superstitious Moabite king, have not yet been uttered and do not appear until the end of the third discourse (24 : 9). But Balaam is in the current; he must go on and say ain that Jehovah has given him to say (ver. 26). Finding it inevitable that the drama must now be played through, Balak will at least try the experiment of another change of place. But he has now acquired some respect for God, if not a comprehension of his character. Instead of ignoring the divine will and saying, as on the former occasion, "Curse me them from thence" (ver. 13), he more modestly entertains the thought as a possibility, "Perhaps it will be right in the eyes of God that thou mayest curse me them from thence" (ver. 27). On the place to which he takes Balaam, see the quotation from Professor Smith in the preceding section. The customary preparation of altars and sacrifices is prescribed and furnished and Balaam makes ready for his third discourse.

Chap. 24. THE PROPHECIES OF BALAAM.

1-9. Balaam now desists from the attempt to find a divine oracle in omens. The word trans-

<sup>1</sup> "The Jew," says Renan, "thanks to a kind of prophetic sense which renders the Semite at times marvelously apt to see the great lines of the future, has made history enter into religion."

CHAPTER XXIV.

1 AND when Balaam saw that it pleased the Lord to bless Israel, he went not, as at other times, to seek for enchantments, but he set his face toward the wilderness.

2 And Balaam lifted up his eyes, and he saw Israel abiding in his tents according to their tribes; and the spirit of God came upon him.

3 And he took up his parable, and said, Balaam the son of Beor hath said, and the man whose eyes are open hath said:

lated enchantments (ver. 1) probably means omens, or auguries, such as could be gathered from the fanciful and traditional interpretation of the appearances of nature. At each attempt Balaam has been "met," or "encountered," by the divine Presence and Idea (see 23 : 4, 16), who has "put a word into his mouth," owing no part of its suggestion to the natural signs which Balaam hoped to make available. Omens and divination are found to be altogether out of place in Israel's history (23 : 23). Balaam is fully convinced of the divine determination to bless Israel, and accordingly he reverts to his more natural method of clairvoyant suggestion, on whose strong tide he had thought it not expedient to launch so long as there was hope of controlling his vaticinations in Balak's favor. Frankly, and with all artifice of restricted view and cherishing of antagonistic interests laid aside, he sets his face toward the wilderness, where Israel lies encamped, and so surrenders himself to the full impression of the scene. Balaam is now himself, and as he sees Israel dwelling according to their tribes; the spirit of God (ver. 2), comes upon him so that he speaks by true prophetic inspiration. While on the previous occasions Jehovah has met him and, as it were, dragged his reluctant mental operations into eulogy, here he is borne along by "the spirit of God." It is not until one is his own real, unaffected self that "the spirit of God" can fully control him. Balaam's third mashal may be thus translated:

" Utterance of Balaam son of Beor,
And utterance of the man of the closed eye;
Utterance of the bearer of the words of 'El,
Who beholdeth visions of Shaddai,
Sinking, and having the eyes uncovered:
How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob!
Thy tabernacles, O Israel!
Like valleys they are spread out;
Like gardens by the river;
Like aloes Jehovah hath planted;
Like cedars by the water.
He runneth water from both his buckets;
And his seed is in abundance of water;

1 AND when Balaam saw that it pleased the Lord to bless Israel, he went not, as at the other times, to meet with enchantments, but he set 2 his face toward the wilderness. And Balaam lifted up his eyes, and he saw Israel dwelling according to their tribes; and the spirit of God 3 came upon him. And he took up his parable, and said,

Balaam the son of Beor saith,
And the man whose eye was closed saith:

And higher than Agag is his king;
And exalted is his kingdom.
'El is bringing him from Egypt;
His are like the movements of a wild ox.
He devoureth nations—his adversaries;
And their bones he gnaweth bare;
And with his arrows he pierceth right through.
He couched, he lay down like a lion,
And like a strong lion—who shall rouse him?
Blessed be every one that blesseth thee!
And cursed be every one that curseth thee!"

Ver. 3 and 4 are a sort of introduction or title in which the kind of discourse which follows is specified, and Balaam's psychical habit and his prophetic seizure are described at some length. His discourse is called a נְאֻם, n'um, utterance, or oracle, a term most frequently coupled with Jehovah and meaning a divine word or disclosure, as in Ps. 110 : 1, "Utterance of Jehovah to my lord." It is almost always translated by the verb "saith," or some tense of it, in our version. When it is coupled with the name of the human author, it means that person's deepest, most essential deliverance, very much like our word message used in the religious sense, as for instance, David's last words, "Utterance of David son of Jesse, and utterance of the man who was exalted on high" (2 Sam. 23 : 1), or the "words of Agur son of Jakeh, the burden; utterance of the plain man" (Prov. 30 : 1). In one place the profound impression produced by the wicked man's transgression on the sensitive heart is said to amount to a n'um, or utterance (Ps. 36 : 1). The term came to be used by the prophets as a sort of mark of the prophetic style and pretension, the word utterance being as technical a term for the prophet's message as our word sermon is for the discourse of a preacher. Thus Jeremiah says, "Behold I am against the prophets, is the utterance of Jehovah, who 'take' their tongues and mutter 'utterance'" (Jer. 23 : 31). Balaam is, therefore, introducing his discourse with the technical name for a prophet's disclosure. He designates himself as "the man of the closed eye." This I take to be a name for his clairvoyant power and talent,

4 He hath said, which heard the words of God, which saw the vision of the Almighty, falling into a trance, but having his eyes open :

5 How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Israel!

6 As the valleys are they spread forth, as gardens by the river's side, as the trees of lign aloes which the Lord hath planted, and as cedar trees beside the waters.

7 He shall pour the water out of his buckets, and his seed shall be in many waters, and his king shall be higher than Agag, and his kingdom shall be exalted.

8 God brought him forth out of Egypt; he hath as it were the strength of an unicorn: he shall eat up the nations his enemies, and shall break their bones, and pierce them through with his arrows.

9 He couched, he lay down as a lion, and as a great lion: who shall stir him up? Blessed is he

4 He saith, which heareth the words of God, Which seeth the vision of the Almighty, Falling down, and having his eyes open :

5 How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, Thy tabernacles, O Israel!

6 As valleys are they spread forth, As gardens by the river side, As lign-aloes which the Lord hath planted, As cedar trees beside the waters.

7 Water shall flow from his buckets, And his seed shall be in many waters, And his king shall be higher than Agag, And his kingdom shall be exalted.

8 God bringeth him forth out of Egypt; He hath as it were the strength of the wild-ox: He shall eat up the nations his adversaries, And shall break their bones in pieces, And smite them through with his arrows.

9 He crouched, he lay down as a lion, And as a lioness; who shall rouse him up?

which is now resumed con amore and given full play after the overruled attempt to declare fate without it. The closure of the outward eye was the accompaniment of the unrestricted inner vision, and this latter is described in the last line of ver. 4, which in the Authorized version reads, falling into a trance, but having his eyes open. The words "into a trance" are inserted by the translators and are omitted in the Revised version. This omission was, no doubt, because the revisers regarded the words as an explanation rather than a rendering, belonging to the commentator rather than to the translator. The "falling" mentioned in the Hebrew is not the reverent prostration of the person, astounded at the majesty of the vision (cf. Ezek. 1 : 28 ; 3 : 23, etc.), nor a sinking down like Saul's (1 Sam. 19 : 24), which was simply the exhaustion and rigor of the spent dervish, but a surrender to the passive state, with its attendant relaxation of the muscles, which was the condition of the seer's clairvoyant vision. While in this state, he "hears the words of God" and "sees the vision of the Almighty," to which traits of the prophetic vision the last discourse adds, "Knows the knowledge of the Most High" (ver. 16). It is a genuine admission to prophetic knowledge which, as I have elsewhere observed (see on 11 : 23-35), is essentially seeing, or direct perception of divine things, vouchsafed to Balaam while in his passive state. The "trance," or "falling," is the individual trait belonging to Balaam's highly subjective temperament and is not necessarily an accompaniment of prophecy in general. The impartation of the divine knowledge through vision or dream, however, appears to have been the commoner condition of prophecy in the older time, and this contrasted the ordinary prophets with prophets of the type of Moses (see 12 : 6, 7, and note), who was equal to the act of spiritual or divine perception in his normal state and who anticipated prophecy of this saner type as the characteristic and permanent prophetism in Israel (Deut. 18 : 15). It was this highest type—this sane and normally wakeful prophecy, the theocratic interpretation of the times—which Balaam contemplated in his second discourse (see 23 : 23) as the extremest contrast to the omens and divinations of the heathen and which characterized more especially the teachings of the greater prophets, whose discourses are left to us in writing, like Isaiah and Jeremiah.

In the "utterance" or discourse which follows, Balaam first indulges his imagination in the rapt picture of the people, arranged according to their tribal divisions like garden plots along a river (ver. 6, cf. πρασιαι πρασιαι; Mark 6 : 40), and it suggests the thought of marvelous and glorious vegetative fecundity. In ver. 7 the figure advances from that of the irrigator carrying water in buckets suspended from the shoulder, "He runneth water from both his buckets—" to that of the abundantly watered seedlings from the parent tree, "And his seed is in abundance of water—" and finally to plain language in which the exaltation of his kingdom is compared to that of the most formidable of the ancient Arab tribes, Amalek. Agag, with whom the king of Israel is compared, was the king of the Amalekites whom Saul conquered (1 Sam. 15), and the name may perhaps have been a title belonging to the kings of Amalek in general, like Pharaoh as applied to the kings of Egypt. In the remainder of the discourse, after repeating the figure of the wild ox from 23 : 22, Balaam's imagination revels mostly in the comparison of Israel to a ferocious beast actually devouring in war, or sleeping with his boundless possibilities in abeyance and perilous to be roused (ver. 9). This last figure, that of the sleeping lion, is adapted from, or appropriated by the author of Jacob's dying prophecy (see Gen. 49 : 9). The that blesseth thee, and cursed is he that curseth thee.

10 And Balak's anger was kindled against Balaam, and he smote his hands together: and Balak said unto Balaam, I called thee to curse mine enemies, and, behold, thou hast altogether blessed them these three times.

11 Therefore now flee thou to thy place: I thought to promote thee unto great honour; but, lo, the Lord hath kept thee back from honour.

12 And Balaam said unto Balak, Spake I not also to thy messengers which thou sentest unto me, saying, 13 If Balak would give me his house full of silver and gold, I cannot go beyond the commandment of the Lord, to do either good or bad of mine own mind; but what the Lord saith, that will I speak?

formula for blessing with which the discourse closes was also something of a stock expression, being used in the dying benediction of Isaac upon Esau (Gen. 27 : 29).

Balak's emotions in consequence of Balaam's performances have passed through the stages of bewilderment (23 : 11) and defensive solicitude (ibid., ver. 25, 27), and have now risen to anger. In the intensest vexation he smites his hands together (ver. 10), and his dismissal of Balaam is not much like the courtliness of dignified Oriental etiquette. His command to Balaam to "break" or "flee" to his place (ver. 11) seems to imply a threat that worse will befall him if he is found lingering; and his assertion that Jehovah has kept him back from honor does not imply an acknowledgment of Jehovah as the controller of world events, but rather refers to him as Balaam's master whom he has chosen to his disadvantage. Balaam reminds him of what he told his messengers when they came to him the second time (22 : 18), and then goes on, before leaving for his own country, to add a gratuitous prediction of what the glorious Israelitish nation shall do to Balak's people in the latter days (ver. 14). This last or supplemental discourse, with its prophecy of the star and the sceptre, contains the principal data for the determination of the place of the Balaam discourses in Jewish history and literature, and is accordingly the most interesting to the critics. It seems to come less naturally from the mouth of a soothsayer, or even a prophet, of the time of Moses than the other discourses, and to reflect quite unmistakably the historic situation and enthusiasms of David's or Solomon's time. While raising no question as to the historicity of the Balaam story in general, we may easily conjecture that the form of his discourses, which could hardly have been reported verbatim by an eye-witness, is more or less owing to the literary talent of the later authors who put the stories into shape. Their patriotic pride, which in the earlier discourses

Blessed be every one that blesseth thee,

And cursed be every one that curseth thee.

10 And Balak's anger was kindled against Balaam, and he smote his hands together: and Balak said unto Balaam, I called thee to curse mine enemies, and, behold, thou hast altogether

11 blessed them these three times. Therefore now flee thou to thy place: I thought to promote thee unto great honour: but, lo, the Lord hath

12 kept thee back from honour. And Balaam said unto Balak, Spake I not also to thy messengers

13 which thou sentest unto me, saying, If Balak would give me his house full of silver and gold, I cannot go beyond the word of the Lord, to do either good or bad of mine own mind; what the expressed the glory of Israel in such general pictures as could easily reveal themselves to a divinely aided seer of Moses' time, becomes more specific in this last discourse, and issues in a production in which the environment, which always plays its part in inspiration, seems characteristic of a later epoch. The discourse is introduced by the same formula as the one at the beginning of the third maschal (cf. ver. 15, 16 with 3, 4), with one significant addition (ver. 16)—and knew the knowledge of the Most High—which, beyond describing a mortal's admission to the specific disclosures or visions of God, seems to profess a knowledge of the divine counsels like a participation in omniscience. With an attempt at a representation of the original tenses we may render the discourse itself as follows:

"I see him, but not now;

I survey him, but not nigh.

There hath gone forth a star from Jacob;

And a scepter hath risen from Israel;

And it hath smitten through both sides of Moab,

And destroyed all the sons of tumult.

And Edom hath become a possession;

And Seir hath become a possession—his enemies;

And Israel is doing mightily.

And one lordeth it from Jacob,

And destroyeth the survivor from the city."

As suggestive of a literary origin for this supplemental discourse, there is not only the extravagant claim to divine knowledge already referred to, but the opening lines,

"I see him, but not now;

I survey him, but not nigh," seem more suggestive of the pose of the seer, the artistic color which a professional writer would employ, than the other discourses. The seer views the history of Israel as a panorama passing before his eyes. It is to be remembered

14 And now, behold, I go unto my people: come therefore, and I will advertise thee what this people shall do to thy people in the latter days.

15 And he took up his parable, and said, Balaam the son of Beor hath said, and the man whose eyes are open hath said:

16 He hath said, which heard the words of God, and knew the knowledge of the most High, which saw the vision of the Almighty, falling into a trance, but having his eyes open:

14 Lord speaketh, that will I speak? And now, behold, I go unto my people: come, and, I will advertise thee what this people shall do to thy people in the latter days. And he took up his parable, and said,

Balaam the son of Beor saith,
And the man whose eye was closed saith:

16 He saith, which heareth the words of God,
And knoweth the knowledge of the Most High,
Which seeth the vision of the Almighty,
Falling down, and having his eyes open:

that his sole professed theme is the relation or contact of Israel with Moab in the "futurity of the days" (ver. 14). He represents the power of Moab as totally broken under the prowess of some monarch of Israel, and Edom as a conquered possession entirely subject to the overlordship of the Israelitish monarch who has hunted out and destroyed even his last refuge. If this were the vision of a man seeing prophetically into the far future we should expect it to conform to the final facts of Moab's history, instead of disclosing a vista arbitrarily cut off at an epoch when Moab's history was not closed, nor had it even assumed its characteristic features. The nearest that Moab and Edom ever came to being both subjected to the victorious arms of an Israelitish monarch was in the time of David (2 Sam. 8 : 2, 12-14; 1 Kings 11 : 15, seq. : Ps. 60 : 8, 9 and title); but this state of things did not continue, both nations being afterward independent and more or less troublesome to Israel. "The Moabite stone informs us that [the people of Moab] were again subdued by Omri, and oppressed by him and his successors for forty years. It records also the success of the revolt of Mesha, alluded to in 2 Kings 1 : 1, and 3 : 4, 5. Henceforth the Moabites, though defeated by Joram (2 Kings 3 : 21, seq.), succeeded in maintaining their independence, and in the reign of Joash appear (2 Kings 13 : 20) even to have waged offensive war against Israel. They were eventually conquered by John Hyrcanus, 129 B. C., and merged in the Jewish State. So too, the Edomites revolted under Solomon (1 Kings 11 : 14, seq.); and under Joram again and more successfully (2 Kings 8 : 20); and though defeated by Amaziah (2 Kings 14 : 7) and by Uzziah (2 Kings 14 : 22), were never again completely subjugated. Indeed, in the reign of Ahaz (2 Chron. 28 : 17) they invaded Judah" (Bible Comm.). The outlook of the seer, or writer, of this vision of Balaam therefore appears to be that of some one who shared in the enthusiasm of David's victories and glory and expected his supremacy over Moab and Edom to be permanent.

The most direct and rational way, therefore, of accounting for the peculiarities of this prediction regarding the fate of Moab and Edom seems to be by supposing that it took literary form in the age of David or Solomon. There remains the Messianic interpretation, which has had very general acceptance in the Christian church and which has not been without its influence among the Jews. This consists in taking Moab and Edom as types of the enemies of God in general, and is based on the principle that as the prophecies were never permanently fulfilled in the literal sense, they must still await a progressive fulfilment in a spiritual sense. Of course this takes it for granted that Balaam uttered the prediction and that God used him to proclaim Messianic or eternally unfolding truth. The star and the sceptre are taken to refer to a line of kings of whom David was the type and Messiah the consummation. This interpretation would commend itself to the Jewish mind through the brilliancy of its figures, and especially because it chimed in with the Jewish expectations of national aggrandizement through Messiah. Given a nation with such a fervent and inflammable anticipation of supremacy in the world, which is itself a phenomenon of immense significance in religious history, and any prediction of wide conquest and power need only be too extravagant for immediate literal fulfilment to be accepted as Messianic. The star was a not uncommon figure for a royal personage (Isa. 14 : 12) and is used as a predicate of the risen Lord (Rev. 22 : 16). It was a star seen in the East, Balaam's country, which led the Wise men to seek the new-born King of the Jews (Matt. 2 : 1, 2), and the leader of the last rebellion of the Jews in Hadrian's time, perhaps trading on this very passage in Balaam's discourse, called himself Bar-Cochab, or "Son of the Star." The figure of the sceptre, interpretable as Messianic, is also found in Jacob's dying blessing (see Gen. 49 : 10), that composition which has already shown one parallel with the Balaam discourses (cf. ver. 9 with Gen. 49 : 9) and which in its final literary form is probably not far removed from them in time. This Messianic interpretation has been an accepted one in the Christian church, especially in those ages when the church was disposed to magnify the marvelous and supernatural, on account of the 17 I shall see him, but not now: I shall behold him, but not nigh: there shall come a Star out of Jacob, and a Sceptre shall rise out of Israel, and shall smite the corners of Moab, and destroy all the children of Sheth.

18 And Edom shall be a possession, Seir also shall be a possession for his enemies; and Israel shall do valiantly.

19 Out of Jacob shall come he that shall have dominion, and shall destroy him that remaineth of the city.

20 And when he looked on Amalek, he took up his parable, and said, Amalek was the first of the nations; but his latter end shall be that he perish for ever.

21 And he looked on the Kenites, and took up his parable, and said, Strong is thy dwellingplace, and thou puttest thy nest in a rock.

17 I see him, but not now:
I behold him, but not nigh:
There shall come forth a star out of Jacob,
And a sceptre shall rise out of Israel,
And shall smite through the corners of Moab,
And break down all the sons of tumult.

18 And Edom shall be a possession,
Seir also shall be a possession, which were his enemies;
While Israel doeth valiantly.

19 And out of Jacob shall one have dominion,
And shall destroy the remnant from the city.

20 And he looked on Amalek, and took up his parable, and said,

Amalek was the first of the nations;
But his latter end shall come to destruction.

21 And he looked on the Kenite, and took up his parable, and said,
Strong is thy dwelling place,
And thy nest is set in the rock.

church's fervent looking forward to its risen Lord's universal spiritual reign, though it must be admitted that the Old Testament predictions of violence and carnage in connection with Jewish royal supremacy can be applied to the mild sway and spread of Christianity only in an accommodated and highly spiritualized sense. There is nothing gained for Christian evidences by insisting on a Messianic interpretation for this passage. The more rational and defensible position is thus defined by Dr. Robert Watson: "The oracle of Balaam refers to the virility and prospective dominance of Israel, as a nation favored by the Almighty and destined to be strong in battle. The range of the prediction is not nearly wide enough for any true anticipation of a Messiah gaining universal sway by virtue of redeeming love. It is becoming more and more necessary to set aside those interpretations which identify the Saviour of the world with one who smites and breaks down and destroys, who wields a sceptre after the manner of Oriental despots."

The latter part of ver. 17 exhibits a remarkable similarity with Jeremiah's prophecy against Moab (Jer. 48 : 45), and indicates the custom of drawing on a common stock of phrases on the part of different prophets or writers. The term Sheth is probably not a proper name, but by the addition of one silent letter is taken by modern translators to mean noise, or tumult, as in R. V. The word is derived from the same verbal root as the term used by Jeremiah (loc. cit.), in the phrase translated tumultuous ones, or literally, sons of tumult. The word translated corners means two sides, or both sides, and as the Hebrew word is oftenest used of the sides of the head, it may perhaps best be translated temples. The same word is used in the singular in Jeremiah. Again, the obscure word translated destroy, by the substitution of an almost exactly similar letter easily confounded by a tran-scriber, is changed into the exact word used by Jeremiah in the passage cited and translated crown of the head. Making these changes in the translation, according to the suggestion of Dillmann, we find the parallelism with Jeremiah still more striking:

"And it hath smitten through both temples of Moab,
And the crown of the head of the sons of tumult."

In consonance with the phrase sons of tumult, or pride, as applied to Moab, is the repeated indication among the prophets that pride was a highly characteristic trait of that nation (see Isa. 16 : 6; 25 : 11; Jer. 48 : 29; Zeph. 2 : 8, 10).

20-25. These three brief prophecies are obscure, both on account of the lack of historical data and on account of the difficulties in the grammatical construction. Amalek is designated as among the first of the nations (ver. 20), probably in power and glory, as its king has already been referred to as a sort of symbol of royal greatness (see ver. 7). The Amalekites were a Bedouin tribe descended from Esau (Gen. 36 : 21), living in the desert south of Canaan, who early opposed Israel in their journey to the promised land (Exod. 17 : 8, seq.) and were therefore marked as at perpetual feud with Israel (ibid., 16). After their defeat by Saul (1 Sam. 15) and David (1 Sam. 27 : 8; 30 : 17), they declined more and more in importance until finally the remnant of them in Mount Seir were destroyed by the Simeonites at the time of Hezekiah (1 Chron. 4 : 42, 43). The prophecy regarding the Kenites is very obscure on account of the difficulty of translating the Hebrew connective particles used in it. It seems a more probable interpretation, however, to read that the Kenite, or more literally Kain, shall not be wasted (ver. 22) than to read as the translators have rendered in the Authorized and Revised versions. I venture

22 Nevertheless the Kenite shall be wasted, until Asshur shall carry thee away captive.

23 And he took up his parable, and said, Alas, who shall live when God doeth this!

24 And ships shall come from the coast of Chittim, and shall afflict Asshur, and shall afflict Eber, and he also shall perish for ever.

25 And Balaam rose up, and went and returned to his place: and Balak also went his way.

22 Nevertheless Kain shall be wasted, Until Asshur shall carry thee away captive.

23 And he took up his parable, and said,

Alas, who shall live when God doeth this?

24 But ships shall come from the coast of Kittim, And they shall afflict Asshur, and shall afflict Eber,

And he also shall come to destruction.

25 And Balaam rose up, and went and returned to his place: and Balak also went his way.

the following translation as the nearest representation of the Hebrew:

“Lasting be thine abode;

And fixed, thy nest on the rock;

For [God requite it] if Kain shall be for destruction,

Till what time Asshur shall carry thee away captive.”

The particle which I have translated if in the third line is often used in a sort of abbreviated form of oath as equivalent to a strong negative, as in Ps. 95:11: “Wherefore I swear in my wrath, if they shall enter into my rest.” I have chosen to insert an oath form in brackets in order to convey the feeling of a strong divine asseveration that their security should last until the final captivity of the land. This makes the prophecy regarding “the Kenites” a friendly one and a contrast, or rhetorical offset, to the one on Amalek. “The Kenites” were a tribe of Midianitish origin (10:29) who were related to Moses by marriage (Judg. 1:16) and who, in return for their assistance in the wilderness, were offered a share in Israel’s blessings (10:32). They seem always to have remained friendly neighbors to Israel, living a sort of isolated or close-nested life which never fully coalesced with that of Israel (Judg. 1:16; 1 Sam. 15:6). As for the prophecy that Asshur shall carry thee away captive (ver. 22), this may refer to the northern branch of the tribe which settled near Kedesh of Naphtali (Judg. 4:11) and was possibly involved in the early captivity of the northern kingdom under Tiglath-Pileser (2 Kings 15:29); but it is more probable that the captivity apprehended was the general captivity of Israel and Judah which, as it was begun by Assyria, would present itself prophetically as an Assyrian captivity, even though it reached its final accomplishment under the Babylonians. Balaam’s last meshal, or parable (ver. 23, 24), can hardly, with our present knowledge, be interpreted in closer detail than as expressing the apprehension that, after all, the powers that should finally prove superior to the formidable Eastern nations were those that would come in ships from the side of Kittim; i. e., from Cyprus-way—meaning the European powers in general. Asshur and Eber are the names of two prominent descendants of Shem (Gen. 10:22, 24), the latter being the one who gave their distinctive name to the Hebrews. “Eber” is here used probably not of the descendants of Abraham, nor of the western Shemites as distinguished from the eastern Shemites, but rather of the nations beyond the Euphrates in general, except the Assyrians, which latter are comprised under the term “Asshur.” Perhaps Alexander’s conquest of Persia, which is called Assyria in Ezra 6:22, may be taken as a fulfilment of this prophecy (see 1 Macc. 1:1). The prophecy ends, not with the cheering prospect of an everlasting kingdom established, but with the going out of the vista in successive change and ruin: He also—i. e., perhaps the power from beyond Cyprus—shall come to destruction.

Finally it is related that Balaam arose and returned to his place (ver. 25), but it has been noted, with some subtilty, that the form of expression is not that used of a person actually arriving at his place, but rather of one setting out on his way thither, thus making reconciliation with chap. 31:8; Josh. 13:22 not altogether impossible.

Chap. 25. IDOLATRY AND IMMORALITY AT SHITTIM. JEHOVAH’S PROMISE TO PHINEHAS. The principal part of this chapter, the portion from ver. 6 to the end, appears to belong to the narrative of P, and relates the events which were the motive for the war against the Midianites, of which we have an account in chap. 31. According to this narrative it was the Midianites who seduced the children of Israel into immorality, the most notable offender being the daughter of one of their chiefs. The crime of the Israelitish prince, who was caught in the act of adultery with her, was avenged by Phinehas, who slew both of the offenders and thus stayed the ravages of a plague not previously mentioned, but which had already brought the congregation to the tent of meeting in penitence. It is thought by critics that the beginning of this priestly narrative, which may have included some account of the treacherous

1 AND Israel abode in Shittim, and the people began to commit whoredom with the daughters of Moab.

2 And they called the people unto the sacrifices of their gods: and the people did eat, and bowed down to their gods.

3 And Israel joined himself unto Baal-peor: and the anger of the Lord was kindled against Israel.

4 And the Lord said unto Moses, Take all the heads of the people, and hang them up before the Lord against the sun, that the fierce anger of the Lord may be turned away from Israel.

5 And Moses said unto the judges of Israel, Slay ye every one his men that were joined unto Baal-peor.

6 And, behold, one of the children of Israel came and brought unto his brethren a Midianitish woman in the sight of Moses, and in the sight of all the congregation of the children of Israel, who were weeping before the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

counsel of Balaam, referred to in 31 : 16, has been omitted in favor of JE's account which comprises ver. 1-5. According to this latter account the temptation of the children of Israel to immorality came through the daughters of Moab, and the impurity was connected with idolatrous worship. The being "yoked" to the service of a false god, which appears to have been the form of sin most thought of in this account, was to be avenged by summary and wholesale slaughter for which the chiefs were called on to volunteer as executioners.

1-5. Israel abode in Shittim. This was the northern limit of the Israelitish camp, the name being an abbreviation for Abel-shittim, "Acacia-meadow" (see 33 : 49). It was in the plains of Moab along the banks of the Jordan nearly opposite Jericho (see 22 : 1). The people were invited by the women to the sacrificial feasts of the local gods, especially the Baal or "lord" of Peor (ver. 3). His worship appears to have been of a licentious character; and the localizing of his cult in this place accords with the history of the neighboring cities of the Plain (Gen. 19 : 4-11) and with the origin of Moab (ibid., 30-38). Some of the ancient gods represented the reproductive powers of nature, and their ritual embodied a sort of licensed prostitution. This Baal of Peor may have been that sort of deity. Israel could hardly participate in the people's feasts without bowing down to their gods and thus becoming identified or joined with them. This appears to have been regarded as the real center of their guilt and the occasion of the pestilence which was found raging among them (ver. 3, 5; Ps. 106 : 28; Hosea 9 : 10; Rev. 2 : 14). It is a principle of religious thought that those who eat of the sacrifices have communion with the altar (1 Cor. 10 : 18). Balaam's advice which, according to P's account, was the suggestion resulting in this heathenish enticement (31 : 16), was no doubt intended to commit the Israelites to a communion with idolatrous practices, and thus alienate the divine favor and protection by awakening the jealous anger of Jehovah. The command in ver. 4 is very misleading in the Authorized version, and indeed in any literal rendering, on account of the obscurity of the pronoun them which appears without antecedent. The meaning is: "Take unto thee all the chiefs of the people and hang up the offenders unto Jehovah before the sun," i. e., publicly (cf. 2 Sam. 12 : 12). These chiefs of the people, who are called judges in ver. 5, were to act as executioners, each one slaying "his men," i. e., those who belonged to his tribe or division of the congregation. After they were slain the bodies would be publicly exposed by impaling or fastening to a cross (cf. Deut. 21 : 23; 2 Sam. 21 : 6, 8-10).

6-9. This paragraph and the rest of the chapter seems to contain a slightly variant account which in some former setting had a different or more circumstantial introduction than ver. 1-5. The children of Israel are represented as weeping at the door of the tent of meeting (ver. 6), though it is not specified why they were thus assembled. We may assume that it was in penitence on account of the anger of Jehovah (see ver. 3). While the people were thus engaged a prominent man of the children of Israel brought near to his brethren the Midianitish woman—perhaps the one mentioned in some former introduction—with the utmost impudence and publicity, and proceeded to take her to the קִבְּוּ, qubbah, or women's apartment of his tent. This act hardly looks like the shameless indecency of idolatrous or religious sex-worship, but more like a high-handed act of adultery or of alien marriage. Whatever the nature of the act, it was at least a crime which aroused the burning indignation of Phinehas, the high priest's son, and made him jealous with Jehovah's jealousy (see ver. 11). Arming himself with a spear, he followed the guilty couple into the alcove or arched private apartment of the tent (ver. 8) and killed them both in the adulterous act. As a result of this vindication of Jehovah's honor it is said that "the plague," which has not before been mentioned, "was stayed." Perhaps the expression the anger of Jehovah was kindled against Israel (ver. 3) may be taken as a way of saying that the plague had broken out. Certainly some manifestation of Jehovah's displeasure had called out measures for averting it (ver. 4), and a penitential gathering at the tent of meeting (ver. 6). The number stated to have died by the plague was twenty-four thousand (ver. 9). This is one thousand more than Paul gives in his reference to this event (1 Cor. 10 : 8). It is thought that the apostle followed the Jewish tradition according to which one thousand of the twenty-four thousand were slain by their brethren according to the orders of Moses in ver. 5.

12 Wherefore say, Behold, I give unto him my

13 covenant of peace : and it shall be unto him, and to his seed after him, the covenant of an everlasting priesthood ; because he was jealous

10-15. Along with the gratifying signs that the plague was checked, there came to Moses a conviction which amounted to the "word of Jehovah" that the act of Phinehas was the occasion of the respite. It is his disposition rather than his act which is emphasized. He turned away Jehovah's wrath from the children of Israel because he was jealous with my jealousy (ver. 11). This does not mean simply jealous for Jehovah, but having Jehovah's actual feeling and exercising it on the offenders. The wrath of Jehovah is thought of as diffused, as it were, and making the whole climate or atmosphere pestilential, until Phinehas concentrated and embodied it in his own person and discharged it like an electric bolt on a selected object. In ver. 13 this act is called making atonement for the children of Israel ; and it is worth while to notice what idea underlies the conception of atonement in this place. Atonement here seems to be an act of divine judgment launched upon especially conspicuous offenders in such a way as to make it exemplary and so salutary to the great bulk of the people. The ones who suffer are the sinners who, by their very conspicuousness, become types ; and the one who makes atonement is the person who embodies Jehovah's disposition ; and the atonement for the people consists in so disclosing the ethical aspect of the divine visitation as to discharge its intended function at once and relieve the multitude. It is the true act of a priest, very seldom perfectly performed by a human being, so to embody the divine feeling in an act of retribution or absolution as to be an agent for God. This is the act which is contemplated by our Lord when he says : "What things soever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven ; and what things soever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven" (Matt. 18 : 18 ; cf. 16 : 19 ; John 20 : 23). In Ps. 106 : 30 Phinehas' act of atonement is called "executing judgment." The late Rev. F. W. Robertson relates how on one occasion in his own experience he found his whole being going out against a peculiarly dastardly miscreant in such a pure and unselfish current of indignation that he seemed to be borne along supernaturally, and felt solemnly sure that he was pronouncing the divine sentence against the sinner.

Having thus proven himself morally endowed for a righteous priesthood, Phinehas was assured of Jehovah's covenant of peace (ver. 12). His outburst of divine indignation was really an act of peace-making which at least showed that he himself was at peace, or at one, with the mind of God. This should be, moreover, to him and to his posterity, the covenant of an everlasting priesthood, because he was zealous for his God, and made an atonement for the children of Israel.

14 Now the name of the Israelite that was slain, even that was slain with the Midianitish woman, was Zimri, the son of Salu, a prince of a chief house among the Simeonites.

15 And the name of the Midianitish woman that was slain was Cozbi, the daughter of Zur; he was head over a people, and of a chief house in Midian.

CHAPTER XXVI.

1 AND it came to pass after the plague, that the Lord spake unto Moses and unto Eleazar the son of Aaron the priest, saying,

1 AND it came to pass after the plague, that the Lord spake unto Moses and unto Eleazar the son priesthood of eternity (ver. 13). It appears from the history that the high-priesthood was perpetuated in the line of Phinehas, with a brief exception in the time immediately succeeding Eli, during the whole Jewish monarchy, and until the Jewish State was gradually dissolved through the tyranny of Herod and his successors (see Judg. 20 : 28 ; 1 Sam. 14 : 3 ; 22 : 9, 20 ; 2 Sam. 8 : 17 ; 1 Kings 2 : 27, 35). The word eternity here, if the promise is to be held as being fulfilled, must mean simply lasting as long as the priesthood is perpetuated in the family of Aaron; but there is a sense in which Phinehas may be said by his embodying Jehovah's disposition to have realized what priesthood means in its eternal or elemental signification.

This emphatic divine approval of a private person's zeal and promptness in taking the law into his own hands seems to be an authorization, in exceptional circumstances, of mob or lynch law. Indeed, "upon this act of Phinehas, and the similar examples of Samuel (1 Sam. 15 : 33) and Mattathias (1 Macc. 2 : 24) the later Jews erected the so-called 'zealot right,' jus zealot-arum, according to which any one, even though not qualified by his official position, possessed the right, in cases of any daring contempt of the theocratic institutions, or any daring violation of the honor of God, to proceed with vengeance against the criminals" (KEIL). We may say, however, that such exceptional upsurgings of elemental divine wrath are not occurrences which can be legitimized by any verbal formulation of law or citation of cases. Mob law, which is essentially anarchy, is so contradictory to the very nature of society that it cannot safely be recognized in any civilized State. The awful fact remains, nevertheless, that where the organized forces of law and order are weak or corrupt, or the means for a sufficiently swift legitimate vengeance are not obtainable, an exceptionally atrocious crime will now and then call forth a demand and impulse for vengeance which is like an irresistible divine rage surging up from the very depths of human nature.

The persons who fell under the stroke of the zealous Phinehas were of prominence and influence. It was unmistakably a crime in high life. The father of the Midianitish princess was not only a head of the people of a fathers' house (ver. 15, R. V.), but he is mentioned in 31 : 8 as one of the five kings of Midian slain in the battle which this incident provoked.

16-18. The directions given in this section are carried out in chap. 31. Just as the Amalekites, the first warlike opposers of Israel in his strike for a better life, were to be held as perpetual enemies (Exod. 17 : 16), so the Midianites, Israel's insidious tempters, despite their friendly exterior, were to be fought against, and so distinctly pointed out to the people as foes. There is no attempt to oppose guile with guile. It is no case where guile has any leverage or resisting power. There are some temptations which cannot be outwitted; they must be hated and risen above. The first requisite, therefore, in rendering the seductive Midianites innocuous to the nation was to bring them out into the open and exhibit them as deadly enemies. The latter part of ver. 18 appears to be a rather awkward addition "intended to make room for chap. 31. The redactional character of the addition appears plainly in the attempt to connect 'the matter of Peor, and the matter of Cozbi,' which really have no connection" (BACON).

Chap. 26. THE SECOND CENSUS OF ISRAEL. This and the following chapters, to and including chap. 31, are all of a statistical and legislative character, and belong to P. 1-4. It came to pass after the plague (ver. 1). This phrase in the Hebrew Bibles is appended to the last chapter, but it evidently belongs here. It gives the approximate time of the numbering and, by mentioning the plague, intimates the principal cause for the marked decrease in numbers found in some of the tribes. As in the census at Sinai (chap. 1), the numbering is of those above twenty years of age (ver. 2), and is intended to determine the military strength of the nation. This chapter also adds the list of names of the heads of families in the tribes as a basis for the division of the land which they are soon to occupy (ver. 53, 54). The numbers may be compared with those in chap. 1, the names with those in the list of grandchildren and great-grandchildren of Jacob in Gen. 46, with which they very nearly correspond. A table of the descendants of Israel through the tribes of Reuben, Simeon, and Levi is also found in Exod. 6: 14-25; and in 1 Chron. 2 to 8 more extended lists of all the tribes brought down to a late date are inserted. Ver. 3 and 4 are somewhat obscure in their grammatical features, indicating some corruption in the text. A whole clause has to be inserted by the translators at the beginning of ver. 4 to complete the sense, as is indicated by the italics. Perhaps the last phrase of ver. 4, and the children of Israel which went forth out of the land of Egypt, is to be taken as the title of what follows, as in the Septuagint, instead of the object of the verb commanded, which latter construction has not the mark of the objective case to justify it in the Hebrew.

5-51. These footings represent the number of the new generation who survive to take the place of those who were sentenced to die in the wilderness. The time-division which, according to the Deuteronomist, marks the passing away of the old generation and the exclusive dominance of the new is the period of the crossing of the brook Zered (Deut. 2: 13-15; cf. Numb. 21: 12). With the exception of the plague (25: 9) all the mishaps which had their effect in diminishing the number of the people, such as the destroying of the company of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram (16: 32, 35), and the wasting of the multitude through the bites of the serpents (21: 6), occurred before this time. Of course, some of the victims of these visitations were undoubtedly of the old generation and some of the new; but all these causes of diminution were insignificant compared with the plague which took off twenty-four thousand at a stroke. The numbers of those enumerated at Sinai (chap. 1) and those counted up in the plains of Moab may best be compared in a tabular summary:

	In
	At Sinai	Arboth-Moab
Reuben,	46,500	43,730
Simeon,	59,300	22,200
Gad,	45,650	40,500
Judah,	74,600	76,500
Issachar,	54,400	64,300
Zebulun,	57,400	60,500
Ephraim,	40,500	32,500
Manasseh,	32,200	52,700
Benjamin,	35,400	45,600
Dan,	62,700	64,400
Asher,	41,500	53,400
Naphtali,	53,400	45,400

The tribes are placed in the same order in this chapter as in chap. 1, excepting that here Manasseh, which has outstripped Ephraim in point of numbers, is placed before that tribe. The first three tribes, belonging to the camp of Reuben, have all suffered diminution. A sort of general sullenness, reflected in the sentiments of Dathan and Abiram (16: 12-15), seems to have pervaded the tribe of the firstborn, and this may have spread more or less to the whole camp of which Reuben was the head, and so contributed to bring on these people their full share of the judgment of the plague. Besides, the tribe of Simeon, whose diminution is most extraordinary, contained as one of its chiefs that very Zimri who was slain by Phinehas at the time of the plague (25 : 14), and his bold transgression may have been one of the accompaniments of a wide-spread and insolent defection in his tribe. The numbering seems to have been conducted according to some such system of round numbers as was followed in chap. 1, as the footings of all the tribes show even hundreds except that of Reuben which strangely comes out with an odd thirty, as Gad in the first numbering presented an odd fifty. If the plague had not occurred to diminish the number by twenty-four thousand there would have appeared an increase over the former generation of twenty-two thousand and one hundred and eighty.

The line of Dathan and Abiram (ver. 9, 10) evidently came to an end at the time of Korah's rebellion, as their families were involved in their destruction (16 : 32, 33), thus leaving Eliab, and his father Pallu indeed, with only Nemuel to perpetuate their stock (ver. 8, 9). It is expressly mentioned, however, that the sons of Korah the Levite died not (ver. 11). In fact these descendants of that influential rebel became the progenitors of some of the illustrious men of Israel, distinguished especially in connection with public worship. According to 1 Chron. 6 : 22-28, 33-38, Samuel the prophet whose father, however, is called an Ephraimite in 1 Sam. 1 : 1, is made out to be a descendant of Korah ; and his grandson Heman the singer (1 Chron. 6 : 33), called also "the king's seer" (1 Chron. 25 : 5), adds luster to the family name. Several of the Psalms, according to their titles, were composed for the sons of Korah (see Ps. 42, 44-49), the indication being that a family or guild of Levitical singers were so predominantly of Korahite descent as to call themselves by his name,

Several of the names, owing no doubt to errors of transcription, differ slightly from the corresponding names found in other lists. For instance, Nemuel (ver. 12) is in Gen. 46 : 10 ; Exod. 6 : 15 Jemuel ; and Zerah (ver. 13) is in Genesis Zohar. One more name, Ohad, appears in Genesis as a descendant of Simeon, than here. Jachin in ver. 12 is represented in 1 Chron. 4 : 24 by Jarib. In the tribe of Gad (ver. 15) Zephon appears at Gen. 46 : 16 as Ziphion, Ozni as Ezbon, and Arod as Arodi. In the tribe of Issachar (ver. 24) Jashub is represented in Gen. 46 : 13 by Job. The tribe of Manasseh seems to have only one name, Machir, of the first generation (ver. 29), but this man is called in Josh. 17 : 1 the firstborn of Manasseh, and is assigned Gilead and Bashan, while the "rest of the children of Manasseh" (ibid. 2) are given a portion on the west of the Jordan (ibid., 7-11). Jeezer or Jezer of the family of Gilead (ver. 30) is called in Josh. 17 : 2 Abiezer and appears from Judg. 6 : 11, 24, 34 to have become the founder of a large clan to which the illustrious Gideon belonged, and which was of numbers sufficient to form a considerable military force. The names of the Benjamites are fewer than in Genesis and present considerable variations, not only in the forms of the names, but in the confounding of different generations. Thus two sons of Bela, Naaman and Ard (ver. 40), are in Gen. 46 : 21 given as sons of Benjamin co-ordinate with the first generation. Ahiram (ver. 38) appears in Genesis as Ehi, and 1 Chron. 8 : 1 as Aharah; Shupham or Shephupham and Hupham (ver. 39) as Muppim and Huppim; and in 1 Chron. 8 : 3 Ard is varied to Addar. In the tribe of Dan Shuham (ver. 42) appears in Gen. 46 : 23 as

52-56. To these officially established family groups the land of Canaan was to be assigned. A double principle of division which at first seems perplexing and almost inconsistent was to be adopted. The size of the inheritance was to be regulated according to the number of names (ver. 53), a larger portion being given to a larger group and a smaller to a smaller group (ver. 54). Then superimposed on this scheme is an entirely distinct principle of division, namely, that the land was to be divided by lot (ver. 55, 56). It is evident that the only thing which could be subjected to the chances of the lot was the location and desirability of the various portions, as the size must be regulated by the populousness of the tribe. It is also evident that the lot was the simplest method of deciding choice of location, and perhaps the only way to avoid contentions. With a free hand, the strong and populous tribes would have monopolized by sheer strength all the most desirable territory of Canaan. On the other hand, it is not unworthy of note that on the actual occupation of the land the largest and most influential tribe, that of Judah, received the greatest single section of the mountainous and barren territory of Palestine. The land was no doubt made up into the required number of indefinitely bounded portions, distinguished according to location and kind of territory, and then after the drawing an adjustment of boundary and extent was made according to the populousness of the tribe to which the portion fell. Perhaps this scheme of adjustment is indicated in ver. 54, which is literally translated: To the great thou shalt extend his inheritance and to the little thou shalt diminish his inheritance.

57-62. The families given under the head of the tribe of Levi do not comprise all the families that are named in chap. 3, perhaps because some of them became extinct or were incorporated with other families of the tribe. Of the families named, the Libnites (ver. 58) belonged to Gershon, the Hebronites and the Korathites to Kohath, and the Mahlites and the Mushites to Merari. The Shimeites (3: 21) were perhaps extinct or incorporated with the Libnites, and the Uzzielites (3: 27) may in like manner have become incorporated with some other family of Kohath. Very likely the Izharites (ibid.) were now all known as Korathites, as Korah was the prominent son of Izhar. As for the Amramites, these are accounted for in ver. 59-61. The text in ver. 59 is perhaps defective, but the passive was born, as in R. V., gives the right sense. Jochebed was a daughter of Levi only in the sense of being a descendant, as three centuries intervened between Levi and Amram. In Exod. 6:20 she is called her husband's father's sister. The Levites were numbered from a month old and upward, as the military age had no significance in their case. They bear a very small proportion to the other tribes in numbers, both here and in chap. 3 (see com. on 3:21-39); and they have made an increase since the numbering in Sinai of one thousand, or perhaps more correctly, seven hundred (ver. 62; cf. 3:39 and note).

63-65. On the statement that Caleb and Joshua were the only survivors, at the second numbering, of the generation that came out of Egypt (ver. 65), see com. on 14:26-38.

Chap. 27. THE DAUGHTERS OF ZELOPHEHAD. MOSES WARNED OF HIS DEATH. JOSHUA HIS SUCCESSOR. 1-5. These daughters of Zelophehad, whose names are given in full no less than three times in this book (cf. 26:33; 36:11), are the occasion of peculiar questions, not only with reference to their inheritance, as here, but a little later with reference to their marriage, as in chap. 36. Their father was dead; and yet the inheritance, which if it were an actual reality would naturally be in their possession, consisted only in a possible right to a share in a future domain. What they were petitioning for was a status and recognition in the coming allotment. The estate would carry with it the right to marry a husband into their family and so preserve the name (cf. ver. 4), instead of having to marry into another family and assume the name of the one who brought the estate. It was probably through being made an heiress by her father's act that the daughter of Machir the father of Gilead, though married into the tribe of Judah, had descendants who were nevertheless reckoned as Manassites (see 1 Chron. 2:21, seq.; Num. 32:41). Sheshan also, who had no son, married his Egyptian servant Jarha into his family and reckoned the posterity as of his own tribe (1 Chron. 2:34, seq.). But in the case of these daughters of Zelophehad the father was not living to make such arrangements, or even to come into possession of the land which by descending to them might give them a legal status.

These women stood before Moses, and before Eleazar the priest, and before the princes and all the congregation, by the door of the tabernacle (ver. 2), not, perhaps, because all these had been

3 Our father died in the wilderness, and he was not in the company of them that gathered themselves together against the Lord in the company of Korah; but died in his own sin, and had no sons.

4 Why should the name of our father be done away from among his family, because he hath no son? Give unto us therefore a possession among the brethren of our father.

5 And Moses brought their cause before the Lord.

6 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

7 The daughters of Zelophehad speak right: thou shalt surely give them a possession of an inheritance among their father's brethren; and thou shalt cause the inheritance of their father to pass unto them.

8 And thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel, saying, If a man die, and have no son, then ye shall cause his inheritance to pass unto his daughter.

9 And if he have no daughter, then ye shall give his inheritance unto his brethren.

10 And if he have no brethren, then ye shall give his inheritance unto his father's brethren.

11 And if his father have no brethren, then ye shall give his inheritance unto his kinsman that is next to him of his family, and he shall possess it: and it shall be unto the children of Israel a statute of judgment, as the Lord commanded Moses.

12 And the Lord said unto Moses, Get thee up into this mountain of Abarim, and behold the land which I have given unto the children of Israel.

assembled in order to hear their plea, but rather because the enumeration was in progress at the nation's headquarters. In connection with the census there was no doubt a sort of court holding its sittings in order to inquire into and decide cases of dispute or uncertainty arising throughout the tribes. The daughters of Zelophehad made the plea that there was no reason why any punishment or deprivation of privilege should descend to them, as their father was not one of the company of Korah (ver. 3; cf. 16 : 2, 35). It has already been pointed out (see on 16 : 1-3) that we have here an indication that Korah's company was not solely Levitical, but was recruited from the various tribes. The noticeable expression is used, but died in his own sin, as if the sin into which a person or company was led through the overpowering influence of a leader became to some degree that leader's sin; while by "his own sin," for which his death was the penalty, was doubtless meant his share in the sin of the whole nation at Kadesh, in consequence of which all that generation was sentenced to die in the wilderness (14 : 28-35; 26 : 64, 65). The request of the women was that in the allotment of Canaan they might represent their father as co-ordinate with his brothers (ver. 4). As in other instances of enactments arising out of specific cases (cf. Lev. 24 : 12; Num. 15 : 34), Moses deferred the decision until he could bring the case before Jehovah (ver. 5).

6-11. In this section ver. 6, 7 give the answer applying to the specific case of the daughters of Zelophehad, while the rest of the paragraph, starting with a new introduction (ver. 8), gives the permanent law regulating the descent of property in case there are no sons or direct heirs. The decision regarding the petitioners was that their proposal was reasonable, and that they should have a possession among their father's brethren which should come to them as an inheritance from their father (ver. 7). As for the rule of inheritance in general, the order of descent should be: (1) son, (2) daughter, (3) brothers, (4) father's brothers, (5) nearest kin. This was to be unto the children of Israel a statute of judgment (ver. 11), i. e., a statute determining natural right in distinction from the will of the testator which is assumed to be not on record.

12-14. Moses is now directed to ascend the mountain of Abarim for a final view of the Promised Land; but the actual obeying of the command and the death of the lawgiver are not narrated until Deut. 34. This same command is repeated in Deut. 32 : 48-52, and the day on which it was uttered is specified as the selfsame day on which Moses made an end of speaking to the people the words of his farewell song. It seems to be introduced out of its connection here in Numbers. The mountain of Abarim (ver. 12), of which Nebo, or the "head of Pisgah" (23 : 14; Deut. 34 : 1), was but a particular headland, was the whole range of bluffs or promontories along the further side (Abarim, "Further Regions") of Jordan from western Palestine. Although very steep and abrupt on the side next to the Jordan Valley, this Abarim range was more of a 13 And when thou hast seen it, thou also shalt be gathered unto thy people, as Aaron thy brother was gathered.

14 For ye rebelled against my commandment in the desert of Zin, in the strife of the congregation, to sanctify me at the water before their eyes: that is the water of Meribah in Kadesh in the wilderness of Zin.

15 And Moses spake unto the Lord, saying,

16 Let the Lord, the God of the spirits of all flesh, set a man over the congregation, 17 Which may go out before them, and which may go in before them, and which may lead them out, and which may bring them in; that the congregation of the Lord be not as sheep which have no shepherd.

18 And the Lord said unto Moses, Take thee Joshua the son of Nun, a man in whom is the spirit, and lay thine hand upon him;

19 And set him before Eleazar the priest, and before all the congregation; and give him a charge in their sight.

20 And thou shalt put some of thine honour upon him, that all the congregation of the children of Israel may be obedient.

21 And he shall stand before Eleazar the priest, who shall ask counsel for him after the judgment of Urim before the Lord: at his word shall they go out, and at his word they shall come in, both he, and all the children of Israel with him, even all the congregation.

13 And when thou hast seen it, thou also shalt be gathered unto thy people, as Aaron thy brother

14 was gathered: because ye rebelled against my word in the wilderness of Zin, in the strife of the congregation, to sanctify me at the waters before their eyes. (These are the waters of Meribah of 15 Kadesh in the wilderness of Zin.) And Moses

16 spake unto the Lord, saying, Let the Lord, the God of the spirits of all flesh, appoint a man

17 over the congregation, which may go out before them, and which may come in before them, and

18 not as sheep which have no shepherd. And the Lord said unto Moses, Take thee Joshua the son

19 of Nun, a man in whom is the spirit, and lay thine hand upon him; and set him before Eleazar

20 the priest, and before all the congregation; and give him a charge in their sight. And thou

21 shalt put of thine honour upon him, that all the congregation of the children of Israel may obey.

22 And he shall stand before Eleazar the priest, who shall inquire for him by the judgment of the Urim before the Lord: at his word shall they go out, and at his word they shall come in, both he, and all the children of Israel with him, even platform than a series of peaks, forming the steep western edge of the table-land of Moab, and looking down on Jeshimon or the wilderness of Judah. It was on this same headland of Pisgah that Balaam delivered his second discourse (23: 14). Moses is warned that, after being granted that grateful bird's-eye view, he shall be gathered to his people, as Aaron his brother was gathered (ver. 13; cf. 20: 23-29). He is reminded of the reason why he is excluded from entrance on the promised possession (ver. 14): he rebelled against Jehovah's word, or mouth, which was that he should sanctify Jehovah before the people. On the sin of Moses at that time, see comment on 20: 2-13. The last sentence of ver. 14, rightly put in parenthesis in the R. V., was probably inserted by the writer or some later redactor as an explanatory gloss.

15-23. It was natural that the great man on whom the whole burden of the nation had rested all his life, and who had sometimes felt that the care of the congregation was like that of a crowd of infants (cf. 11: 11, 12, and note), should be anxious regarding the future of that helpless flock. In the imagery of his old shepherd days he prays that they may not be left like wandering sheep, but may have one to lead them out and bring them in (ver. 17). It is to Jehovah as the God of the spirits of all flesh—a name by which he has designated him on a former occasion (16: 22)—that he looks for the supplying of this great need, for it is the true spirit for a leader of the people which must be provided; and Moses perhaps has failed to recognize just such a spirit as his zeal would entrust the people to, even in Joshua. Joshua was a very different man from Moses, and he was to have a very different work to accomplish with the people. It would be strange if Moses at his advanced age should fully enter into the new order of things. But Jehovah assures him that Joshua is a man in whom is the spirit (ver. 18). He is to take him and by a formal and public investiture transfer to him his authority and something of his honour (ver. 20)—so far as this inheres in his position as distinguished from his private character—so that through the prestige of his indorsement Joshua may command the people's obedience. In Deut. 34: 9 it is said that Joshua was full of the spirit of wisdom, "for Moses had laid his hands upon him"—the investiture and its consequent sense of responsibility no doubt bringing out that great general's latent qualities as a leader. The successor of Moses, however, did not take over all the endowments and functions of his great predecessor. It was the unique power and privilege of Moses to be at once commander and prophet "whom Jehovah knew face to face" (Deut. 34: 10). Henceforth, for the present at least, the secular commander is to seek divine guidance at the hands of the priest. He shall stand before Eleazar the priest (ver. 21), and in all matters of supernatural guidance shall be dependent on the judgment of Urim (cf. Exod. 28: 30), that form of sacred divination or lot, no longer understood, which was in use at least down to the time of David (see 1 Sam. 22: 13, 15; 23: 2, 4, 9-12).

22 And Moses did as the Lord commanded him : and he took Joshua, and set him before Eleazar the priest, and before all the congregation :

23 And he laid his hands upon him, and gave him a charge, as the Lord commanded by the hand of Moses.

22 all the congregation. And Moses did as the Lord commanded him : and he took Joshua, and set him before Eleazar the priest, and before all the congregation : and he laid his hands upon him, and gave him a charge, as the Lord spake by the hand of Moses.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 2 Command the children of Israel, and say unto them, My offering, and my bread for my sacrifices made by fire, for a sweet savour unto me, shall ye observe to offer unto me in their due season.

3 And thou shalt say unto them, This is the offering made by fire which ye shall offer unto the Lord ; two lambs of the first year without spot day by day, for a continual burnt offering.

4 The one lamb shalt thou offer in the morning, and the other lamb shalt thou offer at even ;

5 And a tenth part of an ephah of flour for a meat offering, mingled with the fourth part of an hin of beaten oil.

6 It is a continual burnt offering, which was ordained in mount Sinai for a sweet savour, a sacrifice made by fire unto the Lord.

7 And the drink offering thereof shall be the fourth part of an hin for the one lamb : in the holy place shalt thou cause the strong wine to be poured unto the Lord for a drink offering.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Command the children of Israel, and say unto them, My oblation, my food for my offerings made by fire, of a sweet savour unto me, shall ye observe to offer unto me in their due season.

3 And thou shalt say unto them, This is the offering made by fire which ye shall offer unto the Lord ; he-lambs of the first year without blemish, two day by day, for a continual burnt offering.

4 The one lamb shalt thou offer in the morning, and the other lamb shalt thou offer at even ;

5 and the tenth part of an ephah of fine flour for a meal offering, mingled with the fourth part of

6 an hin of beaten oil. It is a continual burnt offering, which was ordained in mount Sinai for a sweet savour, an offering made by fire unto

7 the Lord. And the drink offering thereof shall be the fourth part of an hin for the one lamb :

in the holy place shalt thou pour out a drink

Joshua had little of the prophet in him, and indeed was not of a temperament to understand the prophetic genius (see on 11 : 23-35) ; and perhaps even in seeking priestly divine counsel he became somewhat neglectful of his guides, at least in his treaty with the Gibeonites (see Josh. 9 : 3, seq.). Moses carried out the instructions of Jehovah and gave Joshua a public charge before Eleazar and all the people (ver. 22, 23).

Chap. 28, 29. THE PUBLIC SACRIFICES FOR THE SACRED YEAR. 28 : 1-8.

1. The continual burnt offering. The first and second verses are a sort of title or general commandment covering all the specific arrangements which are given in detail in what follows. The terms are a sort of generic description of the offering from the standpoint of the Divine acceptance, and thus used they express the popular theory of sacrifice in general, which is that of ministering to Jehovah's pleasure, as one ministers to the sensual enjoyment of a superior. Literally, the expression of the divine aspect of sacrifice is as follows (ver. 2) : " My offering, my food for my fire offering, my pleasurable smell, ye shall observe to bring to me in its season." This continual burnt offering, as is indicated in ver. 6, was ordained in mount Sinai, and we have the command recorded in Exod. 29 : 38, seq. It constitutes the daily service maintained at the public expense for the benefit of all the people. The details given here are precisely the same as in Exodus, with the noteworthy addition in ver. 7, appended as an emphatic summary : In the holy place shalt thou pour out a drink offering of strong drink unto Jehovah. The drink offering is never very distinctly described in the Pentateuch and seems to be assumed as well known rather than specifically defined. The direction here that it is to be poured out in the holy place is somewhat puzzling, especially in view of the fact that it was not allowed upon the altar of incense (Exod. 30 : 9). From this special prohibition some have inferred by antithesis that it was poured upon the sacrifice on the altar of burnt offering, but this was not strictly " in the holy place " but in the court. Others infer from Ecclus. 50 : 15 that it was poured around the foot of the altar. It is to be noted that the vessels for pouring the libation were a part of the furniture of the table of shewbread " in the holy place " (see Exod. 25 : 29). The word translated strong wine in A. V., but more correctly strong drink in R. V., is always used distinctively of other strong liquors than wine, though there is never elsewhere any hint of the use of strong drink in the sacrifices. The term is perhaps used here generically, in accordance with the apparent characteristic of this paragraph (cf. ver. 2), of all strong drink, including wine, as distinguished from water, thus characterizing the drink offering, from the theoretical standpoint of the Divine pleasure, as " Jehovah's strong drink." The two lambs, with their accompanying meal and drink offerings, were to be offered, the one in the morning and the other " between the two evenings " (ver. 4), i. e., between the beginning of twilight and dark, as Jehovah's odor of pleasantness.

26 Also in the day of the firstfruits, when ye bring a new meal offering unto the Lord, after your weeks be out, ye shall have an holy convocation; ye shall do no servile work:

27 But ye shall offer the burnt offering for a sweet savour unto the Lord; two young bullocks, one ram, seven lambs of the first year;

28 And their meat offering of flour mingled with oil, three tenth deals unto one bullock, two tenth deals unto one ram,

29 A several tenth deal unto one lamb, throughout the seven lambs;

30 And one kid of the goats, to make an atonement for you.

31 Ye shall offer them beside the continual burnt offering, and his meat offering, (they shall be unto you without blemish) and their drink offerings.

26 Also in the day of the firstfruits, when ye offer a new meal offering unto the Lord in your feast of weeks, ye shall have an holy convocation; ye shall do no servile work: but ye shall offer a burnt offering for a sweet savour unto the Lord:

27 two young bullocks, one ram, seven he-lambs of the first year; and their meal offering, fine flour mingled with oil, three tenth parts for each bullock, two tenth parts for the one ram, a several tenth part for every lamb of the seven lambs;

28 one he-goat, to make atonement for you.

29 Beside the continual burnt offering, and the meal offering thereof, ye shall offer them (they shall be unto you without blemish), and their drink offerings.

30 one he-goat, to make atonement for you.

31 Beside the continual burnt offering, and the meal offering thereof, ye shall offer them (they shall be unto you without blemish), and their drink offerings.

CHAPTER XXIX.

1 AND in the seventh month, on the first day of the month, ye shall have an holy convocation; ye shall do no servile work: it is a day of blowing the trumpets unto you.

2 And ye shall offer a burnt offering for a sweet savour unto the Lord; one young bullock, one ram, and seven lambs of the first year without blemish:

3 And their meat offering shall be of flour mingled with oil, three tenth deals for a bullock, and two tenth deals for a ram,

4 And one tenth deal for one lamb, throughout the seven lambs:

5 And one kid of the goats for a sin offering, to make an atonement for you:

6 Beside the burnt offering of the month, and his meat offering, and the daily burnt offering, and his meat offering, and their drink offerings, according unto their manner, for a sweet savour, a sacrifice made by fire unto the Lord.

1 AND in the seventh month, on the first day of the month, ye shall have an holy convocation; ye shall do no servile work: it is a day of blowing of trumpets unto you. And ye shall offer a burnt offering for a sweet savour unto the Lord:

2 one young bullock, one ram, seven he-lambs of the first year without blemish: and their meal offering, fine flour mingled with oil, three tenth parts for the bullock, two tenth parts for the

3 ram, and one tenth part for every lamb of the seven lambs: and one he-goat for a sin offering,

4 to make atonement for you: beside the burnt offering of the new moon, and the meal offering thereof, and the continual burnt offering and the meal offering thereof, and their drink offerings, according unto their ordinance, for a sweet savour, an offering made by fire unto the Lord.

5 to make atonement for you: beside the burnt offering of the new moon, and the meal offering thereof, and the continual burnt offering and the meal offering thereof, and their drink offerings, according unto their ordinance, for a sweet savour, an offering made by fire unto the Lord.

6 to make atonement for you: beside the burnt offering of the new moon, and the meal offering thereof, and the continual burnt offering and the meal offering thereof, and their drink offerings, according unto their ordinance, for a sweet savour, an offering made by fire unto the Lord.

26-31. 5. Day of first-fruits. This festival is named the day of first-fruits only here; in Lev. 23 : 15, seq., it is introduced without a name, but from the fact of its occurring seven weeks, or on the fiftieth day, after a particular date (see "Com. on Leviticus," 23 : 15-21), it has come to be known as the feast of weeks, or Pentecost. The sacrifices for the occasion are there prescribed, and they correspond in the main with those prescribed here, which are the same as for the new moons and for each of the days of Mazzoth. A curious variation is that while here the requirement is two young bullocks and one ram (ver. 27), in Leviticus (23 : 18) it is one young bullock and two rams. The directions in that book also add two he lambs a year old for a sacrifice of peace offerings (ibid., ver. 19).

Chap. 29. This chapter is entirely occupied with the offerings for the seventh month, including the feast of trumpet blowing with which the month was ushered in, the great Day of Atonement, and the feast of Booths, the culminating festival of the year. These festivals are commanded in Lev. 23 and partially described, but the chapter before us is concerned simply with the offerings to be made on those occasions. The covenant number seven seems to be given unusual emphasis in this chapter, in that the seventh month is made the culmination of the year, the whole number of bullocks offered at the feast of Booths is seventy, the diminishing series being so arranged that the number seven falls on the seventh day, and the festival itself, aside from its עֲזֵרֶת, 'atzereth, or supplemental day, is a seven-day feast.

1-6. 6. Feast of trumpet blowing. This festival as a holy convocation is prescribed in Lev. 23 : 23-25. The sacrifices for the day, in addition to the monthly new moon offering (ver. 6) and the daily burnt offering, were almost identical with those for the new moon festival, the only difference being that one young bullock was used instead of two (ver. 2 : cf. 28 : 11). So just as the offering for the Sabbath was a doubling of the daily sacrifice (28 : 9), so the offering for the beginning of the seventh month was almost a doubling of the new moon offering for each month. It may be noted that while in chap. 28 three different festivals—the new moon, each day of Mazzoth, and the day of first-fruits—were celebrated each with two young bullocks, one ram, and seven lambs, in this chapter three festivals—the day of trumpet blowing, the Day of Atonement, and the 'atzereth, or supplement to the feast of Booths—are characterized each by the same system of offerings with the lack of one bullock.

7 And ye shall have on the tenth day of this seventh month an holy convocation; and ye shall afflict your souls: ye shall not do any work therein:

8 But ye shall offer a burnt offering unto the Lord for a sweet savour; one young bullock, one ram, and seven lambs of the first year; they shall be unto you without blemish:

9 And their meat offering shall be of flour mingled with oil, three tenth deals to a bullock, and two tenth deals to one ram,

10 A several tenth deal for one lamb, throughout the seven lambs:

11 One kid of the goats for a sin offering; beside the sin offering of atonement, and the continual burnt offering, and the meat offering of it, and their drink offerings.

12 And on the fifteenth day of the seventh month ye shall have an holy convocation; ye shall do no servile work, and ye shall keep a feast unto the Lord seven days:

13 And ye shall offer a burnt offering, a sacrifice made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the Lord; thirteen young bullocks, two rams, and fourteen lambs of the first year; they shall be without blemish:

14 And their meat offering shall be of flour mingled with oil, three tenth deals unto every bullock of the thirteen bullocks, two tenth deals to each ram of the two rams,

15 And a several tenth deal to each lamb of the fourteen lambs:

16 And one kid of the goats for a sin offering; beside the continual burnt offering, his meat offering, and his drink offering.

17 And on the second day ye shall offer twelve young bullocks, two rams, fourteen lambs of the first year without spot:

18 And their meat offering and their drink offerings for the bullocks, for the rams, and for the lambs, shall be according to their number, after the manner:

19 And one kid of the goats for a sin offering; beside the continual burnt offering, and the meat offering thereof, and their drink offerings.

20 And on the third day eleven bullocks, two rams, fourteen lambs of the first year without blemish:

21 And their meat offering and their drink offerings for the bullocks, for the rams, and for the lambs, shall be according to their number, after the manner:

22 And one goat for a sin offering; beside the continual burnt offering, and his meat offering, and his drink offering.

23 And on the fourth day ten bullocks, two rams, and fourteen lambs of the first year without blemish:

24 Their meat offering and their drink offerings for the bullocks, for the rams, and for the lambs, shall be according to their number, after the manner:

25 And one kid of the goats for a sin offering; beside the continual burnt offering, his meat offering, and his drink offering.

7 And on the tenth day of this seventh month ye shall have an holy convocation; and ye shall afflict your souls; ye shall do no manner of

8 work; but ye shall offer a burnt offering unto the Lord for a sweet savour; one young bullock, one ram, seven he-lambs of the first year; they

9 shall be unto you without blemish; and their meal offering, fine flour mingled with oil, three tenth parts for the bullock, two tenth parts for

10 the one ram, a several tenth part for every lamb of the seven lambs: one he-goat for a sin offering;

11 beside the sin offering of atonement, and the continual burnt offering, and the meal offering thereof, and their drink offerings.

12 And on the fifteenth day of the seventh month ye shall have an holy convocation; ye shall do

13 no servile work, and ye shall keep a feast unto the Lord seven days: and ye shall offer a burnt

14 offering, an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the Lord; thirteen young bullocks,

15 two rams, fourteen he-lambs of the first year; they shall be without blemish: and their meal

16 offering, fine flour mingled with oil, three tenth parts for every bullock of the thirteen bullocks,

17 two tenth parts for each ram of the two rams,

18 and a several tenth part for every lamb of the fourteen lambs: and one he-goat for a sin offer-

19 ing; beside the continual burnt offering, the meal offering thereof, and the drink offering thereof.

20 And on the second day ye shall offer twelve young bullocks, two rams, fourteen he-lambs of 21 the first year without blemish: and their meal offering and their drink offerings for the bul-

22 locks, for the rams, and for the lambs, according to their number, after the ordinance: and one

23 he-goat for a sin offering; beside the continual burnt offering, and the meal offering thereof, 24 and their drink offerings.

25 And on the third day eleven bullocks, two rams, fourteen he-lambs of the first year with-

26 out blemish; and their meal offering and their drink offerings for the bullocks, for the rams,

27 and for the lambs, according to their number, after the ordinance: and one he-goat for a sin

28 offering; beside the continual burnt offering, and the meal offering thereof, and the drink offering thereof.

29 And on the fourth day ten bullocks, two rams, fourteen he-lambs of the first year without

30 blemish: their meal offering and their drink offerings for the bullocks, for the rams, and for

31 the lambs, according to their number, after the ordinance: and one he-goat for a sin offering;

32 beside the continual burnt offering, the meal offering thereof, and the drink offering thereof.

7-11. 7. The Day of Atonement. In the list of feasts in Lev. 23 : 26-32, the general character of this day as a day for afflicting the soul is prescribed, while that distinguishing feature of purification for the sanctuary and for the priests and all the people through sin offerings and sprinkled blood, and finally the unique ceremony of sending the live goat away to Azazel, which makes this day the great day of the sacred year, is described in full in Lev. 16. In this place we have only the sacrifices which are to introduce the day as an appointed observance, and these are the same as those for the day of trumpet blowing.

12-38. 8. Feast of Booths. This festival with its holy convocation the first day and its eighth day 'atzereth, or closing festival, is commanded in Lev. 23 : 33-36. It is there prescribed that a fire offering shall be made each day (ibid., 36), and the passage before gives the details of that offering. The secular or lay manner of keeping this happy festival, especially the feature of dwelling in booths, is described in Lev. 23 : 39-44. The remarkable thing about the offerings prescribed for this festival is the immense number of bullocks that are consumed during the seven days.

26 And on the fifth day nine bullocks, two rams, and fourteen lambs of the first year without spot:

27 And their meat offering and their drink offerings for the bullocks, for the rams, and for the lambs, shall be according to their number, after the manner:

28 And one goat for a sin offering; beside the continual burnt offering, and his meat offering, and his drink offering.

29 And on the sixth day eight bullocks, two rams, and fourteen lambs of the first year without blemish:

30 And their meat offering and their drink offerings for the bullocks, for the rams, and for the lambs, shall be according to their number, after the manner:

31 And one goat for a sin offering; beside the continual burnt offering, his meat offering, and his drink offering.

32 And on the seventh day seven bullocks, two rams, and fourteen lambs of the first year without blemish:

33 And their meat offering and their drink offerings for the bullocks, for the rams, and for the lambs, shall be according to their number, after the manner:

34 And one goat for a sin offering; beside the continual burnt offering, his meat offering, and his drink offering.

35 On the eighth day ye shall have a solemn assembly: ye shall do no servile work therein:

36 But ye shall offer a burnt offering, a sacrifice made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the Lord: one bullock, one ram, seven lambs of the first year without blemish:

37 Their meat offering and their drink offerings for the bullock, for the ram, and for the lambs, shall be according to their number, after the manner:

38 And one goat for a sin offering; beside the continual burnt offering, and his meat offering, and his drink offering.

39 These things ye shall do unto the Lord in your set feasts, beside your vows, and your freewill offerings, for your burnt offerings, and for your meat offerings, and for your drink offerings, and for your peace offerings.

40 And Moses told the children of Israel according to all that the Lord commanded Moses.

26 And on the fifth day nine bullocks, two rams, fourteen he-lambs of the first year without

27 blemish: and their meal offering and their drink offerings for the bullocks, for the rams, 28 and for the lambs, according to their number, after the ordinance: and one he-goat for a sin offering; beside the continual burnt offering, and the meal offering thereof, and the drink offering thereof.

29 And on the sixth day eight bullocks, two rams, fourteen he-lambs of the first year without

30 blemish: and their meal offering and their drink offerings for the bullocks, for the rams, and for the lambs, according to their number,

31 after the ordinance: and one he-goat for a sin offering; beside the continual burnt offering, the meal offering thereof, and the drink offerings thereof.

32 And on the seventh day seven bullocks, two rams, fourteen he-lambs of the first year with-

33 out blemish: and their meal offering and their drink offerings for the bullocks, for the rams, and for the lambs, according to their number,

34 after the ordinance: and one he-goat for a sin offering; beside the continual burnt offering, the meal offering thereof, and the drink offering thereof.

35 On the eighth day ye shall have a solemn

36 assembly: ye shall do no servile work: but ye shall offer a burnt offering, an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the Lord: one bul-

37 lock, one ram, seven he-lambs of the first year without blemish: their meal offering and their

38 drink offerings for the bullock, for the ram, and for the lambs, shall be according to their number, after the ordinance: and one he-goat for a

39 sin offering; beside the continual burnt offering, and the meal offering thereof, and the drink offering thereof.

40 These ye shall offer unto the Lord in your set feasts, beside your vows, and your freewill offerings, for your burnt offerings, and for your meal offerings, and for your drink offerings, and for your peace offerings. And Moses told the children of Israel according to all that the Lord commanded Moses.

They amount to seventy; but instead of disposing the number so that ten shall be used each day, they are arranged according to a diminishing scale, thirteen being offered the first day and the sum being daily decreased by one, so that on the seventh day the series has come down to seven. All the other sacrifices are the same for each day. The seven times repeated sacrifice of fourteen he lambs makes an aggregate of ninety-eight lambs used during the festival. All this enormous outlay of sacrificial material in the court of the sanctuary, together with the universal rejoicing of the laity in the numerous booths, combined to make this the culminating festival of the year. On the eighth day, which was an 'azereth or closing festival, the sacrifices reverted to the same constituent numbers as those characterizing the Day of Atonement and the trumpet-blowing feast.

39, 40. This closing subscription may be compared with Lev. 23 : 37, 38, and particularly specifies that the foregoing ordinances contained in these two chapters relate to the public offerings maintained at the general expense as distinguished from those vows or expressions of spontaneous devotion which individuals may choose to make from time to time. It is to be observed that in the first seven chapters of Leviticus where the details of the ritual for the various offerings are described, the commands are issued in the form of directions to the individual who may wish to bring an offering, or who may be conscious of sin needing atonement; so that some such directions as those just given were needed in order to regulate the quantity of outlay required for the orderly maintenance of the public service.

Chap. 30. LAW REGARDING THE VALIDITY OF VOWS. 1-5. In a form somewhat varying from the usual one, this legislation is reported by Moses to the heads of the tribes as received by him from Jehovah (ver. 1). The priests, who are usually the ones most benefited by the performance of vows, are not here invested with

CHAPTER XXX.

1 AND Moses spake unto the heads of the tribes concerning the children of Israel, saying, This is the thing which the Lord hath commanded.

2 If a man vow a vow unto the Lord, or swear an oath to bind his soul with a bond; he shall not break his word, he shall do according to all that proceedeth out of his mouth.

3 If a woman also vow a vow unto the Lord, and bind herself by a bond, being in her father's house in her youth;

4 And her father hear her vow, and her bond wherewith she hath bound her soul, and her father shall hold his peace at her: then all her vows shall stand, and every bond wherewith she hath bound her soul shall stand.

5 But if her father disallow her in the day that he heareth; not any of her vows, or of her bonds wherewith she hath bound her soul, shall stand: and the Lord shall forgive her, because her father disallowed her.

6 And if she had at all an husband, when she vowed, or uttered ought out of her lips, wherewith she bound her soul;

7 And her husband heard it, and held his peace at her in the day that he heard it: then her vows shall stand, and her bonds wherewith she bound her soul shall stand.

8 But if her husband disallowed her on the day that he heard it; then he shall make her vow which she vowed, and that which she uttered with her lips, wherewith she bound her soul, of none effect: and the Lord shall forgive her.

9 But every vow of a widow, and of her that is divorced, wherewith they have bound their souls, shall stand against her.

1 AND Moses spake unto the heads of the tribes of the children of Israel, saying, This is the

2 thing which the Lord hath commanded. When a man voweth a vow unto the Lord, or sweareth an oath to bind his soul with a bond, he shall not break his word; he shall do according to all

3 that proceedeth out of his mouth. Also when a woman voweth a vow unto the Lord, and bindeth herself by a bond, being in her father's

4 house, in her youth; and her father heareth her vow, and her bond wherewith she hath bound her soul, and her father holdeth his peace at her: then all her vows shall stand, and every

5 bond wherewith she hath bound her soul shall stand. But if her father disallow her in the day that he heareth; none of her vows, or of her bonds wherewith she hath bound her soul, shall stand: and the Lord shall forgive her, because

6 her father disallowed her. And if she be married to a husband, while her vows are upon her, or the rash utterance of her lips, wherewith she

7 hath bound her soul; and her husband hear it, and hold his peace at her in the day that he heareth it; then her vows shall stand, and her bonds wherewith she hath bound her soul shall

8 stand. But if her husband disallow her in the day that he heareth it; then he shall make void her vow which is upon her, and the rash utterance of her lips, wherewith she hath bound her

9 soul: and the Lord shall forgive her. But the vow of a widow, or of her that is divorced, even every thing wherewith she hath bound her soul, the superintendence of their fulfilment; it is made the concern of the secular judges. It is to be noted too, that the legal process of confirming or annulling vows in the family is made possible without the intervention of the priest; thus avoiding that priestly interference in family life which has so often wrought mischief in more modern times. The general law is that if a man makes a vow, or binds his soul with a bond, he must perform what he has promised (ver. 2). The distinction is made between a vow נָדַר, nedher, and a bond נִסָּךְ, 'issar, the former being the promise to do or give something, while the latter is the pledge to restrain one's self from something. The vow of the Nazarite (chap. 6) is designated as a positive vow, since its most prominent feature is not the abstinence but the conspicuous going about with long hair. Besides the legislation regarding the Nazarite vow, a whole chapter in Leviticus (chap. 27) is devoted to vows; but this is mainly a list of tariffs and rules for the commutation of persons or things devoted to Jehovah and redeemed with money.

After ver. 2 the rest of this chapter is devoted to defining the validity of vows made by women. The first case is that of a woman making a vow while still in her youth in her father's house. The law vests in the father the right to confirm or annul the vow. If he hears the vow at the time it is uttered and makes no objection, the vow is regarded as confirmed by his silence (ver. 4); but if he disallows the vow at the time of its utterance, it is annulled, and the divine forgiveness is vouchsafed the woman thus deprived of the power to fulfil her promise (ver. 5).

6-12. The second case (ver. 6-9) is that of a woman who comes into the married state having unfulfilled vows resting upon her—vows which were assumed while in her father's house either with his tacit consent or without his knowledge. The translation of ver. 6 in the A. V. is unsatisfactory; see the R. V. Account is taken not only of a formal vow but of a rash utterance (ver. 6), which once made must be taken seriously. The word translated rash utterance is not found elsewhere, though the corresponding verb is used in Lev. 5 : 4. It may be that some ill-advised utterance, brought to Moses' attention, which was threatening trouble in a newly constituted family was the occasion of the legislation of this chapter. The rule is, that the woman on entering the married state can bring in no obligations which the husband may not annul, if it is his pleasure, on their coming to his knowledge. He assumes the full right which the father had, his authority even superseding any obligation which may have been created by the parent's former consent.

The third case (ver. 9) is that of a widow or 10 And if she vowed in her husband's house, or bound her soul by a bond with an oath;

11 And her husband heard it, and held his peace at her, and disallowed her not: then all her vows shall stand, and every bond wherewith she bound her soul shall stand.

12 But if her husband hath utterly made them void on the day he heard them; then whatsoever proceeded out of her lips concerning her vows, or concerning the bond of her soul, shall not stand: her husband hath made them void; and the Lord shall forgive her.

13 Every vow, and every binding oath to afflict the soul, her husband may establish it, or her husband may make it void.

14 But if her husband altogether hold his peace at her from day to day; then he establisheth all her vows, or all her bonds, which are upon her: he confirmeth them, because he held his peace at her in the day that he heard them.

15 But if he shall any ways make them void after that he hath heard them; then he shall bear her iniquity.

16 These are the statutes, which the Lord commanded Moses, between a man and his wife, between the father and his daughter, being yet in her youth in her father's house.

10 shall stand against her. And if she vowed in her husband's house, or bound her soul by a bond with an oath, and her husband heard it, and held his peace at her, and disallowed her not; then all her vows shall stand, and every bond wherewith she bound her soul shall stand.

12 But if her husband made them null and void in the day that he heard them; then whatsoever proceeded out of her lips concerning her vows, or concerning the bond of her soul, shall not stand: her husband hath made them void; and

13 the Lord shall forgive her. Every vow, and every binding oath to afflict the soul, her husband may establish it, or her husband may make

14 it void. But if her husband altogether hold his peace at her from day to day; then he establisheth all her vows, or all her bonds, which are upon her: he hath established them, because he held his peace at her in the day that he heard

15 them. But if he shall make them null and void after that he hath heard them; then he shall divorced woman. As she has no protector or master, her utterances must maintain their full obligation whatever the circumstances, the same as those of a man. Finally the case of a married woman making a vow while in her husband's house is specified (ver. 10-12). The same right of repeal is vested in the husband as belonged to the father in the case of the unmarried daughter; and the same peril of confirming the vow by inattention or silence attends him. As the woman, now old enough to make vows in her own family, may be presumed to be of mature age, the husband's restraining power over her promises seems to indicate a recognition, according to Oriental ideas, of a certain mental inferiority on the part of women. Vows are usually assumed under a religious impulse; and since women, as the more emotional sex, are always more responsive to religious feelings and motives than men, their husbands might not infrequently be led to regard the vows made by them under stress of strong feeling as not adjusted to a prudent scale of expense, or not consistent with the full complement of conjugal duty. Such religious impressionability appears to be regarded as a sort of weakness, whose outcome ought to be subject to revision from the business head of the family.

13-16. After asserting in general terms the right of the husband to confirm or annul any vows or binding oaths which may be taken by the wife (ver. 13), this section goes on to instance the ease of a husband allowing the obligation and practice of a vow to run on for a considerable time, from day to day (ver. 14), without taking the trouble to express his dissent. In this case, if he chooses to inhibit the vow after a tardy recognition of its inconvenience or undesirability, he must bear her iniquity, i. e., assume the responsibility for any trouble or guilt which she may have incurred through the belated breaking off of her obligation (ver. 15). The last verse is a general subscription or appended title applying to the whole chapter.

Chap. 31. THE WAR OF VENGEANCE AGAINST MIDIAN. This chapter, which is in the vein of P, appears to be an augmented and theoretically conceived compilation from simpler materials furnished by tradition. "The piece," says Dillmann, "though in form a narrative, is really a piece of legislation, wherein the method of procedure against an enemy who has incurred the wrath of God, and especially the rule for the disposal of the spoil, is set forth." Such few details as are given of the incitement and preparation for the conflict are so ideally and simply regular as almost to suggest an invention of incidents which took little pains for narrative verisimilitude, but was rather constructing any sufficient framework for the legislation which was the chief concern. Moses calls for a thousand men from each tribe to execute Jehovah's vengeance, and these are furnished in exact tale without regard to the tribes' relative military strength and proceed armed to the war accompanied by the zealous Phinehas, who carries along the sacred gear and the prescribed trumpets secundum artem. This army proceeds to slaughter without mishap, and apparently without resistance, all the males of a nation whose virgin daughters alone numbered thirty-two thousand, and to bring home all the women and little ones, besides flocks and herds

CHAPTER XXXI.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,
 2 Avenge the children of Israel of the Midianites: afterward shalt thou be gathered unto thy people.
 3 And Moses spake unto the people, saying, Arm some of yourselves unto the war, and let them go against the Midianites, and avenge the Lord of Midian.
 4 Of every tribe a thousand, throughout all the tribes of Israel, shall ye send to the war.
 5 So there were delivered out of the thousands of Israel, a thousand of every tribe, twelve thousand armed for war.

1 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,
 2 Avenge the children of Israel of the Midianites: afterward shalt thou be gathered unto thy people. And Moses spake unto the people, saying, Arm ye men from among you for the war, that they may go against Midian, to execute the Lord's vengeance on Midian. Of every tribe a thousand throughout all the tribes of Israel, shall ye send to the war. So there were delivered, out of the thousands of Israel, a thousand of every tribe, to the number of more than eight hundred thousand and much additional treasure in gold ornaments. "In the high figures," says Driver, "and absence of specific details, the narrative resembles the descriptions of wars in the Chronicles or in Judg. 20. The account, as we have it, contains elements which are not easy to reconcile with historical probability. The difficulties of the section are mitigated by the supposition that the simpler materials supplied by tradition have here been elaborated by the compiler, in accordance with his love of system, into an ideal picture of the manner in which a sacred war must have been conducted by Israel."

1-12. The war here laid upon Moses' conscience as his duty was purely a war of divine reprisal for the treachery which had attempted to corrupt the most inward and essential life of the children of Israel. Moses had felt impressed with this duty since the time of the plague (25 : 17), and he counted the fulfilling of it an appropriate ending for his public career (ver. 2). Whether the Midianites or Bedouin were themselves fanatical inciters to the worship of Beth-peor is not clear; this seems to have been more especially the part which the daughters of Moab played (see 25 : 1-5); and this was punished by the judges of Israel (ibid., ver. 5). But the Midianites appear to have been the prime movers in the seductions to impurity in which the highest nobles on either side were tempters and tempted, and in consequence of which a devastating plague swept over Israel. These were following a concerted plan which they had adopted at the advice of Balaam (ver. 16), and they are therefore singled out, rather than the Moabites, as the more dangerous foes and the more guilty sinners. A religious war, or war of divine vengeance, the command to which in modern and Protestant thought could perhaps not possibly authenticate itself as divine, was nevertheless eminently in place at the level of society and in the circumstances of provocation existing at this time. It was not a war of opinion, nor was it simply the partisan rage of one tribal deity against another. It was a mighty flaming out of righteous anger in behalf of a people just striving for a foothold in a spiritual life, whose whole inner integrity was in peril of being destroyed through devilish temptations laying hold of the strongest of human passions. There is something that is of more importance than tolerance—that is, the preservation of spiritual integrity, the saving of the soul from destruction. Considering the time, and the plane on which God was working, we cannot call the account erroneous in designating Moses' conviction of duty in this case as a revelation from Jehovah.

Moses gave directions to the people to arm or mobilize a force for military service, a thousand from each tribe, that they might, as it literally reads, "be upon Midian to give the vengeance of Jehovah in Midian" (ver. 3). This was to be a religious war, in which the punishment inflicted was the punishment due from Jehovah. At the same time it does not appear to be conceived of as a war against the Midianites as idolaters, nor is there any consciousness of invading the realm of another god. The whole affair appears to be treated as a procedure in which Jehovah has full jurisdiction. This need not necessarily be because Israel had at this time fully risen to the conception of Jehovah as a universal Sovereign; yet there does seem to be indicated a moral sense which identified Jehovah with that universal divine righteousness and cognizance of human wrong which is larger than any mere tribal system of worship. That the Midianites had any direct part in the Baal-peor worship, or that they were idolaters at all, is somewhat doubtful. It is to be remembered that they were of Abrahamic descent (see Gen. 25 : 1-4), and that it was from the desert of Midian that Moses brought the name Jehovah (see Exod. 3 : 1, 14); they may have been recreant and wholly worldly pretenders to a Jehovah cult, who did not scruple to use the Peor-worship and its votaries as a trap (cf. com. on 22 : 22-35). As this was a sacred war the object was not merely to disable the enemy or bring him to terms, but

6 And Moses sent them to the war, a thousand of every tribe, them and Phinehas the son of Eleazar the priest, to the war, with the holy instruments, and the trumpets to blow in his hand.

7 And they warred against the Midianites, as the Lord commanded Moses; and they slew all the males.

8 And they slew the kings of Midian, beside the rest of them that were slain; namely, Evi, and Rekem, and Zur, and Hur, and Reba, five kings of Midian; Balaam also the son of Beor they slew with the sword.

9 And the children of Israel took all the women of Midian captives, and their little ones, and took the spoil of all their cattle, and all their flocks, and all their goods.

10 And they burnt all their cities wherein they dwelt, and all their goodly castles, with fire.

11 And they took all the spoil, and all the prey, both of men and of beasts.

12 And they brought the captives, and the prey, and the spoil, unto Moses, and Eleazar the priest, and unto the congregation of the children of Israel, unto the camp at the plains of Moab, which are by Jordan near Jericho.

13 And Moses, and Eleazar the priest, and all the princes of the congregation, went forth to meet them without the camp.

14 And Moses was wroth with the officers of the host, with the captains over thousands, and captains over hundreds, which came from the battle.

15 And Moses said unto them, Have ye saved all the women alive?

16 Behold, these caused the children of Israel, through the counsel of Balaam, to commit trespass against the Lord in the matter of Peor, and there was a plague among the congregation of the Lord.

6 twelve thousand armed for war. And Moses sent them, a thousand of every tribe, to the war, them and Phinehas the son of Eleazar the priest, to the war, with the vessels of the sanctuary and

7 the trumpets for the alarm in his hand. And they warred against Midian, as the Lord com-

8 manded Moses; and they slew every male. And they slew the kings of Midian with the rest of their slain; Evi, and Rekem, and Zur, and Hur, and Reba, the five kings of Midian: Balaam also

9 the son of Beor they slew with the sword. And the children of Israel took captive the women of Midian and their little ones; and all their cattle, and all their flocks, and all their goods,

10 they took for a prey. And all their cities in the places wherein they dwelt, and all their en-

11 campments, they burnt with fire. And they took all the spoil, and all the prey, both of man

12 and of beast. And they brought the captives, and the prey, and the spoil, unto Moses, and unto Eleazar the priest, and unto the congregation of the children of Israel, unto the camp at the plains of Moab, which are by the Jordan at Jericho.

13 And Moses, and Eleazar the priest, and all the princes of the congregation, went forth to meet

14 them without the camp. And Moses was wroth with the officers of the host, the captains of thousands and the captains of hundreds, which

15 came from the service of the war. And Moses said unto them, Have ye saved all the women

16 alive? Behold, these caused the children of Israel, through the counsel of Balaam, to commit trespass against the Lord in the matter of Peor, and so the plague was among the congrerather to eradicate his corrupting influence. It was therefore a war without quarter (ver. 7, 8). The army was accompanied by Phinehas, the son of the high priest Eleazar, who as the prompt and zealous punisher of impurity (25 : 7)—indeed, the very embodiment of Jehovah's jealousy in the case provocative of this war (ibid., ver. 11)—was most eminently fitted to perform such priestly functions as were prescribed for military expeditions. He took along the "gear of the sanctuary" (ver. 6) and the trumpets for the alarm prescribed for such cases in 10 : 1-10. This sacred gear, as distinguished from the trumpets themselves, consisted perhaps simply of such priestly insignia and vestments as were necessary for performing his sacred functions in the field. No description is given of the engagement, whether it was a pitched battle or simply an irruption; the writer has in view only the results. All the adult males were slain, among them being the five kings of Midian, who are in Joshua called princes or vassals of Sihon (Josh. 13 : 21), and also Balaam, the son of Beor (ver. 8). One of these princes, Zur, has already been named as the father of the Midianitish woman who was slain by Phinehas (25 : 15). The women and children, with the cattle and flocks and goods, were treated all together as so much dumb property and brought to Moses and Eleazar at the camp in Arboth-Moab (ver. 11, 12), while the cities and "encampments" were burned with fire (ver. 10). These encampments—not castles as in the A. V.—were rows or enclosures of stone covered with tent-cloth and used as habitations.

13-24. The returning warriors were met by Moses and Eleazar and the nobles outside the camp, as they were not fit, defiled as they were with the work of slaughter, to enter their habitations until after their period of quarantine (ver. 13). These soldiers in their unthinking conformity to the rules of primitive warfare had treated all the dependents of their able-bodied foes as so many mere belongings, and so had brought the women and children alive along with the cattle. We need to bear in mind how absolute was the control of the head of an Oriental family over his dependents. Moses was displeased at this piece of thoughtlessness, and reminded the people that the mature women of the Midianites, by being willing to lend their persons to a deep-laid scheme of impure enticement, had risen above the level of mere non-combatants, and were therefore to be reckoned as a menace to safety (ver. 16). Literally, "these were unto the children of Israel, at the word of Balaam, to venture a trespass against Jehovah." All the non-adult males, as prospective warriors, and all the women who had had carnal experience of the male, as possible enticements to im-

17 Now therefore kill every male among the little ones, and kill every woman that hath known man by lying with him.

18 But all the women children, that have not known a man by lying with him, keep alive for yourselves.

19 And do ye abide without the camp seven days: whosoever hath killed any person, and whosoever hath touched any slain, purify both yourselves and your captives on the third day, and on the seventh day.

20 And purify all your raiment, and all that is made of skins, and all work of goats' hair, and all things made of wood.

21 And Eleazar the priest said unto the men of war which went to the battle, This is the ordinance of the law which the Lord commanded Moses;

22 Only the gold, and the silver, the brass, the iron, the tin, and the lead,

23 Every thing that may abide the fire, ye shall make it go through the fire, and it shall be clean: nevertheless it shall be purified with the water of separation: and all that abideth not the fire ye shall make go through the water.

24 And ye shall wash your clothes on the seventh day, and ye shall be clean, and afterward ye shall come into the camp.

25 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

26 Take the sum of the prey that was taken, both of man and of beast, thou, and Eleazar the priest, and the chief fathers of the congregation:

27 And divide the prey into two parts; between them that took the war upon them, who went out to battle, and between all the congregation:

28 And levy a tribute unto the Lord of the men of war which went out to battle: one soul of five hundred, both of the persons, and of the beeves, and of the asses, and of the sheep:

29 Take it of their half, and give it unto Eleazar the priest, for an heave offering of the Lord.

30 And of the children of Israel's half, thou shalt take one portion of fifty, of the persons, of the beeves, of the asses, and of the flocks, of all manner of beasts, and give them unto the Levites, which keep the charge of the tabernacle of the Lord.

31 And Moses and Eleazar the priest did as the Lord commanded Moses.

17 gation of the Lord. Now therefore kill every male among the little ones, and kill every woman that hath known man by lying with 18 him. But all the women children, that have not known man by lying with him, keep alive

19 for yourselves. And encamp ye without the camp seven days: whosoever hath killed any

20 person, and whosoever hath touched any slain, purify yourselves on the third day and on the 21 seventh day, ye and your captives. And as to every garment, and all that is made of skin, and

22 all work of goats' hair, and all things made of wood, ye shall purify yourselves. And Eleazar

23 the priest said unto the men of war which went to the battle, This is the statute of the law

24 which the Lord hath commanded Moses: howbeit the gold, and the silver, the brass, the iron,

25 the tin, and the lead, every thing that may abide the fire, ye shall make to go through the fire,

26 and it shall be clean; nevertheless it shall be purified with the water of separation: and all

27 that abideth not the fire ye shall make to go through the water. And ye shall wash your 28 clothes on the seventh day, and ye shall be clean, and afterward ye shall come into the camp.

29 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Take the sum of the prey that was taken, both

30 of man and of beast, thou, and Eleazar the priest, and the heads of the fathers' houses of the

31 congregation: and divide the prey into two parts; between the men skilled in war, that

32 went out to battle, and all the congregation: and levy a tribute unto the Lord of the men of 33 war that went out to battle: one soul of five hundred, both of the persons, and of the beeves,

34 and of the asses, and of the flocks: take it of their half, and give it unto Eleazar the priest,

35 for the Lord's heave offering. And of the children of Israel's half, thou shalt take one drawn

36 out of every fifty, of the persons, of the beeves, of the asses, and of the flocks, even of all the 37 cattle, and give them unto the Levites, which keep the charge of the tabernacle of the Lord.

38 And Moses and Eleazar the priest did as the purity through their too forward blandishments, were to be ruthlessly slaughtered (ver. 17). The more modest virgins could be entrusted to the morality and self-restraint of their captors (ver. 18). As for the soldiers, they must remain without the camp for seven days that all who had come in contact with the dead might observe the purifications prescribed in 19: 11-13 (ver. 19). It is especially noted that this self-purification must extend to all garments and articles made of leather or goat's hair or wood (ver. 20). Eleazar the high priest, as the official under whose special province all matters of ceremonial cleansing came, now interposed with his reminder of the "statute of the law" promulgated in chap. 19 (see 19: 2), and especially with a fuller definition of the requirements regarding vessels that were in a house infected by the dead (cf. 19: 18). All the utensils were to be treated as thus infected. Not only were they to be sprinkled with the water of purification (ver. 23), but whatever could abide the fire must be purified by heat, and whatever could not must be washed with water.

25-47. Ver. 25-31 outline the principle on which the spoil was to be distributed. In the first place it was to be divided by two, one-half being given to the men who went to the war, and one-half to the congregation that remained at home (ver. 27). This is somewhat like that principle which David is recorded to have established as an ordinance in Israel (1 Sam. 30: 24, 25). The case, however, with which his regulation set out resulted in giving as much to two hundred who stayed behind from weakness as to twice that number who took the risk and burden of the foray; while here the same amount of booty falls to twelve thousand warriors as to nearly six hundred thousand civilians. Moreover, despite this enormous disparity in the per capita award, the soldiers were still further advantaged in being required to pay only one five-hundredth as a tribute to Jehovah for the priests, while from the great congregation was levied ten times as much, or one-fiftieth, for the benefit of the Levites. It is to be noted, however, that in David's case the distinction is

32 And the booty, being the rest of the prey which the men of war had caught, was six hundred thousand and seventy thousand and five thousand sheep,

33 And threescore and twelve thousand beeves,

34 And threescore and one thousand asses,

35 And thirty and two thousand persons in all, of women that had not known man by lying with him.

36 And the half, which was the portion of them that went out to war, was in number three hundred thousand and seven and thirty thousand and five hundred sheep:

37 And the Lord's tribute of the sheep was six hundred and threescore and fifteen.

38 And the beeves were thirty and six thousand; of which the Lord's tribute was threescore and twelve.

39 And the asses were thirty thousand and five hundred; of which the Lord's tribute was threescore and one.

40 And the persons were sixteen thousand; of which the Lord's tribute was thirty and two persons.

41 And Moses gave the tribute, which was the Lord's heave offering, unto Eleazar the priest, as the Lord commanded Moses.

42 And of the children of Israel's half, which Moses divided from the men that warred, 43 (Now the half that pertained unto the congregation was three hundred thousand and thirty thousand and seven thousand and five hundred sheep,

44 And thirty and six thousand beeves,

45 And thirty thousand asses and five hundred,

46 And sixteen thousand persons:)

47 Even of the children of Israel's half, Moses took one portion of fifty, both of man and of beast, and gave them unto the Levites, which kept the charge of the tabernacle of the Lord; as the Lord commanded Moses.

48 And the officers which were over thousands of the host, the captains of thousands, and captains of hundreds, came near unto Moses:

49 And they said unto Moses, Thy servants have taken the sum of the men of war which are under our charge, and there lacketh not one man of us.

50 We have therefore brought an oblation for the Lord, what every man hath gotten, of jewels, of gold, chains, and bracelets, rings, earrings, and tablets, to make an atonement for our souls before the Lord.

51 And Moses and Eleazar the priest took the gold of them, even all wrought jewels.

52 And all the gold of the offering that they offered up to the Lord, of the captains of thousands, and of the captains of hundreds, was sixteen thousand seven hundred and fifty shekels.

32 Lord commanded Moses. Now the prey, over and above the booty which the men of war took, was six hundred thousand and seventy thousand

33 and five thousand sheep, and threescore and

34 twelve thousand beeves, and threescore and one

35 thousand asses, and thirty and two thousand

36 persons in all, of the women that had not known

37 man by lying with him. And the half, which

38 was the portion of them that went out to war,

39 was in number three hundred thousand and 40 thirty thousand and seven thousand and five

41 hundred sheep; and the Lord's tribute of the 42 sheep was six hundred and threescore and fif-

43 teen. And the beeves were thirty and six thou-

44 sand; of which the Lord's tribute was threes-

45 score and twelve. And the asses were thirty

46 thousand and five hundred; of which the Lord's

47 tribute was threescore and one. And the per-

48 sons were sixteen thousand; of whom the Lord's

49 tribute was thirty and two persons. And Moses

50 gave the tribute, which was the Lord's heave

51 offering, unto Eleazar the priest, as the Lord

52 commanded Moses. And of the children of 53 Israel's half, which Moses divided off from the 54 men that warred, (now the congregation's half

55 was three hundred thousand and thirty thou-

56 sand, seven thousand and five hundred sheep,

57 44, 45 and thirty and six thousand beeves, and

58 46 thirty thousand and five hundred asses, and six-

59 47 teen thousand persons;) even of the children of 60 Israel's half, Moses took one drawn out of every

61 fifty, both of man and of beast, and gave them

62 unto the Levites, which kept the charge of the

63 tabernacle of the Lord; as the Lord commanded

64 Moses. And the officers which were over the 65 thousands of the host, the captains of thousands,

66 and the captains of hundreds, came near unto

67 Moses: and they said unto Moses, Thy servants

68 have taken the sum of the men of war which

69 are under our charge, and there lacketh not one

70 man of us. And we have brought the Lord's

71 oblation, what every man hath gotten, of jewels

72 of gold, ankle chains, and bracelets, signet-

73 rings, earrings, and armlets, to make atonement

74 for our souls before the Lord. And Moses and 75 Eleazar the priest took the gold of them, even 76 all wrought jewels. And all the gold of the 77 heave offering that they offered up to the Lord,

78 of the captains of thousands, and of the cap-

79 tains of hundreds, was sixteen thousand seven between warriors in active conflict and warriors on sentry duty; while here it is between non-productive soldiers and presumably prosperous civilians.<sup>1</sup>

48-54. The officers reported to Moses the astounding fact that all this slaughter and capturing of spoil had been accomplished without the loss of a man (ver. 49). The warriors evidently encountered no resistance on the part of the Midianites, and probably routed them by a sudden attack. They and their men had taken an immense quantity of gold trinkets consisting of ankle-chains, bracelets, signet-rings, earrings, and arm-bands, the negotiable wealth of their adversaries. In the absence of any system of banking, or any secure place to lay up money, Oriental, and especially nomadic, people are in the habit of turning their portable wealth into jewels and ornaments which they wear on their persons. The Midianites, who were placed on the same footing in popular estimation with the Ishmaelites, were noted for wearing ear-rings or nose-rings (Judg. 8:24). This portable spoil the officers brought to Moses and Eleazar as an "atonement for their souls before Jehovah" (ver. 50) i. e., an offering, like the <sup>1</sup> The amount of the spoil "over and above the booty which the men of war took"—i. e., perhaps spoil that could be carried on the person, such as gold ornaments—was as follows: Sheep, 675,000; cattle, 72,000; asses, 61,000; maidens, 32,000. Of this quantity the soldiers' half amounted to: Sheep, 337,500; cattle, 36,000; asses, 30,500; maidens, 16,000; of which Jehovah's five-hundredth for the priests was: Sheep, 675; cattle, 72; asses, 61; maidens, 32, while of each kind the tribute, or t'rumah, which came from the people's half for the Levites was ten times as much.

53 (For the men of war had taken spoil, every man for himself.)

54 And Moses and Eleazar the priest took the gold of the captains of thousands and of hundreds, and brought it into the tabernacle of the congregation, for a memorial for the children of Israel before the Lord.

CHAPTER XXXII.

1 NOW the children of Reuben and the children of Gad had a very great multitude of cattle: and when they saw the land of Jazer, and the land of Gilead, that, behold, the place was a place for cattle;

2 The children of Gad and the children of Reuben came and spake unto Moses, and to Eleazar the priest, and unto the princes of the congregation, saying,

3 Ataroth, and Dibon, and Jazer, and Nimrah, and Heshbon, and Elealeh, and Shebam, and Nebo, and Beon,

4 Even the country which the Lord smote before the congregation of Israel, is a land for cattle, and thy servants have cattle:

5 Wherefore, said they, if we have found grace in thy sight, let this land be given unto thy servants for a possession, and bring us not over Jordan.

53 hundred and fifty shekels. (For the men of war had taken booty, every man for himself.) And Moses and Eleazar the priest took the gold of the captains of thousands and of hundreds, and brought it into the tent of meeting, for a memorial for the children of Israel before the Lord.

1 NOW the children of Reuben and the children of Gad had a very great multitude of cattle: and when they saw the land of Jazer, and the land of Gilead, that, behold, the place was a place for cattle; the children of Gad and the children of Reuben came and spake unto Moses, and to Eleazar the priest, and unto the princes of the congregation, saying, Ataroth, and Dibon, and Jazer, and Nimrah, and Heshbon, and Elealeh, and Sebam, and Nebo, and Beon, the land which the Lord smote before the congregation of Israel, is a land for cattle, and thy servants have cattle. And they said, If we have found grace in thy sight, let this land be given unto thy servants for a possession; bring us not over half-shekel tax in Exod. 30 : 15, 16, intended to confirm them in the favor of God. Like that half-shekel offering too, it was received in the tabernacle as a memorial for the children of Israel (ver. 54; cf. Exod. 30 : 16). The value of the gold amounted to 16,750 shekels, which, reckoning the gold shekel at £1.15 to the shekel, would be over $96,000; or, reckoning, with Kautzsch, at £2 or $10 to the shekel, $160,750. A reference to the wealth of the Midianites in gold ornaments is found in Judg. 8 : 24-26.

Chap. 32. ALLOTMENT OF THE TERRITORY EAST OF THE JORDAN. 1-5. This account of the allotment of the territory east of the Jordan to Reuben, Gad, and the half-tribe of Manasseh is paralleled in Deut. 3 : 12-20, only there Moses, as the speaker, according to the characteristic habit of Deuteronomy (see e. g., Deut. 1 : 9-18, as compared with Exod. 18 : 13-26), recounts the transaction as if it were done at his own initiative. The tribe of Reuben comes first in order of mention only in ver. 1, while in all later mentions of the tribes together in this chapter Gad is given the precedence. The half-tribe of Manasseh does not figure in the account until ver. 33. The two tribes of Reuben and Gad seem to have been distinguished among the tribes for their extensive ownership of cattle (ver. 1), the statement being literally: "And much cattle belonged to the sons of Reuben and Gad, very strong." The names, "land of Ja'azer" and "land of Gilead" are inclusive terms for the region described by its principal cities in ver. 3. Ja'azer was so prominent a city that it gave its name to that region of Gilead in which it was situated (cf. 21 : 32). The territory east of the Jordan, much of which is still remarkable for the richness of its pasture land as compared with western Palestine, is thus outlined by Professor Smith: "When we pass back into the Old Testament we . . . find eastern Palestine, . . . known as Over-Jordan or 'Abarim,' divided into three parts. But the lines of division are not now Yarmuk and Jabbok, but Yarmuk and that line twenty-five miles to the south of Jabbok, which divides the table-land of Moab from the ridges to the north of it. All on the south of this to the Arnon is Mishor, or table-land; all to the north of it, as far as the Yarmuk is Gilead; and all to the north of Yarmuk is Bashan. The Mishor, or table-land, covered the southern half of the Belka'. It was sometimes called the Mishor of Medeba (Josh. 13 : 9, 16), which town on a high mound is conspicuous across the whole of it. It was also the Sharon of eastern Palestine. The rest of the Belka', from Heshbon to the Jabbok, formed the southern half of Gilead; the other half lay between Jabbok and Yarmuk, and was therefore equivalent to the modern district of 'Ajlun. The whole region was called Gilead, the Land of Gilead, and Mount Gilead, the last of which names still survives upon the long ridge south of the Jabbok, the Jebel Jela'ad." The representatives of the two tribes indicated to Moses that the territory controlled by the cities named in ver. 3 had been subdued in the campaign against Sihon (ver. 4; cf. chap. 21 : 21-31), and was therefore unoccupied and available for settlement. The names of these cities recur, with some variations in form, in ver. 34-38. The admirable adaptation of the region for grazing awakened their enthusiasm. The request in ver. 5, bring us not over Jordan, indicates that, even now at the very beginning

6 And Moses said unto the children of Gad and to the children of Reuben, Shall your brethren go to war, and shall ye sit here?

7 And wherefore discourage ye the heart of the children of Israel from going over into the land which the Lord hath given them?

8 Thus did your fathers, when I sent them from Kadesh-barnea to see the land.

9 For when they went up unto the valley of Eshcol, and saw the land, they discouraged the heart of the children of Israel, that they should not go into the land which the Lord had given them.

10 And the Lord's anger was kindled the same time, and he sware, saying,

11 Surely none of the men that came up out of Egypt, from twenty years old and upward, shall see the land which I sware unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob; because they have not wholly followed me:

12 Save Caleb the son of Jephunneh the Kenzite, and Joshua the son of Nun: for they have wholly followed the Lord.

13 And the Lord's anger was kindled against Israel, and he made them wander in the wilderness forty years, until all the generation, that had done evil in the sight of the Lord, was consumed.

14 And, behold, ye are risen up in your fathers' stead, an increase of sinful men, to augment yet the fierce anger of the Lord toward Israel.

15 For if ye turn away from after him, he will yet again leave them in the wilderness; and ye shall destroy all this people.

of the great conquest, the campaigning spirit had completely left them. They were full of schemes for success in the grazing and dairy business. Although when their proposal was set in its true light they were very willing to help their brethren in their work of conquering western Palestine, yet it seems quite probable that this was not originally in their thoughts. No wider principle had occurred to them than that those should conquer who were to occupy, even though they themselves were proposing to settle in territory which the united effort of all the tribes had laid open to them. A certain selfish absorption in their own prospects, a certain failure to enter into the large enthusiasm of a national destiny, seems to have characterized them; and this with their consequent isolation from the general interest kept them from ever achieving their due measure of greatness. In the days of Deborah, while glorious events fitted to stir a warlike heart were transpiring in west Palestine, Reuben, piping to his flocks, rose no higher than uneasy searchings of heart, while Gilead abode supine beyond the Jordan (see Judg. 5 : 15-17).

6-15. Moses set their plan before them in the light of the whole: Shall your brethren go to war, and shall ye sit here? (Ver. 6.) His particular solicitude was lest this breaking up of the general enthusiasm into isolated interests should disincite the hearts of the children of Israel from going over into the land destined for them (ver. 7). He had seen the eagerness and courage of the preceding generation come up to the testing-point and then ooze out before the disheartening influence of a few panic-stricken spies (ver. 8, 9); it was not to be wondered at that, in the sluggish vitality of his old age, he should tremble for the enthusiasm of their untried descendants subjected to the chill of preoccupation and reluctance on the part of a considerable fraction of their number. He recounted the history of that notable cowardice of the spies and of the divine sentence and the nightmare of wandering which followed it; and then in stern rebuke he characterized his petitioners as an "increase" or "crop" of sinful men risen up in their fathers' stead (ver. 14), whose discouraging attitude might easily provoke another divine sentence of wilderness-wandering, and be responsible for the destruction of all that was distinctive in the life of Israel (ver. 15). If it were thought worth while to refer to the critical analysis of this section, we might observe that whoever has put this chapter into its present form has drawn quite impartially upon both of the manifestly distinct accounts of the spies (see com. on chap. 13, 11), making the journey end at Eshcol with JE (ver. 9 : cf. 13 : 24) and yet including both Caleb and Joshua as exceptions to the general cowardice with P (ver. 12 : cf. 11 : 6, 30); while the form Kadesh-barnea (ver. 8) is considered by critics as a mark of the Deuteronomist. Caleb is here called (ver. 12) a Kenizzite, or descendant of the Edomite Kenaz (Gen. 36 : 11), just as in Josh.

16 And they came near unto him, and said, We will build sheepfolds here for our cattle, and cities for our little ones :

17 But we ourselves will go ready armed before the children of Israel, until we have brought them unto their place : and our little ones shall dwell in the fenced cities because of the inhabitants of the land.

18 We will not return unto our houses, until the children of Israel have inherited every man his inheritance.

19 For we will not inherit with them on yonder side Jordan, or forward ; because our inheritance is fallen to us on this side Jordan eastward.

20 And Moses said unto them, If ye will do this thing, if ye will go armed before the Lord to war,

21 And will go all of you armed over Jordan before the Lord, until he hath driven out his enemies from before him, 22 And the land be subdued before the Lord : then afterward ye shall return, and be guiltless before the Lord, and before Israel ; and this land shall be your possession before the Lord.

23 But if ye will not do so, behold, ye have sinned against the Lord : and be sure your sin will find you out.

24 Build you cities for your little ones, and folds for your sheep ; and do that which hath proceeded out of your mouth.

25 And the children of Gad and the children of Reuben spake unto Moses, saying, Thy servants will do as my lord commandeth.

26 Our little ones, our wives, our flocks, and all our cattle, shall be there in the cities of Gilead :

27 But thy servants will pass over, every man armed for war, before the Lord to battle, as my lord saith.

28 So concerning them Moses commanded Eleazar the priest, and Joshua the son of Nun, and the chief fathers of the tribes of the children of Israel :

16 this people. And they came near unto him, and said, We will build sheepfolds here for our cattle, and cities for our little ones : but we ourselves will be ready armed to go before the children of Israel, until we have brought them unto their place : and our little ones shall dwell in the fenced cities because of the inhabitants of the 18 land. We will not return unto our houses, until the children of Israel have inherited every man his inheritance. For we will not inherit with them on the other side Jordan, and forward ; because our inheritance is fallen to us on this

20 side Jordan eastward. And Moses said unto them, If ye will do this thing ; if ye will arm

21 yourselves to go before the Lord to the war, and every armed man of you will pass over Jordan before the Lord, until he hath driven out his

22 enemies from before him, and the land be subdued before the Lord : then afterward ye shall return, and be guiltless towards the Lord, and towards Israel ; and this land shall be unto you

23 for a possession before the Lord. But if ye will not do so, behold, ye have sinned against the Lord : and be sure your sin will find you out.

24 Build you cities for your little ones, and folds for your sheep ; and do that which hath proceeded out of your mouth. And the children of

25 Gad and the children of Reuben spake unto Moses, saying, Thy servants will do as my lord

26 commandeth. Our little ones, our wives, our flocks, and all our cattle, shall be there in the 27 cities of Gilead : but thy servants will pass over, every man that is armed for war, before the Lord to battle, as my lord saith.

28 So Moses gave charge concerning them to Eleazar the priest, and to Joshua the son of

Nun, and to the heads of the fathers' houses of 14 : 6, 14, and just as his brother is called a son of Kenaz in Josh. 15 : 17 ; Judg. 1 : 13 ; while in the passages assigned by critics to P he is designated as simply a descendant of Judah (13 : 6 ; 34 : 19). He was undoubtedly a Judahite with an admixture of foreign blood.

16-27. While this answer on the part of the two tribes is not such a direct defense against Moses' strong arraignment as would be called forth on the spur of the moment, yet it is just such an answer as would naturally be presented after the tribes had conferred together, in view of their lawgiver's attitude, and formulated a policy. The sheepfolds (ver. 16) were rough enclosures of stones piled upon each other into which the sheep could be driven at night. The building of cities was doubtless the rebuilding and fortifying of the dismantled cities which had been taken by the children of Israel. The word translated little ones is here taken as including the wives and meaning substantially dependents or non-combatants in general. In ver. 26 it is used in a more restricted sense. The Reubenites and Gadites engaged to arm themselves ready, or, at a moment's notice (ver. 17) in presence of the children of Israel—or, as they put it after the more theocratic key had been set by Moses (see ver. 20, 21, 27, 29, 32), in presence of Jehovah—and not to return to their homes until every man of their brethren had obtained his inheritance (ver. 18). They renounced all claim to a possession over Jordan and beyond, and expressed themselves in their eagerness as having already secured just the place for them this side Jordan eastward (ver. 19). On hearing their proposal Moses replied that if these conditions should be faithfully fulfilled they might return to their chosen possession with the consciousness of having met all the claims of religion and patriotism (ver. 22) ; but if not, his first apprehension would be seen to be correct and they would be proven guilty of a sinful supineness which would bring a sure retribution (ver. 23). He then issued formal orders for them to build cities and folds and do as they had proposed (ver. 24), to which they gave a formal assent and promise (ver. 25-27).

28-33. Moses now gave directions to those under whose supervision the final allotment after the conquest would fall (ver. 28 ; cf. 34 : 16 seq.) that under the specified conditions the tribes of Gad and Reuben were to have the land of Gilead for a possession. This involved not only an exception to the regulation already formulated, namely, that choice of territory should be by lot (see 26 : 55), but most probably an addition

29 And Moses said unto them, If the children of Gad and the children of Reuben will pass with you over Jordan, every man armed to battle, before the Lord, and the land shall be subdued before you; then ye shall give them the land of Gilead for a possession:

30 But if they will not pass over with you armed, they shall have possessions among you in the land of Canaan.

31 And the children of Gad and the children of Reuben answered, saying, As the Lord hath said unto thy servants, so will we do.

32 We will pass over armed before the Lord into the land of Canaan, that the possession of our inheritance on this side Jordan may be ours.

33 And Moses gave unto them, even to the children of Gad, and to the children of Reuben, and unto half the tribe of Manasseh the son of Joseph, the kingdom of Sihon king of the Amorites, and the kingdom of Og king of Bashan, the land, with the cities thereof in the coasts, even the cities of the country round about.

34 And the children of Gad built Dibon, and Ataroth, and Aroer,

35 And Atroth, Shophan, and Jaazer, and Jogbehah, 36 And Beth-nimrah, and Beth-haran, fenced cities: and folds for sheep.

37 And the children of Reuben built Heshbon, and Elealeh, and Kirjathaim,

29 the tribes of the children of Israel. And Moses said unto them, If the children of Gad and the children of Reuben will pass with you over Jordan, every man that is armed to battle, before the Lord, and the land shall be subdued before you; then ye shall give them the land of Gilead for a possession: but if they will not pass over with you armed, they shall have possessions

30 among you in the land of Canaan. And the children of Gad and the children of Reuben answered, saying, As the Lord hath said unto

31 thy servants, so will we do. We will pass over armed before the Lord into the land of Canaan, and the possession of our inheritance shall remain with us beyond Jordan. And Moses gave

32 unto them, even to the children of Gad, and to the children of Reuben, and unto the half tribe of Manasseh the son of Joseph, the kingdom of Sihon king of the Amorites, and the kingdom of Og king of Bashan, the land, according to the cities thereof with their borders, even the cities

33 of the land round about. And the children of 34 Gad built Dibon, and Ataroth, and Aroer; and 35 Atroth-shophan, and Jazer, and Jogbehah; and 36 Beth-nimrah, and Beth-haran: fenced cities, and 37 folds for sheep. And the children of Reuben built Heshbon, and Elealeh, and Kirjathaim; to the total of territory to be divided, which evidently according to the original plan included only western Palestine. In the event of their failure to meet the requirement they should be made to possess among their brethren on the west side of the Jordan (ver. 30). This would involve a more or less forcible transplanting, as the act of recreancy would consist in settling where they were. In other words, settlement on the east of the Jordan would entail restriction to western Palestine. Perhaps when this formal arrangement was made the parties did not realize how much trouble they were laying up for themselves among the tribes in the event of the agreement not being fulfilled. As it turned out the promise was strictly kept (see Josh. 22 : 1-3); but even then the tribes on the east of the Jordan were felt to have a certain remoteness and diversity of interest from their brethren, so that their first public act after their return home subjected them to a suspicion and religious jealousy on the part of the other tribes which almost provoked a civil war (see Josh. 22 : 9, seq.). The summary ver. 33, which is thought by some to be a later addition, introduces for the first time the half-tribe of Manasseh, and in a generalized way describes the possession of these two-and-a-half tribes as the kingdoms of Sihon and Og with their dependent cities and the environs.

34-42. The towns which the children of Gad rebuilt and fortified (ver. 34-36) comprised three groups or settlements: a Dibon group consisting of the first four cities, Dibon, Ataroth, Aroer, and Atroth-shophan, or the Shophan

Ataroth; a couple consisting of Jaazer and its neighboring city of Jogbehah; and a Jordan valley group consisting of the towns Beth-nimrah and Beth-haran. The first or Dibon settlement was considerably separated from the others, being in the southern part of the Mishor or table-land of Medeba and not far from the banks of the Arnon. The four cities lay near each other. These cities in the final settlement appear to have passed to the tribe of Reuben, whose possession lay to the south and entirely outside of Gilead and extended to the Arnon. Dibon, called from this tribe Dibon-gad in 33 : 45, 46, is spoken of by Isaiah and Jeremiah as a Moabite town (Isa. 15 : 2; Jer. 48 : 18, 22), having probably been recaptured by the Moabites before the time of these prophets. It was at this place, the modern Dhiban, that the Moabite stone, or stone of Mesha, was found in 1868. The second group, Ja'azer on the table-land far up from the Jordan and almost due east from Jericho, and Jogbehah considerably to the north over half-way to the Jabbok, came within the southern portion of the territory called Gilead; while the third pair, Beth-nimrah—abbreviated to Nimrah in ver. 3—and Beth-haran, were in the Jordan valley and could hardly have been occupied exclusively by the Gadites until after the Israelites had moved over the Jordan, as these cities must have lain within the limits of the camp where they were now abiding.

The cities which the Reubenites fortified (ver. 37, 38) were rather closely grouped around the central city of Heshbon which had been Sihon's capital (see 21 : 26), and with their environs could

And Moses gave Gilead unto Machir the son of Manasseh; and he dwelt therein. And Jair the son of Manasseh went and took the towns thereof, and called them Havoth-jair. have occupied only a small part of the territory which afterward fell to Reuben (see Josh. 13 : 15, seq.) Baal-meon and Shibmah appear in ver. 3 as Beon and Sebam. Nebo was retaken by Mesha about 895 B. C., as the Moabite stone records; hence Isaiah (15 : 2) and Jeremiah (48 : 1) speak of it as a Moabite town. Shibmah, or Sibmah, became noted for its vines (Isa. 16 : 8). The parenthetic phrase, their names being changed (ver. 38), referring to the names Nebo and Baal-meon as embodying the names of heathen gods, is probably a late gloss or direction to the reader, prompted by the prejudice which arose against taking the names of heathen divinities upon the lips (see Hosea 2 : 17; Deut. 12 : 3), and means that the public reader is to make a substitution of something else when these names are encountered. This is a different thing from the deliberate renaming of places mentioned in the last clause of the verse. The Reubenites "probably at the partition retained all these cities with the exception of Heshbon itself, which, passing to the Levites, was thenceforth reckoned as within the tribe of Gad."

The half-tribe of Manasseh mentioned in ver. 33 evidently consisted simply of the line of Machir. The children of Machir came into possession of Gilead, i. e., the northern part of Gilead and Bashan, purely on account of their prowess, by which they had gained an actual lodgment there (ver. 39; Josh. 17 : 1). Machir, the ancestor, whose sons had been born upon Joseph's knees (Gen. 50 : 23), belonged to a generation far back: but the renown of his descendants had raised the family almost to the dignity of a tribe. Machir is mentioned in the song of Deborah (Judg. 5 : 14) by the side of Ephraim and Benjamin as if he were of co-ordinate rank. Jair (ver. 41) was the son or descendant of Manasseh through his grandmother, while in the male line he traced his descent from Judah (1 Chron. 2 : 21, 22; cf. com. on 27 : 1-5). The fame of his family was augmented by one of the judges of Israel of the same name, probably a descendant (Judg. 10 : 3); and the name was still prominent in this region at the time of Christ (Luke 8 : 41). He went and took their (thereof, of them) tent-villages, or havvoth, i. e., the tent-villages of the Amorites mentioned in ver. 39, and called them Havoth-jair. According to a somewhat doubtful passage in Deut. 3 : 14, these havvoth are spoken of as in Bashan or Argob, of which Jair is there called the conqueror; though here they are evidently mentioned as in Gilead, and in 1 Kings 4 : 13 they are expressly placed there, and distinguished from the cities of Argob. The original "havvoth-jair" were twenty-three in number (1 Chron. 2 : 22). Nobah, who does not elsewhere appear in Bible history, took Kenath and its "daughters," or dependent villages (ver. 42), thought to be the same as the modern Qanawât, a place where exist considerable ruins of Roman and Christian times on the western slopes of the mountains of the Hauran. Although he called the place by his name, and the designation is used in Judg. 8 : 11, it seems apparent that in process of time the ancient name was resumed.

The conquest of the country to the east of the Jordan was never so thoroughly accomplished as that on the western side (see Josh. 13 : 13); and these tribes were the first to be swept away by the Assyrians (1 Chron. 5 : 26). The pastoral tribes of Reuben and Gad had, in the early history, anything but an enviable reputation for public spirit (Judg. 5 : 15-17; 8 : 4-9); but the Manassites rendered good service to the nation (Judg. 5 : 14). Gideon, and Jephthah probably, were of this tribe. The men of Jabesh in Gilead, actuated by gratitude (1 Sam. 11 : 1-11), were faithful at risk of their lives to their benefactor Saul (1 Sam. 31 : 11-13). It was in this region of Gilead that Abner kept alive the cause of his master for some years after David came to the throne of Judah (2 Sam. 2 : 8-11); here the great King David himself, fleeing from his son Absalom, found refuge and hospitality (2 Sam. 17 : 24-29); and one of his entertainers on this occasion perpetuated in himself the ancient name Machir (ibid., 27). In the later times of the monarchy too, when the northern tribes had

Chap. 33. LIST OF THE CAMPING-PLACES OF ISRAEL FROM RAMESES TO THE PLAINS OF MOAB. DIRECTIONS RESPECTING THE OCCUPATION OF CANAAN. 1-4. This group of verses forms a sort of historical introduction to the list of camping-places which follows. The whole chapter in its present form is assigned by critics to the source called P. As to the list of places, the author here claims to be drawing on a written itinerary which came from the hand of Moses himself (ver. 2). Not unlikely, at the time this chapter was written, there was in existence a list of places which, coming down from the remotest antiquity, was attributed to the great lawgiver. Only three or four other sections of the Pentateuch are in the text itself ascribed to the hand of Moses as a writer: the book of the Covenant (Exod. 20-23; see Exod. 24:4), the collection of statutes in Exod. 34:10-26 (see ibid., 27, 28), the record of Jehovah's feud against Amalek, which was to be preserved in writing for fulfilment in later times (Exod. 17:11), and considerable portions of the book of Deuteronomy (Deut. 31:9, 22). The belief that Moses wrote the whole Pentateuch is derived from Jewish tradition. This historical proem appears to preserve closely many of the striking expressions found in the account of the departure from Egypt in Exodus. The place and manner of setting out are in accordance with Exod. 12:37-41; we have the going out "by their hosts" (ver. 1), as in Exod. 6:26; 12:41; the people go out with an high hand, as in Exod. 14:8; and judgment is executed on the gods of Egypt, as in Exod. 12:12. That the people should be able to organize themselves in fitting form and to go out of Egypt with a high hand, or defiantly and openly, without immediate pursuit is accounted for here by the fact that the Egyptians were engaged in burying their dead firstborn.

5-15. In this section we have the stations of the journey from Rameses to Sinai, where the children of Israel remained for over a year. Rameses and Succoth were districts or regions rather than cities. Rameses is the land of Goshen. That the children of Israel removed from Rameses means that they collected from Goshen. There was a great host of them, the men alone numbering six hundred thousand (Exod. 12:37). Succoth—a Hebrew name meaning booths—was a common camping-ground where nomads, or tenters, were in the habit of pitching their tents. "There was evidently a region of this sort between the line of lakes which formed the eastern boundary of the land of Goshen (or perhaps a little west of that line) and the Great Wall (the Khetam-Etham-Shur) which lay between Lower Egypt and the wilderness. At that Succoth the Israelites probably made their rendezvous" (TRUMBULL). The name Etham is probably identical with the Khetam of the Egyptian monuments. The word means a fortification; and probably some important fortification of the line of forts forming the frontier between Egypt and the wilderness—the edge of the wilderness—became known by preeminence as the Khetam of Zor or Lower Egypt. The Hebrew equivalent of Khetam is Shur, or wall; and hence the children of Israel, after the passage of the sea, are said to have gone three days' journey in the wilderness of Etham (ver. 8), while in Exodus the expression is the "wilderness of Shur" (Exod. 15 : 22). In both passages the meaning is, "the wilderness of the Great Wall." Pi-hahiroth (ver. 7), or, without the Egyptian place-mark Pi, simply Hahiroth (ver. 8; see R. V.), is probably to be identified with the modern Ajrud, about four hours northwest of Suez. The places mentioned in this journey from Marah to Sinai correspond with those given in Exodus (see Exod. 12 : 27; 13 : 20; 15 : 22, 23, 27; 16 : 1; 17 : 1; 19 : 2), with the exception that three places of encampment are enumerated here which are not mentioned in Exodus: the Red Sea between Elim and the wilderness of Sin (ver. 11), and Dophkah and Alush (ver. 13, 14) between the "wilderness of Sin" and Rephidim. "The probability of a station on the Red Sea between Elim and the wilderness of Sin must be conceded" (DILLMANN). Some modern investigators, in their efforts to find a place for Sinai in Midian proper, have argued that this Red Sea station was on the Elanitic gulf, the name Yam Suph, or Red Sea, being used in that sense as in Judg. 11 : 16; 1 Kings 10 : 26, and the Israelites having struck completely across the peninsula between the gulfs of Suez and 'Akabah recording only the stations Marah and Elim—which latter is for the purpose identified with Eloth, or Elath, at the head of the gulf of 'Akabah—but their reasoning does not seem conclusive. Dophkah and Alush are not elsewhere mentioned.

16-36. The starting out from Mount Sinai is narrated in 10 : 11. At Kibroth-hattaavah (ver. 16) occurred the miraculous flight of quails related in chap. 11; and at Hazeroth, where the people abode more than seven days, occurred the rebellion of Miriam and Aaron and Miriam's judgment of leprosy (see chap. 12). From ver. 19-36 the stations named have no corresponding history given in the earlier part of the book; and their identification is almost purely conjectural. As, in the history, the children of Israel immediately on leaving Hazeroth are found in the wilderness of Paran (12 : 16) or at Kadesh (13 : 26)—a place which is not mentioned in this list until ver. 36—a difficulty is found in disposing of these eighteen stations between Hazeroth and Kadesh, especially as the whole distance from Sinai to Kadesh is in Deuteronomy called only eleven days' journey (Deut. 1 : 2). It is generally thought that these names refer to places of encampment during the forty years' wandering in the wilderness, and that the coming to Kadesh in ver. 36 is the great assembling of the tribes after their period of discipline was ended. It will be observed that the route has led through Ezion-gaber (ver. 35, 36) at the head of the gulf of 'Akabah; and no doubt the wandering was a circuitous one (see com. on chap. 21). The place Rithmah (ver. 18), immediately succeeding Hazeroth, is thought to be the encampment in the wilderness of Paran mentioned in 12 : 16, and to be practically identical with Kadesh. A somewhat enigmatical insertion in Deut. 10 : 6, 7 mentions four of these places, though in a different order, as if traversed by the children of Israel in the midst of their sojourn at Sinai: Beeroth-bene-jaakan, or "wells of the sons of Jaakan," which is identical with Bene-jaakan (ver. 31), Moseroth, where Aaron is said to have died, which is but the singular form corresponding to the plural Moseroth (ver. 30), Gudgodah, the same as Hor-hagidgad (ver. 32), and Jotbathah (see ver. 33). The verses in Deuteronomy are evidently a somewhat unintelligent later gloss. "An examination of some of the names will give a clue as to why they were chosen. Rithmah, a name coming from 'retem,' a broom bush, probably means valley of broom bushes. Kadesh, 'holy place,' its original name is En-mishpat (Gen. 14 : 7), 'well of judgment'; Kadesh-barnea, its newer name, 'the land of moving to and fro,' or 'wandering,' or 'shaken.' Then Rimmon-parez, 'the pomegranate breach.'

Libnah, 'whiteness,' probably from the white poplar trees growing there. Rissah, 'dew.' Mount Shapher, 'the mount of beauty' or of 'goodliness.' Mithcah, 'sweetness,' in reference to the water. Hashmonah, 'fatness,' 'fruitfulness,' where to this day there is a pool full of sweet living water with abundant vegetation around. Bene-jaakan, or, as in Deut. 10 : 6, 'Beeroth of the children of Jaakan,' 'the wells of the children of Jaakan,' probably the wells which the Jaakanites had dug on their expulsion by the Edomites from their original homes (Gen. 36 : 27 ; 1 Chron. 1 : 42). Jotbathah, 'goodness,' and Ebronah, probably 'fords.' The other names are either derived from peculiarities of scenery or else from special events, as Kehelathah, 'assembling'; Makeheloth, 'assemblies'; Haradah, 'place of terror' (HENRY A. HARPER).

53 And ye shall dispossess the inhabitants of the land, and dwell therein: for I have given you the land, and possess it.

54 And ye shall divide the land by lot for an inheritance among your families: and to the more ye shall give the more inheritance, and to the fewer ye shall give the less inheritance: every man's inheritance shall be in the place where his lot falleth; according to the tribes of your fathers ye shall inherit.

52 shall ye inherit. But if ye will not drive out the inhabitants of the land from before you; then shall those which ye let remain of them be as pricks in your eyes, and as thorns in your sides, and they shall vex you in the land wherein have there the names Oboth (ver. 43; cf. 21 : 10) and Ije-abarim (ver. 44; cf. 21 : 11). The reader is referred to the com. on 21 : 10-20. Dibon-gad (ver. 45, 46) is no doubt the same as the Dibon mentioned in 21 : 30, which probably received the addition gad to its name from its having been rebuilt by that tribe (see 32 : 34), and to distinguish it from some other Dibon not known. Almon-diblathaim (ver. 46), though mentioned in this form only here, is probably the same as Beth-diblathaim, enumerated by Jeremiah (48 : 22) among the cities of Moab upon which the divine judgment had descended. The mountains of Abarim (ver. 47), or "mountains of the further regions," are the Moabite highlands in the neighborhood of Nebo, jutting down to the Arabah. The encampment in the plains of Moab, already mentioned in 22 : 1, is here described as extending from Beth-jeshimoth to Abel-shittim (ver. 49).

50-56. The more immediate directions for the occupation of Canaan are now taken up, and they fill the rest of this chapter and chap. 34, after which (35 : 1) the distinct legislation regarding the Levitical cities is introduced by a repetition of this formula in ver. 50. In the book of the Covenant (see Exod. 23 : 24) the command to destroy the idolatrous emblems is recorded, along with the prohibition of heathen worship. In that chapter the promise is given that Jehovah, on condition of Israel's faithfulness (ibid., 22), will drive out the nations of the land (ibid., ver. 23, 28); with the express consolation for importunate and disappointed faith that this is to occur gradually in order to avoid the inconvenient multiplication of wild animals (ibid., ver. 29, 30), and that the land will yield places to them only as they are able to fill them. The divine agency employed is to be Jehovah's angel (ibid., ver. 20; cf. Exod. 32 : 34; 33 : 2), and the express form in which their faithfulness is prescribed is that they are to listen to his voice and not provoke him (Exod. 23 : 21). It is interesting to note that in describing the failure of the children of Israel in their early efforts to occupy the land the book of Judges (2 : 1-5) introduces the angel, who has been disregarded, as the explainer of their discomfiture. In that explanation he recalls the characteristic threat found here in ver. 55 (see Judg. 2 : 3). In Exod. 34 : 11-17 the same command regarding the destruction of heathen objects of worship is given, with the caution against making alliances with the people: but there also the driving out of the inhabitants is a matter of divine promise. By some modern critics those passages of promise and warning in Exodus are assigned to a redactor. Here in Numbers, in a manner perhaps more characteristic of the priestly source, the supernatural element is somewhat more subordinated, the directions are emphasized by way of threat rather than of promise, and the responsi-

CHAPTER XXIV.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Command the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye come into the land of Canaan; (this is the land that shall fall unto you for an inheritance, even the land of Canaan with the coasts thereof:)

3 Then your south quarter shall be from the wilderness of Zin along by the coast of Edom, and your south border shall be the outmost coast of the salt sea eastward:

4 And your border shall turn from the south to the ascent of Akrabbim, and pass on to Zin: and the going forth thereof shall be from the south to Kadesh-barnea, and shall go on to Hazar-addar, and pass on to Azmon:

5 And the border shall fetch a compass from Azmon unto the river of Egypt, and the goings out of it shall be at the sea.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Command the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye come into the land of Canaan, (this is the land that shall fall unto you for an inheritance, even the land of Canaan according to the borders thereof,) then your south quarter shall be from the wilderness of Zin along by the side of Edom, and your south border shall be from the end of the Salt Sea eastward:

3 and your border shall turn about southward of the ascent of Akrabbim, and pass along to Zin: and the goings out thereof shall be southward of Kadesh-barnea; and it shall go forth to Hazar-addar, and pass along to Azmon: and the border shall turn about from

Azmon unto the brook of Egypt, and the goings

bility of driving out the Canaanites is placed on the people themselves (ver. 55, 56). The direction regarding the dividing of the land in ver. 54 is repeated from 26 : 52-56, on which see the commentary. It is worth noting that while the threat in ver. 56 seems to predict the final extinction of the Israelites in case of their failure to dispossess the Canaanites completely, in the parallel in Leviticus (chap. 26; see ver. 44, 45) and Deuteronomy (chap. 29, 30; see esp. 30 : 1-10), the threat ends with the expectation of repentance and the gracious promise of restoration.

Chap. 34. THE BOUNDARIES OF THE TERRITORY WEST OF THE JORDAN, OR CANAAN. NAMES OF THE MEN WHO ARE TO DIVIDE THE LAND. 1-15. By the land of Canaan (ver. 2) is here meant the territory west of the Jordan. This is particularly the land which Israelitish feeling considered as "falling" (cf. Ezek. 47 : 14; Judg. 18 : 1) to the tribes as an inheritance, the decision of the two tribes and a half to inherit on the east of the Jordan being thought of as a modification of the original divine arrangement, and as an occupation of territory conquered from hostile kings rather than descending by inheritance from Abraham to whom it was given (see Gen. 15 : 18; 17 : 8). The Israelitish claim, or anticipation of national destiny, always embodied the dream of an extent of territory far greater than the nation ever conquered and occupied; though Solomon at the height of his power is said by the chronicler to have held the kings tributary throughout the region claimed (2 Chron. 9 : 26). It was in general described as from the river—i. e., the Euphrates—to the river of Egypt, or the wilderness (Gen. 15 : 18; Exod. 23 : 31; Deut. 11 : 24).

The outlines of the promised land are drawn on the four sides, beginning with the south. The south side is indicated in the most general terms in the first sentence of ver. 3: Your south quarter, side, shall be from the wilderness of Zin along by the coast, on the frontiers, of Edom. It will be remembered that according to 20 : 16 the territory of Edom extended to Kadesh which was in the wilderness of Zin. From the middle of ver. 3 the description of the southern boundary is drawn out in detail. It corresponds closely with that of the southern boundary of Judah in Josh. 15 : 2-4. It starts at the end of the Salt Sea on the east, or as in Joshua, "the bay that looketh southward," and leaving the Ghor or Dead Sea Valley at the modern Wady el Fikrah, near which was the mountain pass of Akrabbim (ver. 4), or, the Scorpions, it pursued in general a southwestern course past the conical Jebel Madurah where Aaron was buried (see com. on 20 : 22-29) to Zin, reaching its greatest southerly extent at Kadesh-barnea, and then by a gradual sweep to the northward through the unidentified places Hazar-addar and Azmon, at the latter of which the line took a decided turn to the north (ver. 5), it finally struck the river of Egypt, or the modern Wady el Arish which runs northwest, and came out at the Mediterranean Sea. The whole eastern part of this course from the Dead Sea to Kadesh, as it follows the Wady el Fikrah and the Wady el Marrah, is a natural boundary, having a line of high cliffs on its northern and western side and dividing between cultivable or pasture land and desert; and in like manner its western portion, following the Wady el Arish, is still a natural boundary, as the land to the south and west of that stream all the way to Egypt is barren and sandy desert with scarcely any vegetation,

6 And as for the western border, ye shall even have the great sea for a border: this shall be your west border.

7 And this shall be your north border: from the great sea ye shall point out for you mount Hor:

8 From mount Hor ye shall point out your border unto the entrance of Hamath; and the goings forth of the border shall be to Zedad:

9 And the border shall go on to Ziphron, and the goings out of it shall be at Hazar-enan: this shall be your north border.

10 And ye shall point out your east border from Hazar-enan to Shepham.

11 And the coast shall go down from Shepham to Riblah, on the east side of Ain; and the border shall descend, and shall reach unto the side of the sea of Chinnereth eastward:

12 And the border shall go down to Jordan, and the goings out of it shall be at the salt sea: this shall be your land with the coasts thereof round about.

6 out thereof shall be at the sea. And for the western border, ye shall have the great sea and the border thereof: this shall be your west border.

7 And this shall be your north border: from the great sea ye shall mark out for you mount

8 Hor: from Mount Hor ye shall mark out unto the entering in of Hamath; and the goings out of

9 the border shall be at Zedad: and the border shall go forth to Ziphron, and the goings out thereof shall be at Hazar-enan: this shall be

10 your north border. And ye shall mark out your

11 east border from Hazar-enan to Shepham: and the border shall go down from Shepham to Riblah, on the east side of Ain; and the border shall

12 go down, and shall reach unto the side of the sea of Chinnereth eastward: and the border shall go down to Jordan, and the goings out thereof shall be at the Salt Sea: this shall be your land according to the borders thereof round about.

while the right bank toward Gaza is much better land.

The western border was the great, or, Mediterranean, sea (ver. 6).

The northern boundary cannot be identified with certainty. It appears to start at the Mediterranean Sea, but there is no mountain near the sea which corresponds in location with the other places mentioned so as to be identified with mount Hor (ver. 7). There is no northern "mount Hor" known. The expression Hor har, "Hor the mountain," is the same peculiar form as that used to designate the mountain in the Negeb where Aaron was buried (20: 22). "If Hor is an archaic form of har, Mount Hor signifies some conspicuous height among lesser heights; and when we come to apply this meaning to the regions of the Lebanon, we cannot remain long in doubt as to the special mount indicated. Among all the mountains on the borders of Syria and Palestine, Mount Hermon is pre-eminently the most conspicuous and important, owing to its enormous mass and great elevation, which reaches ten thousand feet above the level of the sea. On this ground we may identify this second Mount Hor with Hermon, although Porter, followed by Nebauer and Buhl, prefers Jebel Akkar, a N. E. spur of Lebanon" (HASTINGS, "Bible Dict."). To mark out (a word which occurs only here and in ver. 8) this mountain from the sea would thus mean to describe it and use it as a landmark. The next landmark is the entrance of Hamath (ver. 8) which, with our understanding of Mount Hor, would be described westward or toward the sea, say at the point where the Leontes, coming down from the Beqa'a, or Cœle-Syria, takes a sharp turn to the west to reach the sea a little north of Tyre. The remainder of the northern border toward the sea might be thought of as constituted by that stream which is to-day called

Nahr el Kasimiyeh, or "boundary stream."

The goings forth, or, extremity, of the northern border was to be at Zedad, which is perhaps the same as the modern Sadad, about thirty miles east of the entrance of Hamath. From there evidently the boundary took a turn, perhaps toward the south or southwest, taking in two places, Ziphron and Hazar-enan, neither of which is known, but the latter of which formed an angle or extremity terminating what was technically the northern boundary.

The first two or three places mentioned in the eastern boundary (ver. 10-12) are not known, but they evidently designate places in the region of the Lebanon. Hazar-enan evidently marks the point from which the line pursues an uninterrupted southerly course; the next place, Shepham (ver. 11), is unknown, and all we can say of Riblah is that it is not the Riblah in the land of Hamath which figured with such an unhappy prominence in the history of the captivity (2 Kings 23: 33; 25: 21; Jer. 39: 5; 52: 26). It is said to be on the east side of Ain, or, the fountain, perhaps, as Jerome understood it, the fountain of the Jordan, i. e., some one of the several streams issuing from the western slopes of Hermon from which the Jordan takes its rise. On a slight conjectural change in the pointing of the Hebrew the author of the "Speaker's Commentary" found the suggestion that the name may be, not Riblah, but Harbel, identical with the Mount Baal-hermon mentioned in Judg. 3: 3. From this place the border goes down to the "shoulder" of the sea of Chinnereth—the Old Testament form for Genesaret—the sea of Galilee, so well known in the Gospel history. The remainder of the eastern boundary is marked by the Jordan (ver. 12); and its extremity is the Salt Sea, the original point of departure (see ver. 3). The land thus marked out is designated by Moses as the land

13 And Moses commanded the children of Israel, saying, This is the land which ye shall inherit by lot, which the Lord commanded to give unto the nine tribes, and to the half tribe :

14 For the tribe of the children of Reuben according to the house of their fathers, and the tribe of the children of Gad according to the house of their fathers, have received their inheritance; and half the tribe of Manasseh have received their inheritance :

CHAPTER XXXV.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses in the plains of Moab by Jordan near Jericho, saying,

2 Command the children of Israel, that they give unto the Levites of the inheritance of their possession cities to dwell in; and ye shall give also unto the Levites suburbs for the cities round about them.

3 And the cities shall they have to dwell in; and the suburbs of them shall be for their cattle, and for their goods, and for all their beasts.

1 AND the lord spake unto Moses in the plains

2 of Moab by the Jordan at Jericho, saying, Command the children of Israel, that they give unto the Levites of the inheritance of their possession cities to dwell in; and suburbs for the cities round about them shall ye give unto the Levites.

3 And the cities shall they have to dwell in; and their suburbs shall be for their cattle, and for

to be inherited by lot (ver. 13) and divided among the nine tribes and a half, exclusive of the tribes of Reuben, Gad, and half-Manasseh, who had received their allotment (ver. 14, 15).

16-29. The superintendents of the work of apportioning the land by lot were to be the civil and religious heads of the nation, Joshua and Eleazar. From each of the tribes was selected a prince to act as trustee for his tribe. Of these men none are otherwise known except Caleb of the tribe of Judah. The order in which the tribes are mentioned is varied somewhat from the order in which they have occurred in other accounts, perhaps with a little closer reference to the location of their allotments in the land. On the adjustment of the system of the lot to the territorial requirements of the different-sized tribes, see com. on 26 : 52-56.

Chap. 35. APPOINTMENT OF CITIES FOR THE LEVITES, AND CITIES OF REFUGE. 1-8.

The legislation here takes a new start, specifying again where it was that Jehovah gave the revelation, as in 33 : 50. Moses is to make the arrangement that the children of Israel, when the land is assigned, shall give to the Levites, who have no landed inheritance (see 18 : 23, 24), certain designated cities for their abode, together with a moderate extent of pasture land round about them for their cattle (ver. 2, 3). These are designated as cities . . . to dwell in (ver. 3), being considered, not as so much territory assigned as their full and exclusive possession, but simply places where they might locate their houses (cf. Lev. 25 : 32, 33), and dwell perhaps in close association with lay people. It may be observed that Beth-shemesh, which was desig-

4 And the suburbs of the cities, which ye shall give unto the Levites, shall reach from the wall of the city and outward a thousand cubits round about.

5 And ye shall measure from without the city on the east side two thousand cubits, and on the south side two thousand cubits, and on the west side two thousand cubits, and on the north side two thousand cubits: and the city shall be in the midst: this shall be to them the suburbs of the cities.

6 And among the cities which ye shall give unto the Levites there shall be six cities for refuge, which ye shall appoint for the manslayer, that he may flee thither: and to them ye shall add forty and two cities.

7 So all the cities which ye shall give to the Levites shall be forty and eight cities: them shall ye give with their suburbs.

8 And the cities which ye shall give shall be of the possession of the children of Israel: from them that have many ye shall give many; but from them that have few ye shall give few: every one shall give of his cities unto the Levites according to his inheritance which he inheriteth.

9 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

10 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye be come over Jordan into the land of Canaan;

4 their substance, and for all their beasts. And the suburbs of the cities, which ye shall give unto the Levites, shall be from the wall of the city and outward a thousand cubits round about.

5 And ye shall measure without the city for the east side two thousand cubits, and for the south side two thousand cubits, and for the west side two thousand cubits, and for the north side two thousand cubits, the city being in the midst. This shall be to them the suburbs of the city.

6 And the cities which ye shall give unto the Levites, they shall be the six cities of refuge, which ye shall give for the manslayer to flee thither: and beside them ye shall give forty and two cities. All the cities which ye shall give to the Levites shall be forty and eight cities: them shall ye give with their suburbs. And concerning the cities which ye shall give of the possession of the children of Israel, from the many ye shall take many; and from the few ye shall take few: every one according to his inheritance which he inheriteth shall give of his cities unto the Levites.

9 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 10 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye pass over Jordan into the land of

nated as a Levitical city (Josh. 21 : 16), seems to have had both Levitical and lay inhabitants (1 Sam. 6 : 13, 15); and the setting apart of Hebron as a priestly city did not alienate the territory from the inheritance of Caleb (Josh. 21 : 11, 12). The privileges of redemption were made somewhat easier for Levites who were obliged to sell their houses in these cities than for ordinary laymen (see Lev. 25 : 32, 33, and com.); but the common or pasture lands surrounding these cities were inalienable (ibid., 34). The regulation regarding the size of the pasture lands (ver. 4, 5), appears to be a bit of ideal legislation, like that regarding the shape of the Israelitish camp (see com. on 2 : 3-34), since few locations in Palestine would admit of a square plat with exact geometrical measurements all around such as are described. Besides, two thousand cubits on a side (ver. 5), with one thousand cubits from the wall outward (ver. 4), would reduce the city itself to a mathematical point. Various solutions of the puzzle of these measurements have been attempted; but perhaps we can insist on no stricter interpretation than the general principle that a space of one thousand cubits, or nearly one-third of a mile, should be reserved as common land on which the Levites dwelling in the cities might pasture their cattle; and that, whatever the lay of the land, outside owners should not encroach nearer than this on any side, while in every case a frontage should be guaranteed of not less than two thousand cubits. The construction of the Hebrew of ver. 6 is somewhat confused, but the rendering of the R. V. is to be preferred. In all, these cities were to number forty-eight, or an average of four to a tribe (ver. 7), but the quota from each tribe was to vary according to its area—a principle similar to that followed in adjusting the size of portions to the populousness of the tribes (see 26 : 54; 33 : 54). In the actual assignment of Levitical cities, recorded in Josh. 21, the proportion of four to a tribe was adhered to, with the exception that the large tribe of Judah, together with Simeon, gave up nine cities, and Naphtali in the far north was called on for only three. How soon these arrangements as to the residence of the Levites came into actual effect, or how strictly they were ever carried out in Israelitish history, it is not easy to say. Many of the cities named in Joshua as Levitical cities did not come into the actual power of Israel until centuries after Joshua's day; and in the times of the judges we have mention of Levites living in places not included in the list of Levitical cities (Judg. 17 : 7; 19 : 1). In the age of David and Solomon we for the first time observe a recognition of the fact that the Levites were dwelling in cities with suburbs or pasture lands (1 Chron. 13 : 2). After the division of the monarchy perhaps the possibility of a strict local provision for these people no longer existed; at least the Deuteronomist everywhere treats the Levites as a homeless tribe dependent on the hospitality of the people within whose "gates" they were sojourning; and the blessing of Jacob, whatever may be its date, recognizes dispersion and homelessness as their destiny (Gen. 49 : 7).

9-15. The divine arrangement regarding the cities of refuge is among the most interesting specimens of jurisprudence in the Old Testament. It is legislation in view of a very ancient custom 11 Then ye shall appoint you cities to be cities of refuge for you; that the slayer may flee thither, which killeth any person at unawares.

12 And they shall be unto you cities for refuge from the avenger; that the manslayer die not, until he stand before the congregation in judgment.

13 And of these cities which ye shall give six cities shall ye have for refuge.

14 Ye shall give three cities on this side Jordan, and three cities shall ye give in the land of Canaan, which shall be cities of refuge.

15 These six cities shall be a refuge, both for the children of Israel, and for the stranger, and for the sojourner among them: that every one that killeth any person unawares may flee thither.

16 And if he smite him with an instrument of iron, so that he die, he is a murderer: the murderer shall surely be put to death.

17 And if he smite him with throwing a stone,

11 Canaan, then ye shall appoint you cities to be cities of refuge for you; that the manslayer which killeth any person unwittingly may flee

12 thither. And the cities shall be unto you for refuge from the avenger; that the manslayer die not, until he stand before the congregation

13 for judgment. And the cities which ye shall give shall be for you six cities of refuge. Ye

14 shall give three cities beyond Jordan, and three cities shall ye give in the land of Canaan:

15 they shall be cities of refuge. For the children of Israel, and for the stranger and for the sojourner among them, shall these six cities be for refuge: that every one that killeth any person

16 unwittingly may flee thither. But if he smote him with an instrument of iron, so that he died, he is a manslayer: the manslayer shall surely

17 be put to death. And if he smote him with a

whose liability to wrongs and abuses needed to be checked. This was the custom of private vengeance, or the duty of the next of kin to exact the penalty of blood for blood in the case of a death by violence. The Go'el, or conservator of the kinsman's interests (see Lev. 25 : 25, seq., 47, seq.), was, in the case of a kinsman killed, more strictly denominated the גֹּאֵל הַדָּם, goel haddam, or avenger of blood; and he was the one on whom rested the responsibility of retribution. This ancient and deep-rooted custom among the Semitic peoples is not to be looked upon as a survival of primitive savagery and cruelty, but rather as the earliest provision for safeguarding life and securing genuine and serious justice. As a moral duty which might often prove onerous and expensive, rather than a mere letting loose of violent passions, the act of the Goel may be said to have been commanded by God and binding on the conscience like any act of religion. "In however rude and uncertain a form, . . . the law of goel was a true germ of civilized justice which, sanguinary for the moment, seized hold of the true judicial scope of security for the future; and by the terror of death protected human life" (MOZLEY, "Ruling Ideas in Early Ages"). At the same time this custom was one which, by reason of its undue subserviency to passion and its inadequate provision for the judicial investigation of facts, must necessarily be superseded, as civilization passed from the nomadic into the more settled form, by a better mode of procedure. Such a deep-rooted and binding custom, however, could not be eradicated at once. The appointment of cities of refuge was the beginning of a divine education of public sentiment which would gradually do away with the custom of private vengeance by its own inherent power. It still recognized the avenger of blood as the executioner in the case of an actual premeditated murder, but it subtly shifted the central enormity of the crime in the people's conception from the deed to the intention. Such an insistence on an investigation of the manslayer's intention could not but result, in the course of the generations, in a state of feeling which would make the general habit of private revenge utterly out of place.

These cities of refuge were for the benefit of the person who had killed a man at unawares, or, unintentionally (ver. 11), whether he was an actual Israelite or a foreigner (ver. 15). They secured him from the avenger until he could have a trial (ver. 12). This appointment of cities of refuge is anticipated in the legislation of the book of the Covenant (Exod. 21 : 13); and there are signs in that early legislation that, previous to their appointment, the altar of Jehovah sometimes afforded the privilege of asylum (ibid., 14; cf. 1 Kings 1 : 50; 2 : 28). There were to be six of these cities (ver. 13), three on the east side of the Jordan, and three on the west side (ver. 14). The book of Deuteronomy makes provision for only three cities at first, and conditions the adding of three more on the completer subduing of the land (Deut. 19 : 2, 9). In the subsequent carrying out of the provisions of the law, the cities actually chosen, according to Josh. 20 : 7, 8, were Kedesh, Shechem, and Hebron in west Palestine, and Bezer, Ramoth-gilead, and Golan on the east side of the Jordan.

16-21. The law regarding the cities of refuge is repeated in Deut. 19 : 1-11, and also in Josh. 20 : 1-6. In the section before us those persons are described who cannot claim the benefit of its provisions. They are those whose act of manslaughter shows prima facie evidence of having been committed intentionally; and the presumption of purpose is made to turn very largely on the possession of a weapon or the deliberate act of plotting. If the deed was done with an instrument of iron (ver. 16), or with a stone (ver. 17), or with a weapon of wood wherewith he may die, and he die, he is a murderer: the murderer shall surely be put to death.

18 Or if he smite him with an hand weapon of wood, wherewith he may die, and he die, he is a murderer: the murderer shall surely be put to death.

19 The revenger of blood himself shall slay the murderer: when he meeteth him, he shall slay him.

20 But if he thrust him of hatred, or hurl at him by laying of wait, that he die;

21 Or in enmity smite him with his hand, that he die: he that smote him shall surely be put to death; for he is a murderer: the revenger of blood shall slay the murderer, when he meeteth him.

22 But if he thrust him suddenly without enmity, or have cast upon him any thing without laying of wait,

23 Or with any stone, wherewith a man may die, seeing him not, and cast it upon him, that he die, and was not his enemy, neither sought his harm:

24 Then the congregation shall judge between the slayer and the revenger of blood according to these judgments:

25 And the congregation shall deliver the slayer out of the hand of the revenger of blood, and the congregation shall restore him to the city of his refuge, whither he was fled: and he shall abide in it unto the death of the high priest, which was anointed with the holy oil.

26 But if the slayer shall at any time come without the border of the city of his refuge, whither he was fled;

stone in the hand, whereby a man may die, and he died, he is a manslayer: the manslayer shall surely be put to death. Or if he smote him with a weapon of wood in the hand, whereby a man may die, and he died, he is a manslayer: the manslayer shall surely be put to death. The avenger of blood shall himself put the manslayer to death: when he meeteth him, he shall put him to death. And if he thrust him of hatred, or hurled at him, lying in wait, so that he died; or in enmity smote him with his hand, that he died: he that smote him shall surely be put to death; he is a manslayer: the avenger of blood shall put the manslayer to death, when he meeteth him. But if he thrust him suddenly without enmity, or hurled upon him any thing without lying in wait, or with any stone, whereby a man may die, seeing him not, and cast it upon him, so that he died, and he was not his enemy, neither sought his harm: then the congregation shall judge between the smiter and the avenger of blood according to these judgments: and the congregation shall deliver the manslayer out of the hand of the avenger of blood, and the congregation shall restore him to his city of refuge, whither he was fled: and he shall dwell therein until the death of the high priest, which was anointed with the holy oil. But if the manslayer shall at any time go beyond the border of his city of refuge, whither

(ver. 18), there is a strong presumption that the perpetrator of it deliberately possessed himself of the weapon for the purpose, and that he is therefore a murderer. Again, if he took steps to come upon his victim unawares (ver. 20), or gave signs of having done the act in hatred (ver. 20, 21), even though he had no weapon in his hand, these signs of premeditation and evil motive must be taken as proving him a murderer. As such he is simply at the mercy of the avenger of blood, who is to act as his executioner wherever he may meet him (ver. 19). In the statement of the law in Deuteronomy the rules of evidence are not so fully given, but the judgment of intention is made to turn on the presence or absence of hatred, and the provision is made that even if the murderer seeks the protection of the city of refuge, he shall be brought forth by the elders of that city and delivered over to the avenger (Deut. 19 : 11, 12).

22-28. We come now to the cases of manslaughter which furnish the occasion for the establishment of cities of refuge. These are cases where the absence of any intention to do the slain person any harm may presumably be established. Not a complete list of the forms which the act that is innocent of evil intent may assume, but only instances or examples of unintentional homicide, are given. They are such cases as a suddenly provoked assault which has a more serious result than was intended (ver. 22), or an unpremeditated hurling of a heavy object, or the letting fall of a stone on a person without seeing him (ver. 23), and the Deuteronomist instances, perhaps from experience of an actual case, the felling of wood with a companion, and the accidental causing of his death through the ax head's becoming detached from the helve (Deut. 19 : 5). The legal procedure for the manslayer is simply to flee from the avenger and gain the shelter of the city of refuge if possible before he is overtaken (Deut. 19 : 5), as the avenger incurs no guilt for smiting him mortally "while his heart is hot," even where the deed which has angered him was accidental or unintentional (ibid., 6), since the whole responsibility of determining the intention rests with the congregation. The congregation or court (ver. 24) which is to judge between the smiter and the avenger of blood is evidently some tribunal in the neighborhood where the deed was committed, or at least somewhere outside of the city of refuge, as this court is evidently responsible for "restoring" the exonerated culprit to his city of refuge after the trial (ver. 25). The passage in Joshua specifies the preliminary steps to be taken by the fugitive, which are: to make formal request of the elders of the city for admission (Josh. 20 : 4), and then to remain in the shelter of the city until he can appear before the congregation (ibid., 6). Even after acquittal, however, the culprit is secure only on condition he remains in the city of refuge, at least until the death of the high priest then in office (ver. 25). If the avenger finds him

27 And the revenger of blood find him without the borders of the city of his refuge, and the revenger of blood kill the slayer; he shall not be guilty of blood:

28 Because he should have remained in the city of his refuge until the death of the high priest: but after the death of the high priest the slayer shall return into the land of his possession.

29 So these things shall be for a statute of judgment unto you throughout your generations in all your dwellings.

30 Whoso killeth any person, the murderer shall be put to death by the mouth of witnesses: but one witness shall not testify against any person to cause him to die.

31 Moreover ye shall take no satisfaction for the life of a murderer, which is guilty of death: but he shall surely be put to death.

32 And ye shall take no satisfaction for him that is fled to the city of his refuge, that he should come again to dwell in the land, until the death of the priest.

33 So ye shall not pollute the land wherein ye are: for blood it defileth the land: and the land cannot be cleansed of the blood that is shed therein, but by the blood of him that shed it.

34 Defile not therefore the land which ye shall inhabit, wherein I dwell: for I the Lord dwell among the children of Israel.

27 he fleeth; and the avenger of blood find him without the border of his city of refuge, and the avenger of blood slay the manslayer; he shall

28 not be guilty of blood; because he should have remained in his city of refuge until the death of the high priest: but after the death of the high priest the manslayer shall return into the 29 land of his possession. And these things shall be for a statute of judgement unto you throughout your generations in all your dwellings.

30 Whoso killeth any person, the manslayer shall be slain at the mouth of witnesses: but one witness shall not testify against any person that he

31 die. Moreover ye shall take no ransom for the life of a manslayer, which is guilty of death:

32 but he shall surely be put to death. And ye shall take no ransom for him that is fled to his city of refuge, that he should come again to dwell in the land, until the death of the priest.

33 So ye shall not pollute the land wherein ye are: for blood, it polluteh the land: and no expiation can be made for the land for the blood that is shed therein, but by the blood of him that abroad and kills him, he incurs no guilt (ver. 26, 27), as not even the acquittal of his adversary is thought of as making any moral appeal to him, but only as entitling the slayer to physical protection. On a change of the high-priestly administration the exonerated homicide may return to his own possession in peace (ver. 28). It is not clear that the significance of the high priest's death as a terminating epoch is derived from any expiatory virtue in that death, nor can we without the suspicion of fancifulness find in it a type of the death of Christ. "The duration of his term of office, like that of the reign of a king, represents a completed period of the theocratic life; what happens in that period has its continuance until his retirement, and his successor is the first to introduce changes (cf. Isa. 23 : 15)" (DILLMANN). During the period before the monarchy the high priest's term of office would be the only official era whose termination could serve as an epoch marking the appropriate time for changes and readjustments. The same is true for the whole time of the nation's life after the exile, during which these laws of the Pentateuch were compiled and codified. During the time of the monarchy the reign of an anointed king would perhaps throw the high priest's time of office somewhat into the background as a time-marking epoch.

29-34. The foregoing legislation is pronounced a statute of judgment (cf. 27 : 11) valid for Israel in all ages and places (ver. 29). Then follows the universal rule regarding testimony that a murderer can be sentenced to death only on the testimony of witnesses, i. e., more than one (ver. 30), or, as Deuteronomy states it, at least two or three witnesses (Deut. 17 : 6 ; 19 : 15). This rule was applied not only in cases of murder, but in all capital cases, such as high-handed transgression in contempt of the law (Lev. 10 : 25), or blasphemy; and it will recur to the reader with what painstaking scrupulosity the chief priests delayed the trial of Jesus until two witnesses could be found (Matt. 26 : 60). The converse of the rule came often to be asserted rhetorically as a principle governing all determination of truth, namely, that the testimony of two witnesses could establish any statement of fact (see 2 Cor. 13 : 1 ; John 8 : 17). A still more important principle of Hebrew criminal jurisprudence comes to light in ver. 31, and that is, that the crime of bloodshed does not admit of satisfaction by a fine. In the Hebrew mind there was a very deep-seated horror of blood. The whole system of slain sacrifices was founded on the principle that the blood is the life; and blood shed was thought of as polluting the ground (ver. 33, 34), or crying out to Jehovah for vengeance (Gen. 4 : 10). Even in the case of a person being found slain in the field, the book of Deuteronomy prescribed for the elders of the nearest city a solemn ceremony of purgation, a disclaiming of guilt, and prayer for the averting of the divine judgment (Deut. 21 : 1-9). The enormity of allowing the land to be defiled by unavenged blood is still further enhanced by the consideration that Jehovah tabernacles in the land of Israel (ver. 34), and so renders it holy. No expiation can be made for that land when defiled by outpoured blood except by the blood of him that shed it (ver. 33). It was a principle so fundamental as to be referred by Scripture writers to the times

CHAPTER XXXVI.

1 And the chief fathers of the families of the children of Gilead, the son of Machir, the son of Manasseh, of the families of the sons of Joseph, came near, and spake before Moses, and before the princes, the chief fathers of the children of Israel:

2 And they said, The Lord commanded my lord to give the land for an inheritance by lot to the children of Israel: and my lord was commanded by the Lord to give the inheritance of Zelophehad our brother unto his daughters.

3 And if they be married to any of the sons of the other tribes of the children of Israel, then shall their inheritance be taken from the inheritance of our fathers, and shall be put to the inheritance of the tribe whereunto they are received: so shall it be taken from the lot of our inheritance.

1 AND the heads of the fathers' houses of the family of the children of Gilead, the son of Machir, the son of Manasseh, of the families of the sons of Joseph, came near, and spake before Moses, and before the princes, the heads of the fathers' houses of the children of Israel: and they said, The Lord commanded my lord to give the land for inheritance by lot to the children of Israel: and my lord was commanded by the Lord to give the inheritance of Zelophehad our brother unto his daughters. And if they be married to any of the sons of the other tribes of the children of Israel, then shall their inheritance be taken away from the inheritance of our fathers, and shall be added to the inheritance of the tribe whereunto they shall belong: so shall it be taken away from the lot of our inof Noah, that "whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed" (Gen. 9:6). The permission of satisfaction by a fine would be a denial of this principle, and would give a play to avarice in the administration of justice which might in some cases result in the utter subversion of right. This safeguarding against avarice dictates the prohibition of any money satisfaction or bribe as a substitute for the irksome imprisonment of the manslayer in his city of refuge until the high priest's death (ver. 32). Many would no doubt be willing to give large sums to be permitted to dwell at large, but in Hebrew thought this would be a perversion of justice.

"Mahomet endeavored to mitigate the law of goel, which was often dangerous to innocence; but unfortunately he began at the wrong end. For, instead of enjoining a previous investigation, that an innocent person might not suffer instead of the guilty, he recommended as an act of mercy, pleasing in the sight of God, the acceptance of a pecuniary compensation from the actual murderer, in lieu of revenge. His words are: 'In cases of murder, retaliation is prescribed to the faithful, so that freemen must die for freemen, slave for slave, wife for wife. But when a man's nearest kinsman departs from that right, he has a just claim against the murderer for a moderate compensation in money, the acceptance of which is an alleviation of the crime in the sight of God, and an act of mercy. But if he afterwards oversteps this rule' (i. e., by killing the person to whom he has remitted the murder), 'God will punish him severely. For the security of your lives rests on the right of retaliation'" (MOZLEY).

Among the Hebrews at least, the modern conception of murder as a crime whose punishment is solely a matter of public concern has emerged from the old blind feeling of the enormity of bloodshed largely through the educating influence of the law of the cities of refuge.

Chap. 36. ORDINANCE IN REGARD TO THE MARRIAGE OF HEIRESSSES. 1-4. The suit before Moses is brought by the "heads of fathers," i. e., prominent or distinguished fathers, of the family of Gilead, who was descended from Machir of the tribe of Manasseh (ver. 1). It was to this line that the daughters of Zelophehad belonged (26:33), and these women by special request, their father being no longer alive, had become heiresses in their own right (see 27:1-11). The tribal feeling in this family of Gilead was very strong. These children of Machir were rejoicing in an inheritance already confirmed to them according to their choice and without the intervention of the lot. This Gilead land had come into their power before they made request to have it legally secured to them by Moses, and that by their own independent prowess rather than by the fortunes of the combined tribes, as had the territory given to Reuben and Gad (see 32:34-42, and com.). So strong a clan spirit had divided the tribe of Manasseh into two half-tribes inheriting on opposite sides of the Jordan, and had almost raised the family of Machir to the dignity of a tribe. Ambitious to compact and perpetuate a separate name, it was natural that these people should be very tenacious of their tribal holdings, and should watch the intentions and movements of these landed heiresses of Zelophehad's stock very closely. They came before Moses and the princes of the children of Israel—to which the LXX add "and before Eleazar the priest," as in 27:2—and recounting the decision made with regard to the daughters of Zelophehad (ver. 2; cf. 27:7), pointed out the damage which might be inflicted on their cherished domain in case these heiresses married out of their own tribe (ver. 3). It was feared that these women would be obliged or induced to annex their inheritance to the tribe into which they might marry, although the example of an heiress bringing a husband from 4 And when the jubile of the children of Israel shall be, then shall their inheritance be put unto the inheritance of the tribe whereunto they are received: so shall their inheritance be taken away from the inheritance of the tribe of our fathers.

5 And Moses commanded the children of Israel according to the word of the Lord, saying, The tribe of the sons of Joseph hath said well.

6 This is the thing which the Lord doth command concerning the daughters of Zelophehad, saying, Let them marry to whom they think best; only to the family of the tribe of their father shall they marry.

7 So shall not the inheritance of the children of Israel remove from tribe to tribe: for every one of the children of Israel shall keep himself to the inheritance of the tribe of his fathers.

8 And every daughter, that possesseth an inheritance in any tribe of the children of Israel, shall be wife unto one of the family of the tribe of her father, that the children of Israel may enjoy every man the inheritance of his fathers.

9 Neither shall the inheritance remove from one tribe to another tribe; but every one of the tribes of the children of Israel shall keep himself to his own inheritance.

10 Even as the Lord commanded Moses, so did the daughters of Zelophehad:

4 heritage. And when the jubile of the children of Israel shall be, then shall their inheritance be added unto the inheritance of the tribe whereunto they shall belong: so shall their inheritance be taken away from the inheritance

5 of the tribe of our fathers. And Moses commanded the children of Israel according to the word of the Lord, saying, The tribe of the sons of

6 Joseph speaketh right. This is the thing which the Lord doth command concerning the daughters of Zelophehad, saying, Let them marry to

7 whom they think best; only to the family of the tribe of their father shall they marry. So shall

8 no inheritance of the children of Israel remove from tribe to tribe: for the children of Israel shall cleave every one to the inheritance of the

9 tribe of his fathers. And every daughter, that possesseth an inheritance in any tribe of the children of Israel, shall be wife unto one of the

10 family of the tribe of her father, that the children of Israel may possess every man the inheritance of his fathers. So shall no inheritance remove from one tribe to another tribe; for the tribes of the children of Israel shall cleave every one to his own inheritance. Even as the Lord commanded Moses, so did the daughters another tribe and reckoning the descendants as Manassites was not unknown in this very family (see com. on 27: 1-5). Uncertain of the power of tribal loyalty to withstand the impulses of maidenly affection, these men wanted some decision which would make the passing of allotted estates from tribe to tribe impossible. The permanent alienation of the property from the tribe is not thought of as actually effected until the jubilee (ver. 4), because, although "strictly speaking, the hereditary property would pass at once, when the marriage took place, to the tribe into which an heiress married," yet, "up to the year of jubilee it was always possible that the hereditary property might revert to the tribe of Manasseh, either through the marriage being childless, or through the purchase of the inheritance. But in the year of jubilee all landed property that had been alienated was to return to its original proprietor or his heir (Lev. 25: 13, seq.). In this way the transfer of an inheritance from one tribe to another, which took place in consequence of a marriage, would be established in perpetuity" (KEIL).

5-9. On listening to his suitors' representation—no mention being made in this case, as in 27: 5, of the matter being brought before Jehovah—Moses returned judgment that the argument of the tribe of Joseph's descendants was "so" (ver. 5; cf. 27: 7), or reasonable. Observe how in this matter of tribal inheritance Moses takes no official cognizance of families, but only of tribes. These suitors are the tribe of the sons of Joseph. The decision rendered is that these daughters of Zelophehad may marry whom they choose, but only within their tribe (ver. 6), and that this rule must be followed by all heiresses of whatever tribe (ver. 8), that thus the transfer of hereditary property from tribe to tribe may be prevented, it being a primary consideration that every one shall cleave to the inheritance of the tribe of his fathers (ver. 7, 9). This appears to be a very decided fostering of the isolated clan spirit, and possibly an arrangement which, retained in force too long and too tenaciously, delayed the coalescence of tribal feeling into a unified national spirit. "The arrangement was perhaps inevitable; yet it certainly belonged to a primitive social order. The homogeneity of the people would have been helped and the tribes held more closely together by interchange of land. In every law made at an early stage of a people's development there is involved something unsuitable to after periods. And perhaps one error made by the Israelites was to cling too long and too closely to tribal descent and make too much of genealogy" (R. A. WARSON). All this, however, is consonant with the genius of the Jewish people manifested not only in national life but in a religion whose note is purity, isolation, dread of defilement, rather than diffusion and leavening influence—a religion which could not give way in the nation to the saving and self-diffusing spirit of Christ, but rejected and crucified him in the interest of its own isolation, and so relinquished the task of the world's salvation to others.

10-13. In accordance with the decision of Moses these daughters of Zelophehad married their cousins (ver. 11), and so secured their inheritance to their patriotic and ambitious tribe (ver. 12). The whole concludes with a supplementary title classifying this decision, along with the others that are grouped with it (see 33 : 50 ; 35 : 1), as those prior and important enactments of Mosaic law which were framed in Arboth-moab (ver. 13).

11 For Mahlah, Tirzah, and Hoglah, and Milcah, and Noah, the daughters of Zelophehad, were married unto their father's brothers' sons:
